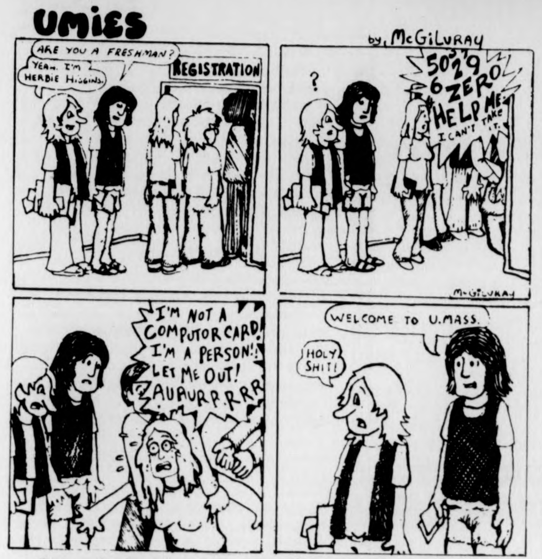
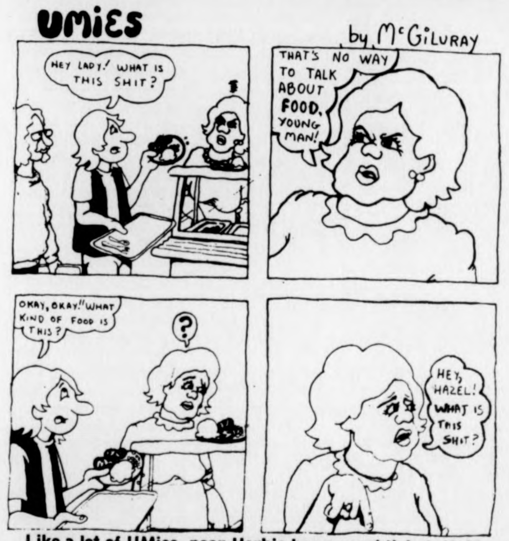
Perhaps our consciousness has been changed enough by the examples of Women's movement, that we are ready to accept a change in the very habits which were once the very embodiment of masculinity and femininity.

UMIES Don McGilvray Does It!



Don, a junior now, still remembers his shell-shocked introduction to UMass. He was nice enough to warn incoming freshmen this year to the way it is in UMie land.



UMIES
by McGILURAY
HEY LADY! WHAT IS THIS SHIT?
THAT'S NO WAY TO TALK ABOUT FOOD, YOUNG MAN!
OKAY, OKAY!! WHAT KIND OF FOOD IS THIS?
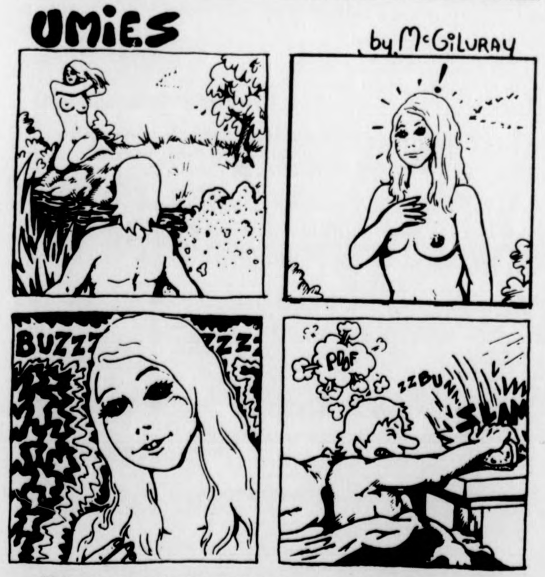
HEY, HAZEL! WHAT IS THIS SHIT?

Like a lot of UMies, poor Herbie has a meal ticket. Unlike most UMies, he can hold his plate sideways and not have the slop slip.



This one caused a howl of sexism and chauvinism charges and a few discreet inquiries about who his model is.

by Patrick Coffey

Collegian cartoonist, Don McGilvray first won notice for his artistic bent at an early age when Sister Sophia complemented his remarkable skill at drawing straight margins, without the aid of a ruler. He was in second grade then. If countless who hold his daily cartoon strip "UMIES" dear to heart are any measure, Donald has more than over-shadowed his auspicious, early art start.

"UMIES" for Don is, "reflecting UMass as I see it." He pictures everyday UMass scenes alternately with a wry humor or a sharp candor. "It's a communication of how I see it here," and added, "I'm not trying to say anything that is ultimately profound, their just cartoons."

Don can most simply be described as a 6' and 175 pound real life version of Herbie, his most frequent cartoon character.

Don disclaims li'l blond Herbie was made in his image, but when pushed, he conceeds a resemblance.

His schooling was strictly Catholic, and included four years at Don Bosco Technical High School, where he studied electronics and "learned absolutely nothing."

He's now a Junior working toward a B.F.A. in cartooning. His curriculum includes making an animated movie and teaching a colloquia in the history and drawing of cartoons.

Cartoons, he says, are an escape route to a fantasy world. Drawing them has always been his gift, "as important to me than sleeping or eating."

"Ideally, I would like to do something with cartoons that no one has done before," said he. "The newspapers have been full of four panel cartoons like 'Mutt and Jeff' started it about 1900. I'm trying different approaches different styles. I certainly haven't hit on anything revolutionary, but I'm working on it."

Unruffled by responses to his cartoons, "sometimes they read things into them that I certainly never put there." Don has a quiet, self-assured optimism about the future he plans in cartooning. "Even though I'm satisfied with my work so far, I know the best is yet to come."

Sealed bids for the signed McGilvray original of your choice, (please specify publication date) are being accepted in the Poor Richard's office until dinner time Thanksgiving Day. Suitable for framing, limited supply only. So, avoid the rush. Buy the collector's item of tomorrow, today.

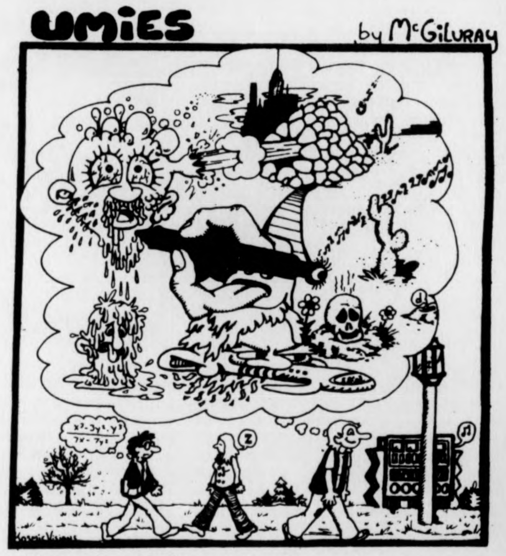
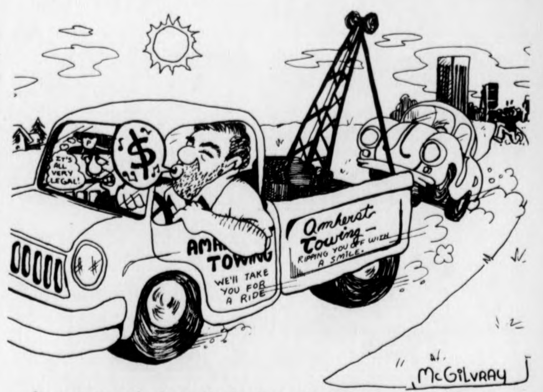
If you see this man do not take action yourself. Notify the proper authorities.



Here we have McGilvray's favorite to date, and it's a fine example of his "Kosmic Visions." We wonder where, oh where, does he find his inspiration?



In a rare act of poetic justice, the Friday morning this cartoon appeared with a lengthy feature in Poor Richard's, Amherst Towing did their thing and hauled away the editor's car.

Of Fall and Central America

Leaves,
Yellow-green banana-shaped,
Toss to a staccato wind.
Loosened from their cordy limbs
By the harassing breeze.
It is only a fall day.

But say the scope were Panama —
Where no wind plucks fingered forms
From their aerie —
But rather a native,
Bronzed in sunlight,
Standing in some Equatorial banana grove,
Hugs the solid waist of a trunk,
And swinging it from side to side
Coaxes pendulous hands of Yellow-green fruit
To fall into his bare brown arms.
From one
He peels a leopard skin,
And tosses it at the base of the tree
Which has not recovered its pose
In the perpetual noon sun.

fiction

Tell Me... of True Love... and of fall...

Tell me.
What do you feel when we get like that in the cold silence that pursues the off-key note are you really sorry

I pound my fists and speed the car and sigh.
muttering barbs with hope of bursting the bubble you look through then I listen again to the silence embracing us do you wait til I'm through until I'm ready to go on believing or as you hold me to your breast do you chalk another for your side

Neither.
Instead I'm shown it's different this time with sobs releasing demons you love me as if I died and have come back this time we went far enough to see the dead and now we thank God for our life.

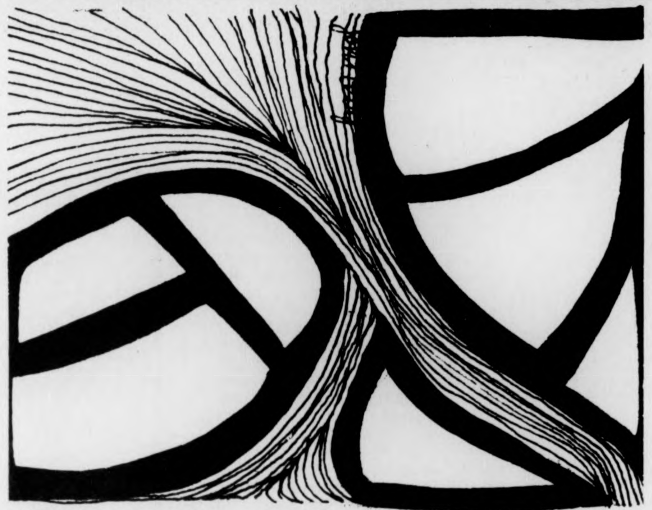
True Love and Friendship at the Drake

He walks with a limp on his right foot, then limps on his left. He stops and peers around, wondering if anyone has noticed the contradiction. No. Everything is in its place. No-one has noticed his deceit. He tries to remember again which foot he has decided to limp on.

Renata Royal appears suddenly on the upstairs porch of the Drake Village Inn. Her ankle-length blue coat blows open (below the waist) revealing a slice of long, bare leg. The coat flaps and the slice of leg strobes in Mitchell's consciousness. Renata Royal holds an umbrella in her left hand and a dozen or so oranges in a green net bag in her right. She tries to open the umbrella, but the wind is very strong and the bag of oranges get in the way and she is also apparently drunk, or stoned, though it is only about four o'clock. Mitchell cannot understand why anyone would drink early in the day (a few beers before five p.m. always give him a crashing nine o'clock headache) or why Renata Royal has always been so cold towards him. She is looking directly at Mitchell now, but apparently does not recognize him at all. Mitchell's brain makes a disagreeable noise, like squealing subway brakes, or what he imagines a young swine shot in the ass would sound like. It is the third time this week that his brain has made such a noise. It worries him. He tries to calm himself by looking very carefully and analytically at Renata Royal's attempts to open the umbrella in the wind with the bag or oranges hanging from her waist and the slice of her wonderful leg flashing under the coat.

"Renata!" he calls out firmly. "Let me help you with that."



"Would you, please?" She smiles at him, shakes her long, black hair from her eyes, which are green, Mitchell knows, though he is really too far away from her to make such an observation. He has always considered it a mystery that Renata's eyes could be green while her hair was black, and he has even asked her once before if she dyed her eyes.

"If you'd just take these oranges a second," Renata calls out. She holds the oranges at arm's length.

"I'd be glad to." Mitchell tries to remember which foot he is limping on. Then he tries to remember the formula he used to remember which foot was to be game for the day. He discovers a pack of matches in the left pocket of his coat and a screwdriver in his right one. One of these objects, he reasons, holds, symbolically, the clue to the mystery he is struggling with.

"Well?" Renata calls again. "What's the matter?"

"Just a minute," Mitchell says. He associates the matches with a burning sensation, pain, cause for a limp, the screwdriver with some need for repairs, and if his foot needed repairs, certainly he would be justified in limping on it. Therefore, either object could signify a limp, and he must penetrate further into his clothes, which he does, discovering in his pockets on the left, a battered lottery ticket, a door key, thirty-seven cents in change, his wallet, and, on the right, a soiled handkerchief, an empty cigarette wrapper, a crumpled computer card (the edges apparently damp from the sweat of his body), and a note reminding himself to buy a dozen eggs and a 200 Watt light bulb. As related to his limp, he can find no meaning in these things.

Renata drops the bag of oranges on the floor of the porch. They land with the sound of a head bumping against a wall. The plastic umbrella, green-trimmed, pops open, Renata picks up her oranges and clambers down the steps. Behind the plastic veil, Renata's face is a pink smear. She walks directly up to Mitchell and holds the umbrella over his head, too, stares into his eyes. At least her face is clearly visible now.

"Mitchell, what's wrong?" she asks. "You look terrified, or something."

"Why have you slept with everybody I know and not with me?" Mitchell bursts out.

"Why?" Renata blinks three or four times. "It's because your brain makes too much noise. I'm sorry, but that really bothers me."

"It bothers me, too," Mitchell says. "But what the hell can I do about it?"

"Limp on your left foot," Renata says.

"My left?" Mitchell feels as if a coat of ice has fallen from his body. He can even breathe. "Thank you, Renata," he says. "Thank you, thank you."

Renata lifts the umbrella and walks away. Mitchell limps on his left foot. His left foot, he keeps reminding himself. If his memory holds, he will get through the day beautifully. Left. Left. Left.

Cosell by Cosell

by Kelley

by Marty Kelley

Munich by way of New York — There's a time in everyone's life when he needs to believe. Whether it be religion; companionship; an ol' adage; an institution; or just plain home, we all need a place to turn to. Many times our faith is based in people: Unfortunately to many Howard Cosell is "people" to turn to. He's an institution in American thought. It's nice to believe in something self-made... Especially if you can lower yourself.

There's no need to place Howard Cosell above a great American novel, but there is need to respect him. And in "Cosell by Cosell" you not only learn about the Jew who changed his name and the living habits of millions of Americans, but you learn of a life style. The microcosm of American society — SPORT. The subculture; the playpen of reality within games that Cosell has pioneered in only a way that is his deserves at least respect, not scholarly attention. "Cosell by Cosell" will not be a classic... Humble Howard will, however. We won't forget him. He made it so we can't...

If you can brave the bookjacket, you can weather the book. 390 pages is more "Howard" than you'll ever get on a Monday night from Atlanta, St. Louis, or Philadelphia. But anyone who's paraphrased as "Arrogant, pompous, obnoxious, vain, cruel, verbose, a show-off" and admittedly says "I am all of these" deserves to be heard. Especially in light of what the man has been through. And just then after this diet of sport personality with "Cosell by Cosell", you just may believe.

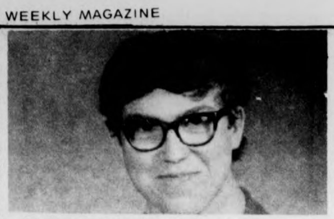
If you've doubted him in the past, swallow this (with at least some degree of pride). When the world was stunned with the inhumane slaughter of the two Israelis athletes, the 20th Olympiad scarred for all historians to speak of, the man in which an international audience turned to was none other than Howard Cosell. In the wee hours of the morning his phone would not be silenced. All over the world people called "Cosell" to find the story. The man is an institution. He's something to believe in. He did not sleep that tragic night in Munich.

The world of sport is not a statistic. It took a Cosell to point that out. And unlike Daniel Boone, Cosell suffered much from his pioneering. He walked into the darkened sea of the controversial: His reviews there are endless. But in another sense, a much warmer sense, a much more human sense, a much more personal sense, his world of sport is people: Their stories, tragedies, triumphs, and concerns, replace the so-called stats over ABC's Information radio's "Speaking of Sports." It's a more personal world of sport that Howard has created. A sport with real actors.

His principal stagehands are Lombardi, Robinson, Toomey, and of course Ali. He felt close to these men; lived with them as each ascended a level of fame in sport that Cosell would be the shadow of. But with Cassius Marcellus Clay, a name carved from the bonds of slavery, he was much more than a shadow. He went inside his soul. He made Muhammed Ali. He'll stand by that statement as firmly today as he did in 1965 when he stood by the man who shook the nation with his Muslim Minister line "I won't go He didn't go. Neither did Cosell as the "Nigger loving Jew" was threatened coast to coast.

Cosell before he was idolized by Kelley.

"In the book you'll find a similar parallel between the man who was robbed of 3½ years of his fight skills by the Federal Court and a man who sprinted after a broken Jim Ryan for an Olympic interview... They both were ahead of their time.



Kelley before he idolized Cosell.

Cosell is the master experimenter. His role in Monday night football behind the genius of Roone Arledge is a tribute to this technique of finesse and courage that has made this man more popular than the President, nearly as controversial, but not as underhanded. But Howard didn't reach fame quietly and with the ease of an Erich Segal who runs the Boston Marathon with a seven pound power pack on his back at Howard's request (last line of the book — "Have you ever tried to say no to Howard Cosell"). The man has suffered much... much too much.

Yes, indeed Monday night football forced Carol Burnett to move to a different night; the Elks Club to change their meeting night; restaurants to close early; the whole American economy to shake; and at the very best have the American Boradcasting Company sellout every possible spot for $65,000 a minute (and a year later up that count to 85 grand) for an add with "Howard". But such success that found Danderoo Meredith with an emmy after 9 months and the entire scope of sportscasting, with a new repertoire and style, wasn't easy to establish. It was a year of that, first year of that Monday night love affair, was a year of emotional, physical, and mental agony for the former lawyer that had to be endured. It was. Now he's an institution.

Cosell as an institution has established himself to the American public. He sold himself before he sold his product because inversely by selling more of "himself" he's sold more of his product than he ever thought he could at the outset. It's a simple philosophy. It's mine. I don't want to be pompous and say it's manifested in this book. But it is. Cosell is a better salesman than God. And in certain parts of the world, infinitely more popular. And he's Jewish...

Reading Cosell by Cosell is like taking the Eurorail through Europe. Instead of passing through nostalgic countryside, you pass through the life of Jackie Robinson the myth behind Sonny Liston; the tragedy of Munich; that precarious night in a Philadelphia broadcast booth; the mental torment of Roger Maris; Mara's insane moving of the Giants to the Jersey plains; the Ali blacklash; that memorable piece of film called "Run To Daylight" ("Run to Daylight may still be the most highly regarded sports documentary ever done"), and the countless times that Cosell was merely Cosell. Those times are precious.

Cosell will admit now that he kind of wishes he was in news. That's if he had it to do all over again. He might want to be a United States Senator; I wouldn't argue with him. But the sports business has afforded much more luxury not only financial but emotional. His story is people: Not events, Not statistic! "I've learned that age-old lesson — people are what matter — and without question, in my mind, there are many great people in sports. The events are transitory; they come and go. And fame is indeed fleeting." Howard Cosell is not fleeting. He does indeed matter. You know he exists. He doesn't let you forget.

Cosell is full of theories and philosophies such as the one I quoted on Tuesday. He feels sport is a pleasant diversion, but is nothing to have an orgasm over. Life doesn't end at Yankee Stadium. If it does, those you absently let in, are indeed in trouble. And when Bobby Kennedy was maliciously slain Cosell the morning after would not and could not, "Speak of Sport." Sport is human drama, it's emotional drama, it's everyday life.

We need a Howard Cosell. We need a fresh diversion from the hum-drum world of sameness that many plagued, hard-hat Americans live within. At first we want to treat him like John Waters' Pink Flamingos, an insult to our intelligence, a negligent, bullshit artist, pest. We need that loud mouth Jew more than he needs us. We need someone to throw a punch at us, fire a slur at a national hero that we're weak enough to exonerate. Cosell is a good doctor. He tells of what ails us, but the prescription is left up to us. Not Howard Cosell. He cares not what we think, But he defies us. He insults to entertain. It's a theatre so lacking in a sick society... so lacking.

The rude face meets the rude mouth.

Cosell is on a wave out at sea. He's that flagship with no end in sight. We won't catch him; We can't fault him; We can't change him; We can't belittle him; Not now, because we tried. He escaped and conquered us; he's made fools of us all. We threatened his life, kicked him off ABC-TV for five years, flooded his desk with hate mail and malicious columns, but it didn't break him. He only got stronger. You see (and you will read) that Howard Cosell has seen a lot, and been through much. He's been through Munich; lied on a slope just yards away from Israelis hostages; he's fought with Ali; defied Liston; cried for Jackie Robinson; and screamed for Bill Toomey in the wind; rain, and impersonal altitude of Mexico City. Yes indeed Howard Cosell has learned from men like Robinson, Ali, and Lombardi and Curt Flood. For these men and their stories in Cosell by Cosell will go down in history.

So will Howard Cosell. He's an institution. Something to believe in...

Big Doin's In The Gym

By UMan Gomes & Ken Blanchard

IN CONCERT:
Keith Jarrett, Gato Barbieri, Sam Rivers
11 November 1973

Keith Jarrett opened last Sunday's concert with a 42-minute piano solo, feeling his way through melodic embelishments of a simple opening theme. Constantly in motion, and dripping with perspiration, Jarrett managed to sustain a phenomenal flow of ideas throughout his musical journey. And with ideas like that, his "brain-batteries" must have been charged at Con Edison! After the solo, a mesmerized audience rose as one to deliver a well-earned ovation.

Gato Barbieri and his men took stage next, bringing with them their interpretations of the music of Argentina. The band's unique sounds caught on in a flash with the crowd, and a number of people felt compelled by the Latin rhythms to respond in an orgy of dance. (It had to be seen to be believed — Gato was in their blood). Gato's grating tenor sax style takes getting used to, but once you get into the feel of it, you want more.

Part of the uniqueness of Gato's eight piece group is due to the inclusion of a harp player (that's harp, not harmonica) and an older guy that sat to the far right of the stage playing a variety of bizarre musical instruments (including even a bird whistle).

Gato Barbieri seemed to be the man everybody wanted to hear (probably because of his fame for the Last Tango in Paris score), but the best was yet to come, for climaxing the evening of jazz the best was the Sam Rivers Trio, featuring Cecil McBee on bass and Larry Altschul on drums.

Sam Rivers? Let's just say he blew the top off Amherst.

The estimable Mr. Rivers, in case you're wondering who he is, has been making music for a long time. He's played with Cecil Taylor, and worked on dates with Tony Williams and George Russell, among others,). And, he's one of the most versatile and unique saxophone virtuosos around.

His bass player, Cecil McBee, has a truly monstrous technical ability and an inventive touch. Drummer Barry Altschul, is a startling, energetic and creative percussionist (former Chick Corea-Anthony Braxton lad).

Question: "Why did ABC - Impulse sign you?"

Answer: "I have this long list of credentials . . ."

True enough — but they are well-earned, as was demonstrated when Rivers, Altschul and McBee took the stage. They set to work almost instantaneously, Altschul a bundle of kinetic energy, McBee making the bass sing, and Rivers twisting notes inside out on the Soprano sax, making the disjunct flow of notes wail through the audience — by now awesturck with the massive power of Rivers' talent.

Rivers moves onto flute, singing along with the pure round tone he evokes from it. Rivers sits down to take the helm at piano, playing chords that would make most keyboardists blush with envy. He moves onto tenor, and shrieks the walls down. Altschul moves in jumping rhythms and layers of sound across the drums. McBee wields the bass with consummate skill and dexterity — a master. I am trying to catch my breath.

Any plans for the future? He tells us (the reporters) that he'd like to bring his 35-piece orchestra up here sometime Imagine the energy that would result from that experience! I can only hope he can do it. There is no question about it, ladies and gentlemen — SAM RIVERS IS A GIANT. Truly awesome. Pick up on him — FAST!

JONATHAN LIVINGSTON SEAGULL (Original Soundtrack) — NEIL DIAMOND
(COLUMBIA KS 32550) Time: 42:21

If you've been having troubles going to sleep lately, I have an instant cure. It is guaranteed to bore you into a coma and get rid of any unwanted company in your room. Neil Diamond's original musical narrative for the movie Jonathan Livingston Seagull has been released. I can promise that once you put this record on, you'll be asleep before the forth band of "Be." "Dear Father" is only on here three times, with both "Skybird" and "Lonely Looking Sky" only getting on twice. This may add to the continuity of the movie, but it sure doesn't make it as an album.

The album has its redeeming qualities, though. Lee Heldridge did a good job in orchestrating the music — not great, simply good. The lyrics to "Be" are beautifully poetic. "Skybird" is truly worth listening to at least once. It has a different tempo than the rest of the album and the lyrics aren't too bad. Great violin, piano and harpsichord parts appear now and then, and in the "Prologue" and the part called "The Odyssey" there is some enchanting French horn.

Still, these good aspects can not outweigh the boring characteristics of the album as a whole. I was amazed that the album didn't stick to my hands as I took it off the turntable, it was so sickeningly sweet.

MOTT — MOTT THE HOOPLE
MOTT

Side one of Mott is excellent. "All the Way from Memphis" has been released as a single and has the clout to win the band the following it deserves. "Whizz Kidd" is the first of a few songs that use various studio devices to perk the song up and make it memorable. "Hymn for the Dudes" is an affirmative musical ode that shows the bands new-found confidence to be their strongest musical and lyrical asset.

"Honaloochie Boogie" and "Violence" are both great. The former is a rockin' and reelin' tribute to music, while the latter, undeniably subversive in nature, glorifies the street fight into something viable and conclusive.

Side two, unfortunately, is not as even or uniformly entertaining as its frontside, but with the significantly titled "Ballad of Mott (26th March 1972 Zurich)" we get an authentic picture of a group on the verge of demise.

Get Mott and find out what the present English rock scene is all about. You may not agree with everything they say, and you may find them a sordid bunch of rascals to look at, but the music will get you off your seat.

SOFT MACHINE

SIX—SOFT MACHINE (Columbia)

The sixth (obviously) in a series of albums released by some of the finest musicians out of England, under the rule of super-organist Mike Ratledge. Mr. Ratledge has probably gone the farthest of most organists as far as the capabilities of the instrument are concerned (he's developed the most unique organ tone around, rivalling John McLaughlin's tone on guitar and Ornette Coleman's on saxophone for originality and human voice quality on the instrument). The group also consists of Karl Jenkins (replacing Elton Dean on soprano sax and electric piano), and John Marshall (replacing Robert Wyatt who's now in Matching Mole) on drums, and while they aren't quite as good as the old Machine line-up, they do fine. Machine veteran-composer-bass player Hugh Hopper (really one of the finest composers around — listen to "Facelift" on Soft Machine Third) is excellent on the bass. Despite the creative impulses of Ratledge and Hopper, the band seems to be falling into a bit of a rut, but this album is still some of the most awe-inspiring stuff I've heard outside of my favorites (Cecil Taylor, etc.). A warning, though: this isn't easy listening stuff. Matter of fact, Ratledge is like an ice cube as far as emotions go. But what happens if you accept the idea of cold emotions being as important as warm emotions — or that cold emotions are just another state? Ratledge plays with about as much pure unadulterated energy as McLaughlin does — he's just working through a different medium — and all mediums in music have to be taken into consideration. One "live" disc, which shows what they can do in person, and one studio. Both lovely. A

—Uman Gomes

I must admit to being reminded of machines when I listen to this album: Technically almost flawless, capable of performing immensely complex functions, and totally devoid of life or feeling.

The group is somewhat undermanned on this album due to shifts in personnel and the four present members, only one of whom is left from the original band, have produced a very academic kind of jazz: Composition and musicianship bordering on virtuosity, but with about as much heart as a nuclear equation. SENATOR SAM AT HOME
(Columbia KC32756)
Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr.

Easily the best album by a United States Senator I've heard all week. The liner notes say, "The Conscience of the Nation, Sen. Sam. J. Ervin, Jr., would probably rather be known as the husband of Margaret Bruce Bell (whom he married 49 years ago) and as a father, grandfather and a great friend to all who know him", but I guess the folks at Columbia figured that wouldn't exactly be a sales-booster and was too long to be put on the album cover anyway.

This collection of Senator Sam's favorite anecdotes, poems, and songs (and believe me, you haven't lived until you've heard Senator Sam grumble his way through 'Bridge Over Troubled Waters') will undoubtedly be in great demand during the coming season — to carve the turkey on, for example. I wonder if the trend started by Senator Dirksen so long ago is finally beginning to pick up . . . Hey! That's why Mr. Nixon was so reluctant to give up the Watergate tapes: I'll betcha he was going to put them out as a three-record set for Christmas. Notice how tastefully I avoided punning about the Congressional Record.

— Lincoln Wept

THE ADVENTURES OF PANAMA RED
NEW RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE
(COLUMBIA KC 32450)

There are only two excuses for buying this album: (1) you're a New Riders addict or (2) you like music only to stomp your feet to it. If you really want to hear what the New Riders of the Purple Sage can do, buy one of their previous albums.

The eleven mediocre cuts comprising The Adventures of Panama Red make the album an exercise in musical and lyrical cliches. Even the titles of some of these tunes give you an idea of what to expect: "One Too Many Stories", "Lonesome L.A. Cowboy", "You Should Have Seen Me Runnin'", "Teardrops in My Eyes". If you've ever heard a country band, you've heard it all before.

Even Buddy Cage, the pedal steel player who made the New Riders' Powerglide album such a joy, fails to breathe life (if you've heard the album, this one more cliche won't hurt) into the group, as he never seems to rise above mediocrity himself.

Neither does the addition of the memphis Horns to several songs make any difference — it only makes the New Riders sound like a typical country-rock and roll band with horns.

Surely you can do better things with your money than buy this album.

— Ken Blanchard

BACK DOOR
8TH STREET NITES
(WARNER BROS. BS 2753)

These lads from Britain have been called a cross between Ornette Coleman and Robert Johnson (you remember Robert Johnson, don't you? One of Eric 'God' Clapton's fave raves, wasn't he? Yeah...), even though it isn't true. Even though they (or bass player Hodgkinson all by himself) do a Robert Johnson song on this album.

What Back Door does essentially is adapt old blues compositions to a trio format of Ron Aspery on alto or soprano saxophone or flute or electric piano; Colin Hodgkinson on electric bass, and Tony Hicks on tasty percussion. They have claim to being fine composers and instrumentalists, and, although they're just British lads, they provide a good feel for the music they play. New forms out of old forms and the like. They have a really fine command of the trio form, mostly due to the fact that bass player Hodgkinson isn't afraid to utilize the bass as a chord device. This one was produced by ex-Mountain-Cream-studio person Felix Pappalardi, and makes out just fine, thank you. Excellent stuff. Rating (not really necessary, but...) A minus. Good for clearing up congestion.

"We Used To Do This For A Living"

by David Sokol and Mike Kostek

In Concert:
Frank Zappa & The Mothers Of Invention
Orpheum Theater, Boston
7 November 1973

Just The Facts, Man

The Players:

Frank Zappa: guitar, vocals, a bit of percussion and wrote and directed the evening.

Napoleon ———: we didn't get his last name, but he sang lead vocals, played sax and flute and exuded a new feel in his almost funky presence.

Tom Fowler: bass

Bob Fowler: trombone, vocals, slopped-out dancing.

Ralph Humphrey: neat appearance & drumset #1.

Ruth Underwood: marimba, vibes, various percussion and general good nature.

Chester Thompson: drumset #2.

George Duke: controlled the little corner of keyboards, synthesizers etc. and did indeed sing a bit.

The Music (with words from Frank)

"Pigmeat Twilight" — "a song about drug abuses, a subject which I'm sure most of you know most of all there is to know".

"Idiot Bastard Son" — "he (Nixon) was on TV tonight. You could even see the drool on his upper lip."

"Cheapness" — "about rubber foam caves, plastic deserts and paper mache mountains in horror films".

"Village Of The Sun" — "a song about turkey farmers".

"Exetrifical Forts"? — "about a truck that turns sporting equipment into musical instruments".

"Don't You Ever Wash That Thing?" — "about keeping a clean ween... 'don't you ever wash that thing? Please wash it, just rinse it one time...' "

(another title we didn't catch) — "from the old school of flying saucers. Those reported 40,000 years ago on the plains of Nazca in Peru and all those funny lines on the ground that might be landing fields".

"Penguin In Bondage" — For perverts only. Straights will get off, but not as much".

"Tamerchine Dowie" (spelling guess is ours), "Dog Breath Variations", "Uncle Meat", "Redunzle", "Montana", "Dupree's Paradise", "Cosmic Debris" — "About gurus and why they're crappy", "San Clemente Magnetic Deviations (Dickie's Such An Asshole)" — "and he deserves every one of us", and a final long instrumental that quoted such famous phrases as "Son Of Mr. Green Genes", "King Kong" and "Chunga's Revenge".

The Perception:

There was the unmistakable feeling that we had all been transported back a few years in the time continuum. During the late sixties, the Fillmores and even the Boston Tea Party housed a cultural togetherness and consciousness which has since withered and died in the face of more recent musical and general apathy. Perhaps the counter-culture was felt strongest during the musical events which, among other things provided the opportunity for at least a self-fulfilling show of long-hair unity. Rarely did a concert pass without some mention on somebody's part of our general resistance to the blatant warlike atmosphere, created and perpetrated by our misled corporate counterparts. Back then, bands like the Jefferson Airplane, the Grateful Dead, and the Mothers of Invention represented our resistance toward a society with which many found it impossible to cope. The subversiveness which then extended beyond drugs, sex, and light shows and into politics and revolution united the Fillmore in a manner which today is only barely imaginable.

It is the genius of Frank Zappa which brought back those times, as he created the images, resulting in an evening of deja-vus at Boston's Orpheum theater. This time, LBJ and Vietnam weren't the targets, Nixon and plastic America were. RMN's Energy Crisis speech of earlier that evening was only the latest in the series of Presidential blunders which Zappa chose to commemorate during the evening's finale, "The San Clemente Magnetic Deviation", in which audience participation was encouraged during the choral line "Dicky's such an asshole, sincerely Dick we mean it,weeeooooo."

At one point, Zappa turned to the band reminding them that "We used to do this for a living", lest we forget their anti-business business. His constant rapport with his audience was quite in opposition to that during his Boston concert last fall where he and the audience took turns turning each other off. But here, Zappa conducted his first audience demography, asking members of the crowd to applaud when various vital statistics which he mentioned (male, female, stoned, gay) pertained. Among other things it was determined that the make up of the audience was 30% "college oriented", 10% "high school oriented", and 60% "out of school and working for a living". "Hey", Zappa exclaimed, "we're 'The working man's band' ". Later, following Unity's (the light man's) light solo, the audience was asked to clap, shout, and feign pucking as the rotating lights shone on them. Yes, the Boston Rotary Barf Routine.

The show consisted primarily of new, or at least unrecorded material, an indication of Zappa's incredible capacity to compose and perform a great variety of musical pieces. (Recall the 45 minute versions of "Billy The Mountain" which never made a record.) Only "Montana" was from their latest record, while the remainder of the concert consisted of six medleys, each lyrically and musically complex and astoundingly tight. "Pigmy Twilight" coupled with "Idiot Bastard Son" opened the show, the first, a drug abuse song and the latter, one of establishment disgust. Zappa prefaced the piece by calling attention to the obvious drool on the idiot bastard son's lips as he addressed the nation that very night. An Our Gang type tribute to Nixon's partial mortality.

The concert was a catharsis, a cleansing of our collective mind. Only once did the hypnotic effect of the performance get interrupted, and that, during the collapse of the P.A. columns into the front rows, even this afforded those in the elite, upper-class seats of the mezzanine a chance to see and hear better.

SPECTRUM — Billy Cobham
(Atlantic SD 7268)

Billy Cobham, most recently of Mahavishnu Orchestra fame, and long known for his drumming capabilities, has proven himself a fair-to-middling composer on his first solo release. Nothing spectacular, mind you, but certainly sufficient to showcase his talents and those of his band. Among the band members is Mahavishnu keyboardist Jan Hammer, who carries most of the weight of the compositions by means of various overdubs, with some assistance from guitarist Tommy Bolin, a name I seem to be hearing a lot lately. Lee Sklar (is he with The Section?) plays bass, and there are a couple of guests who play flute, flugel-horn and saxes on two of the cuts.

The style of the album is of course somewhat reminiscent of the Mahavishnu Orchestra, but a lot more rock and soul oriented, and not nearly so intense — perhaps a little more accessible to the average listener. A good but not great album. C+

THE MAGIC'S IN THE MUSIC
KEN TOBIAS (MGM)

Ken Tobias' The Magic's In The Music unfortunately falls short of having magic in the music. It is however full of good stuff. It only lacks the one or two songs that make an album. "My Songs Are Sleeping" is the closest anything comes to being outstanding, but even this is just a pleasant song to listen to. The best thing that can be said about the album is that it can't be described in terms of someone else. Ken Tobias doesn't sound like Loggins and Messina, Grateful Dead, or anyone else. Ken Tobias is some good instrumental work, good harmony, and good time music. In short, The Magic's In The Music is just one song away from being an excellent album. Talk the person next door into buying a copy so you can borrow it.

In Concert:
Real Tears
The Hatch
Nov. 9

Beyond a doubt the best local band I've seen at U. Mass. I'm only sorry that they're still playing dances instead of a concert format where they could really break loose. I'm sure they'll become a very capable jazz band in time, if they're not already; I remember seeing at least three of the band members performing in the jazz workshop in the S.U.B. last week. They're the only band I've seen around here who've even heard of Les McCann, never mind played any of his stuff. I'd really like to hear them someplace where they're not required to play boogie at all times.

Who

it's here and now they are all chained to their stereos
by their headphones
you can see the energy flowing through their minds, bodies, fingers writhing in sheer pleasure once isn't enough so they do it again and again a daily fix
black disc flashing as it turns around, around, around it never stops once it starts because it's here
Who's here

EVERYBODY LIKES SOME KIND OF MUSIC
Billy Preston
A&M (SP-3526)

There is enough variation on this, Billy Preston's seventh album, to please even those who didn't like the first six. As well as producing, he does a complete about face, and either arranges or co-arranges every song with the exception of one.

The longest and strongest on the album is probably, "I'm So Tired," where a synthesizer uniquely acts as a bridge for Preston's voice and the instrumentation. Billy's vocal range stands out in this album. In Dylan's, "It's Alright Ma," he sounds mean and pissed off, then goes to the smooth brand of vocals, a la Nat King Cole, in "How Long Has the Train Been Gone," a jazz-gospel mixture of sorts, backed up by the Church of Divine Guidance Youth Choir.

Billy plays his own bass on this album, replacing Louis Johnson, who played bass on his last album. Billy also adds another key man, Ken Lupper, and all but does away with the formerly strong horn section. Preston's real strength is in the keys, shown in the short, self-explanatory, "Minuet For Me."

Billy Preston has improved considerably since leaving Apple and Producer George Harrison behind. That may have been all he needed.

Live Music:
NRBQ At The Rusty Nail, Nov. 9

Each time I hear NRBQ I like them even more than the last time.

Terry Adams' hands are like magic wands; he seems to just wave them over the clavinet and great sounds appear. The way his face and feet move are just as amazing. It is almost as much fun to watch him as it is to listen and dance to NRBQ. The band includes Al Anderson, formerly of the Wildweeds (remember them?), on guitar and vocals. His vocals can get pretty incredible. Tom "Rock Baby Rock" Staley plays little better than mediocre drums, though Friday night he was more energetic than usual, for some reason. Joseph Spampinato is on bass and vocals, and you would never guess simply by looking at him the energy he can evoke. Donn Adams plays trombone and also gets to play various percussion instruments. 'Chance Wayne' of "Give Chance a Piece" fame does occasional trumpet, but mostly he sits behind the controls boogying in his own special way.

The Rusty Nail was a full house as more and more people become 'BQ followers. The reasons they are packing places like the Nail are that they have so much clean energy and do very danceable numbers like "Shake that Thing", older numbers such as "Ac-cent-tchu-ate the Positive", and mellow ones like "Magnet". They are funny and they are serious, but basically they're a tight group whose main goal is to give you a good time while they themselves are having a good time. They'll probably be around here again, so if you can, go see them. Only you and no one else will lose out if you don't.

He's A Pinball Wizard

by Lori Yeslow

In an average day you might go through the campus center three or four times, past the candle displays, past the Sha Na Na video, and lastly past the rows of pinball machines. And some of you might shake your heads and wonder how anyone could be so addicted as to spend half the day feeding a machine money just to see a few silver balls shoot out and playing with red buttons; a very serious button fetish you might say. But to those of you who have put your first quarter into a pinball machine and have suddenly found yourself at their mercy; you are not alone.

Tony Yantosca is a Wizard. No ifs, ands or buts about it, according to the International Pinball Association, of which he is a member, he is a certified Wizard. There are five ratings recognized by the IPA, they are; Wizard, Tournament Wizard, Grand Wizard, Supreme Wizard, and World Champion Wizard. Tony, a native of East Boston, will earn the rank Tournament Wizard by participating in IPA's World Pinball Championship scheduled for November 23 and 24 in Washington, D.C. By spending many hours at the machines he has reportedly broke a world record on the 2001 machine with a 7,726, which was formerly held by Jim Begin of Bangor, Maine with a 6,469. When this score is finally verified it will not only name Tony Grand Wizard, but it would be sent to Guiness for their Book of World Records.

"A lot of people think it's a joke but it's not. It's a skill; the key is concentration." So it was explained to me that nothing, absolutely nothing can be on your mind while you're playing except that silver ball.

On Saturday, November 23, right in the middle of our Thanksgiving break Tony will be at the World Pinball Championship meeting with all the other flipper freaks, who've come to test their skill, some from as far as England. And although most of us will be home, a little part of us will travel down the eastern coast with this UMass junior on his journey, and we will be hoping with our hearts that he might return a little higher on the prestigious Pinball Wizardry Ladder.

John Updike and Me

by Kathi Coleman

The reason for my being at UMass was revealed last week. I was walking through Bartlett classroom center, the words "John Updike" jumped off the wall at me. He was to read publically at Smith College in Northampton. Immediately a barrage of mental pictures of one of my top ten favorite authors bombarded me. I knew I had to see him.

I arrived at Wright Hall at Smith on Tuesday, November 6, exactly at eight p.m. when the reading was to begin. Students overflowed the hall. I assumed the lecture room was full and people were being turned away.

Investigating further, I descended the stairs and saw a group of older people,of whom John Updike was one, to the left. The group exited to a small hallway through a set of firedoors. I followed.

I had come prepared for the reading with a camera, notebook and a copy of Poorhouse Fair to be autographed. The crowd dispersed and the Man himself asked me, "Where is everyone going? Are they all leaving?" Before I could answer, someone came to inform Updike that the reading was to be postponed for one half hour to find a large enough room to accommodate the crowd. The informant suggested they go for coffee.

Looking back I marvel at my nerve. I joined their party of ten without invitation as they entered the faculty lounge. I rationalized, how many times in one's life can they touch one of their top ten favorite authors.

Meanwhile, I could not figure out how to work my father's ancient German camera indoors. I sought assistance among the Updike followers. They were apparently as unknowledgeable as I was. In desparation I asked Updike for help. He came over and sat directly beside me on the couch.

It seems that I should have been nervous, having just barged in on their intimate circle of literary celebrities and he would have been arrogant and calm. Wrong. He commented on having a severe case of the shakes in anticipation of the reading. I was calm, cool and thrilled.

With a warm hand, he took the camera and advised me on several shots. After we got the shutter speed and light meter synchronized, I discovered the film was not rolling properly. I had put it in wrong. I felt like the typical, bubbling female stereotype I detest. Rather than make a snide comment or expression of impatience, he recited an incident about his trip to Russia when he was given a camera he could not manage. When he got back to the U.S. he discovered that all the photos were over-exposed. Imagine, John Updike empathising with me!

My next move was to request an autograph on the book I had brought, which I was going to give my mother for Christmas. He wrote "Merry Christmas Ann" (that's her name) and drew a Santa Claus captioned "ho ho". He said she would prefer "woolies" for Christmas.

In the presence of my literary god I searched my cluttered mind for some brilliant comment or question. I knew the most recent New Yorker carried one of his stories. With typical journalistic style, I asked him to comment. He looked vague, said he had forgotten which story it was and asked if I would describe it to him. Much to my horror, I had to admit that I had not read it yet. He consoled me by saying, "That's o.k. the publisher didn't like it anyway."

At this point, V.S. Pritchett, writer in residence at Smith and author of The Living Novel, and Upkike entered into a conversation on the trials and tribulations of writing magazine stories.

A messenger informed Updike that the auditorium was ready. Updike made excuses about having an asthma or appendicitus attack and humourously asked if any of us would read for him. He put on his big, black overcoat, held the door open for me (isn't life great?!) and we walked over to the auditorium with the party.

I appreciated the readings more, because I could now appreciate the man. I shared a brief moment with John Updike. He was a real and warm person.

The trend toward pessimism is strong today and here was a refreshing glimpse into optimism furnished by a writer who's favorite novel is Centaur because "it has a fair amount of love in it."

I radiated all the way back to UMass.

Selling Talent

by Michael Kostek II and David Sokol

If talent is really as great a commodity as it was made out to be at the ACU-I-NEC conference, then a lot can be said for those who cover up this ugly fact. The conference, which extended from November 8 through November 11, brought Representatives (delegates) here from some 71 colleges throughout New England and Canada together for various concerts, presentations, and displays in an attempt to literally 'sell talent' of all kinds to the various institutions of higher learning. Our own Campus Center Auditorium was the site of a vast array of exhibits, all attempts to merchandise specific programs of student interest such as musical acts, programs packages (such as one dealing with the Kennedy assassination) and film series.

If you want to make money, you have to sell yourself. As an artist or lecturer appealing to the college audience, you need an agency or promoter to get you across to the 'college talent representatives'. And to do that, you have to appeal to their Basic Interests. Saturday night, after the last showcase in Bowker (true talent shows they were), the Campus Center Auditorium became a grab bag circus of Talent On Display. And was it any surprise that those tables best-attended were those featuring to the Lowest Common Denominator?

His name is Irv Weiner and he calls himself "Mr. Fingers" professionally. He'll write down a number from zero to nine and ask you to name a number in the same range. You do, and he'll show you what he wrote, and it's the same number. Every time. Well, 95 per cent any way. He works with letters too. He also does zippy card tricks that are bewildering. A few press reprint handouts, some gimmicky buttons, fake money and cans of promotion, and his audience is wowed, even your two confirmed skeptics. "How much are you?" asks the snappily dressed black couple.

"During the conference $425, afterwards, $500.", answers Irv, a bit embarrassed. He quickly refers them to the small but prominent sign behind him that conveys the same prices. Irv's not afraid to talk money, but somehow the mention of it dampens the man's magic.

Mr. Fingers is a happy fifty-five year old who says he really doesn't mind 'selling himself' and feels "twenty-five-years younger every time he comes to campus". He said he felt twenty-five years younger just talking to one of your correspondents, and was very glad to get the Old Student Power Handshake when he proffered his hand. It was strangely moving the feeling that Irv was a sorely human spot in a room that should have been brimming with vitality and overpowering in its compilation of human expression, but what did instead overwhelm was the money, money, money drone.

Irv was smiling, but he was drawn and sadly steeled to the fact that the geeks he was selling himself to were just as likely to turn away in the middle of one of his personable raps as not.

Everybody's got to earn a living, and in a society in which a great many talented people get overlooked, it is really quite said that it becomes necessary for talent agencies and specific talent itself to prostitute themselves in order to gain recognition. Equally unfortunate were the attitudes which seemed to prevail on the parts of those delegates who chose to view the whole conference as an elitist gathering for the purpose of partying rather than for the more blatent reasons of becoming familiar with the various talent and agencies which exist. It's not hard to see how fabricated a situation can get when the talent sellers are thinking of only one thing (dollars) and the delegates another (partying).

"This one's kinda stupid. I was just down at one of these conventions in New York, and it was a lot better. In New York, everyone knew what they were there for, and we could really do business. Here it's like one big party. Trouble is, most colleges send down three or four people, which means that usually two of them don't know what the fuck they're doing — they're just here for the party." Speaking is Shaun Burke, manager of Clean Living. He sits with a close friend at the Clean Living table, while a decrepit but portable phonograph grinds away at the two Clean Living albums. A set of headphones is the link for the interested delegate to get into the swaying world of the Livers. But many delegates weren't interested.

Stanley Olchowski, a newly-joined member of the UMass Concert Committee, sees it a different way: "What's wrong with this convention is the parties. UMass has a reputation as a real party school, but so far the parties haven't been much. At U.N.H. last year I heard they had bathtubs full of gin and champagne and shit like that. Really wild."

The two kegs of Falstaff beer that were being glassed out to the conventioneers seemed to go away mighty fast, and with their passing followed a noticeable drop-off in the number of humans circling the floor. This occurrence dominated conversation above all else: "Shit man, I told them that two kegs wouldn't be enough, but they said 'Oh, they'll be plenty . . .' ".

A large guy from Worcester Community College passed by with a friend, moaning and groaning, "See? See? I told you. I told you. We missed out. We missed out. All the beer's gone."

In fact, the most emotion we saw all night stemmed from the acute disappointment at the end of the beer.

While UMass was partying to Fat, Johah and NRBQ, let it be known that in our midst were such musical acts as Batteaux, Mason Williams, and the Persuasions. They all came to play for those fortunate enough to be part of the conference. Our cynicism began to surface only after hearing no enthusiasm or even mention of these performances by those delegates present. Had James Montgomery or Aerosmith been there, the people would have been buzzing, but who are the Persuasions anyway? Only excellent unknown talent which has to be heard and not doled out in packages.

As we were ushered out at 1:30 a.m. so they could "Secure the hall", the Auditorium bore a striking resemblance to a circus after midnight when they were taking down the tents. The glitter was gone, strewn about the floor like broken toys now useless. Here was where 'Art' had offered itself up for money. Here was where we had seen music made base, wisdom sold by the pound, and sex, as always, made cheap.

This isn't to say that there is necessarily a better way of promoting relatively unknown talent than via a kind of plastic show and tell, but there must be. Vermont folksinger Tom Eslick was one of the artists represented with a display featuring a recording of a few of his songs and a series of news clippings discussing his success at various concerts. His music sounded awfully nice and his agent was quick to point out that Tom was not your ordinary folk singer while simultaneously writing down how much his show cost. Nevertheless, he is the kind of artist who deserves recognition (his agent suggested that he may go somewhat commercial to achieve this) and it's a pity that a sales pitch is necessary to preclude such recogntion. There's got to be a better way. MORE???

Black Play at Smith

by Pat Grundy

Funny House of a Negro, a one act play, written by celebrated playwright, Adrienne Kennedy, and directed by Emlee Hilliard played to a sell out crowd last weekened in the arena stage at Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre at Smith College.

Ms. Kennedy's play lends to a definitive and revealing account as to the confusion and torment in the mind of a young, Black woman, Sarah, (played by Yolanda King) who was born of a Black man and a white woman. The obvious conflicts here lie in the fact that Sarah cannot resolve the fact that she is part Black, and therefore hates her father. But there are other conflicts exposed by the playwright in that Sarah truly believes she will be able to overcome her Blackness by surrounding herself with white friends, European furnishings and other Anglo-Saxon qualities. This, however, does not work because looking in the mirror as she does constantly throughout the play, tells another story. Not only does the mirror serve as a reminder of her Negroid features, but Ms. Kennedy uses the technique of multiple characters, through Sarah, to depict the many changes that she was going through because of her being the daughter of a Black man. In the final scene, Sarah resolves her confusion by committing suicide.

The strongest characterization achieved was by Yolanda King through her portrayal of Sarah. She did a fine job of acting but I kept getting the feeling she was holding back the natural powers of a Black woman in her monologues. But then this could have been the intent of the director as the character she played was diluted by birth.

The arena stage seemed quite complimentary to the play in that the actors were able to talk directly to people in the audience as though they were participating in the play.

As a study of role-playing, the drama is perhaps even more pertinent today than in the 60's, when it was written, as there is still evidence in the 70's where some Blacks still find themselves emulating Anglo-Saxon standards. However, I am hoping that in these times, Blacks faced with similar problems will not find it necessary to resolve their conflicts through death (mental or physical) as Sarah did. But seek to find reinforcement through the spiritual forces of our own African ancestry.

India's Greatest

India's greatest theatrical group, the Kerala Kalamandalam Kathakali Company, consisting of 15 actor-dancers, musicians and other artists, will perform the story of Ramayana Friday, Nov. 16, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst under the sponsorship of the University's Fine Arts Council.

Indigenous to Kerala in the extreme southwest of the Indian peninsula, Kathakali dates from the 16th century, although it has its roots in much older forms of theater. Most performances in Kerala are all-night affairs presented in the precincts of temples. Because the actors must be masters of dance, mime and gesture, they undergo a rigorous training from childhood, learning to perform the great Hindu epics.

The Kerala Kalamandalam was organized in 1930 to preserve and encourage the growth of Kathakali. It has become the leading teaching institution for Kathakali and also maintains the finest touring company. It includes the most famous actors, drummers, singers and make-up artists in Kerala.

Tickets for this Third World Cultural Series event are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass-Amherst students with IDs, $3 for others.

Coming Out

by Bruce McKeon

"Coming Out", was first done in N.Y.C. 5 months ago. It is the first play to deal with homosexuality in an honest, and realistic view. There have been many types of avant-garde theatre in the last few years, Guerrilla Theatre, Black theatre, Womens theatre, and now there is Gay theatre. There have been many films with homosexual connotations, "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "Reflections in a Golden Eye", "The Killing of Sister George", "The Childrens Hour" and "Sunday Bloody Sunday", to mention a few.

Then "The Boys in the Band" came along. It was applauded by hetrosexuals and homosexuals alike. Then we began to think about what the movie was saying, what ideas it was perpetrating. We initially became excited about the movie, because it was the first time we had seen the subject of male homosexuality on the legitimate screen. We did not have to go to slime square or the dark alleys of Boston to see a film dealing with homosexuality. In the same vein, I am sure that a great number of lesbians were very happy when The Childrens Hour first appeared on the screen. By no means did it endorse lesbianism, quite the contrary. But it was a film that at least discussed the subject, no matter how vague. As with the Boys in the Band, it is unfortunate that Mort Crowley did not make it clearer that his play and movie was about a certain group of male homosexuals. Instead it appeared that he was making a generalization about an entire mass of people, and their life style. It would be as ludricrous to say that George and Martha from "Who's afraid of Virginia Woolf", represented the majority of the hetrosexual world. There is no reason now why homosexuality cannot be portrayed as what it is — a full-life.

The Play "Coming Out", consists of scenes about homosexual life, oppression and liberation in this country. The play vignettes are drawn from newspaper reports, personal accounts, journals, fiction and poetry. Among the writers and historical figures represented are Walt Whitman, Gertrude Stein, Merle Miller, Kate Millet, Allen Ginsberg, Willa Cather, and Horatio Alger.

Although based on last spring's highly successful production in Boston, much of the play has been rewritten and new material has been added. Director Nicholas Deutsch has restaged the production and the company — with one exception — is a new show.

The Boston-based company recently opened to standing room only crowds at the Charles St. Meeting house. Coming Out! can be seen with the Boston Company Friday and Saturday nights, Nov. 16 & 17, at 9:00 p.m., at the Worcester Dining Commons. Admission is $1.50, at the door.

SOUND IDEAS

Sound Ideas (for those of you who haven't been to one of our sales yet,) is the first and last place to go for stereo equipment . . . . just shop around. See what the competition offers as "hi-fi" equipment. What services, if any, do they offer? Look at their warrantee, and finally at their prices. Then come back to Sound Ideas. Film

Executive Action

by Marian Prokop

When the Warren Report came out in 1964, it was considered the last word regarding the investigation of the assassination of President Kennedy on November 22, 1963. After collecting enormous volumes of exhibits and testimony, it concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone, was JFK's assassin. However a new challenge to this judgment has emerged in a film called Executive Action which is based on solid facts that contradict the Warren Reports's findings. This film strongly suggests that not only was Oswald innocent, but that he was framed by an influential right wing conspiracy which was convinced that Kennedy's foreign and domestic policies were a threat to their own powers.

It was Burt Lancaster who killed Kennedy.

The uniqueness of the film lies in the fact that director David Miller focused on the whole strategy behind the plot which gives the film the tempo of a highly suspenseful crime movie, but its well-documented evidence, including actual film footage and newsreels of Kennedy makes it not only credible, but controversial. Instead of a surprising denouement (since everyone knows how the movie will end), it is Miller's dramatic and technical skill along with a perfectly developed screenplay by Dalton Trumbo (also screenwriter for "Johnny Got His Gun," "Spartacus," "Papillon," and "Hawaii") which keeps the film moving and intense until its inevitable end. The ingenious methods of the wealthy conspirators concerning the planning, execution, and aftermath of the assassination and its combination with historical evidence are so strategically logical, that this interpretation after the facts becomes an emotional thriller with the special twist of possibly being true.

The situation of Lee Harvey Oswald, for example, is given a totally new outlook. He is shown as the patsy for the conspirators: chosen because of his leftist "cover" while working with the F.B.I., which allowed him to infiltrate left wing organizations. By renouncing his American citizenship, he gained the confidence of the Russians and was used as an agent there, while also divulging top secret data so that the Russians would continue to trust him. Because of his "double agent" identity, he was the perfect selection of a traitor who could be incriminated for the murder, and be a scapegoat to satisfy angry citizens as well.

The film emphasizes Oswald's frame-up specifically by showing the incompetency of the investigators who neglected to record his twelve hours of rigorous investigation but would "remember everything they needed to know." This lack of justification runs through the film as the most important evidence against the Warren Report. While the Warren investigation concluded Oswald was guilty, the film stresses his innocence so convincingly that the final judgment as to which is true lies with the spectator.

Despite the dramatic tensions, the documentary form remains throughout so that the fictional characters are somewhat sideswiped in credibility. They are types rather than people, so that all our sympathies go with the real people in the newsreels. We believe the newsreel footages because we know they are real. This makes the acting in the film appear more contrived, though it really isn't bad. Burt Lancaster as the head conspirator, Farrington, is believable enough, playing the role with appropriate authority but bizarre passivity in regard to the seriousness of his actions. Another conspirator, Foster, was played by the late Robert Ryan who conveyed a much more sinister attitude that Farrington, or perhaps it was his horrifying ideas of reducing the world's population to five hundred and fifty million. Other adequately performed roles were by Will Geer as Ferguson, John Anderson as Halliday, and James MacColl as Oswald's Imposter. Again, however, one feels nothing for these characters because we are constantly confronted with real people and we know what is going to happen to them. All our emotions lie with the people in the newsreel: JFK playing golf, Adlai Stevenson being humiliated by a hostile Texas audience, Jackie demurely sitting next to JFK as they begin the drive through Dallas, and Oswald being shot by a fanatical Kennedy supporter, Jack Ruby, who slips through police and FBI agents without credentials or permission.

Besides being a well structured and perfectly precisioned film, it is also very important especially in light of the Watergate investigations. It dramatizes actions on the official level that are not always in the best interests of the American people. It just shows us again, the effects of power in a chosen few and how this exploitation of power manipulates the majority.

The sequel to "Willard" about a boy and his love affair with a rat. Together they conquer Beverly Hills. Camp horror, with a nice title tune. Campus Center Auditorium, Saturday, 11-7, 7, 8:45, and 10:30.

CHARLEY VARRICK

Don. Seigal's latest thriller, with Walter Mattheau. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

ELECTRA GLIDE IN BLUE

The director as self-proclaimed superstar. James William Guercio was the man behind those Foster Grants in all those half-page ads in the New York Times this past summer that announced his directorial debut as if a new Orson Welles was suddenly upon us. That's hardly the case; the film concerns a motorcycle cop in the Southwest who is a victim of sociological circumstances. The picture is something of a mystery, something of a comedy, something of youth message picture, and all a bloody bore. Robert Blake plays the motorcycle cop and the bloom of method acting certainly has wilted. Mr. Guercio should stick with managing Chicago, that commodity is much easier to handle. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

EXECUTIVE ACTION

FELLINI ROMA (1972)

Fellini's chronicle, both real and imagined, past and present of the city he came to at the age of twenty and adopted as his own. Fellini here extends the documentary mode he used with such beauty in "The Clowns". It's a bit overripe for this self-proclaimed valentine; you are continually reminded of sequences from earlier Fellini films which work on much simpler and more effective levels. Fellini's hometown is a cookie jar filled with exaggerations usually reserved for the worst tourist guides. The Roman citizens behave in such a bustle and hysteria that one suspects King Kong is stalking the Pines of Rome. The picture is divided into sections: an introductory autobiograhical record of Fellini's associations with the city, his arrival as a young man and his first night at an outdoor cafe; a huge, rainy traffic jam on the highways which circle the metropolis; a vaudeville house during the War; the construction of an underground rail system which reveals an ancient Patrician home; Rome in the early hours of morning as motorcyclists tear through it like contemporary Huns, etc. The film has many extraordinary moments, such as the long pan of a city slum during a hot summer night and a dreamy, terrifying air-raid, and one extraordinary sequence: a visit to an aging Roman contessa who hosts an Eclessiastical fashion show which sparks with an audacity that the rest of the film half-heartedly suggests. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

FELLINI SATYRICON (1970)

Fellini's interpretation of antiquity. A terrific pagan spectacle which follows the varied adventures of three young Romans in Nero's time. The production design is dazzling: a Roman market built as a cut-away of a skyscraper, a huge, outdoor bath on what seems a cosmic plateau. The film is Fellini's first interpretation of the documentary; he internalizes the mode and expresses it in a surreal fantasy. Fellini appears to compose postcard images in the style of Bosch. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

Based on Edna Ferber's sprawling novel of Texas: a rich landowner marries a beautiful woman who falls in love with an ill-treated adolescent. He is left some land, discovers oil, and becomes rich.

This film has the failings that similar adaptations of best-sellers usually have, but despite its cliched story, it paints a colorful and true picture of life in Texas and the United States during the twenty and thirty years between the Old West, with its great herds of cattle, and the advent of industry, oil, and millionaires.

The landscape plays a role in the drama. James Dean died before the film was released; although perfect in the first part of the film as a problem adolescent, he is out of his depth later as an older, successful man who has become an contemptible drunkard. Herter 227, Tuesday, 11-20, 7 and 9.

"Gee, Toto, I don't think this is Kansas."

GOLDDIGGERS OF 1933

Warner Brother's follow-up to their phenomically successful "42nd Street". Again a backstage story, this time with a much greater emphasis on the poor economic conditions which faced not only chorus girls and millionaires but those of the working class. This is most dramatically portrayed in the film's finale, a stirring piece of social commentary called "Remember My Forgotten Man" which covers the entire historical gamut from World War One to draftees marching happily off to war to veteran riots in the Washington Streets. The film opens with the chorus girls singing "We're In The Money" dressed as giant coins. Ginger Rogers steps out and sings a verse in pig-Latin. Dick Powell plays the rich Bostonian who longs to be a songwriter and produces his own hit show to do so, Ruby Keeler plays his girlfriend, Joan Blondell and Aline MacMahon play her gold-digging roommates. The plot evolves around Powell's older brother who comes to New York to close the show his brother produces. The musical numbers by Harry Dubin and Al Warren are swell, they are staged by that great niave surealist Busby Berkeley. He turns a simple love song into a free association of spectacular effects. Butterfield, Tuesday, 11-20, 10.

GONE ARE THE DAYS (1961)

Ossie Davis's pleasant adaptation of his Broadway comedy "Purlie Victorious". Mahar, Saturday, 11-17, 7:15 and 9:15.

GO WEST YOUNG MAN (1937)

Mae West in one of her films scoured down by the Hays Office. A Manhattan college broadside wrote of West: she was "the very personification of sex in its lowest connotation" polluting "the sacred precincts of homes with shady stories, four obscenity, smutty suggestions and horrible blasphemy." Butterfield, Tuesday, 11-20, 7 and 8:30.

THE HARDER THEY COME

A most attractive, Jamaican based, adventure film which is quickly becoming the cult film of the season. The reggae music is great and Jimmy Cliff is the dynamic lead. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

JEREMY

The first love of two New York teenagers; a high school "Love Story" relationship. Pleasant enough entertainment. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

JOHNNY GUITAR (1956)

Johnny Guitar a reformed gunfighter, defends Vienna a saloon owner, against the Marshall (Bond), a female banker (McCambridge) who hates her and wants her run out of town, and an attempted lynching. The film's unexpected success undoubtedly played a part in the development of the "intellectual" western. "This film has a certain depth, a certain point of view. We were using a completely valueless novel. Phil Yordan and I worked like hell on the script to stress the time factor. I would have liked our ideas on the love-hate relationship to have been expressed more clearly" (Nicholas Ray). Ray now thinks of the film as "baroque, very baroque." With Sterling Hayden, Ernest Borgnine, and Mercedes MacCambridge. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday 11-18, 8.

LITTLE BIG MAN (1970)

The demise of the Western myth fashioned into the exploits of white man brought up by a benevolent Indian tribe in the middle Nineteenth century. The film attempts a Dickenesque portrayal of character and situation: a fine sense of comic exaggeration and tragic constriction is suggested in Arthur Penn's juggling of disparate tempers. It's all a bit disjointed, and, at times, simply offensive; still probably the best American film released its year. Dustin Hoffman is the renegade-hero of this epic which never quite coheses but has enough verve and substance to make its intentions viable. A superb supporting performance by Chief Dan George as Hoffman's surrogate father. Mahar, Friday, 11-16, see ad

M-A-S-H (1970)

Robert Altman's bitter service comedy is a college fraternity boy's good time transferred to the Korean War. Three Army medics turn their grisly duties into a series of hysterically funny vignettes. Altman is audacious enough to let every gag play to an extreme and it keeps the film from becoming either too mild or too brittle. The conclusion of the film brilliantly frames it. With Elliot Gould, Sally Kellerman, and Donald Sutherland. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

George Orwell's harrowing vision of totalitarian control is only partly successful on the screen. This is due partly to the huge, cement block appearance of the design and the too careful-not-to-offend approach of the script. There are some fine moments and good performances from Jan Sterling and Arthur Kennedy. Student Union Ballroom, Tuesday, 11-20, 7:30 and 9:30.

PORTNOY'S COMPLAINT (1972)

Ernest Lehman, who made his mark as a scriptwriter for "West Side Story" and "The Sound Of Music", made his directorial debut with this portentous and offensive comedy adapted from Philip Roth's novel. Richard Benjamic plays Portnoy, the young man who could teach Julia Child a few things about the preparation of liver, and leads you to wonder just why, why Lehman homogenized him so. With Karen Black. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 11-18, 7 and 9:30.

SHANGHAI EXPRESS (1932)

On the express train from Peking to Shanghai are Captain Harvey, Shanghai Lily, with whom Harvey had had an affair five years before, a Chinese girl, Huie Fei on her way to be married, and several other passengers. On the way, the train is stopped by a rebellious Chinese war lord, Henry Chang. Director Joseph Von Sternburg has said that he "took great pleasure in recreating China in Hollywood according to may imagination. Later on (1934) I went there. I took the Shanghai Express and it was quite different. That is why I'm glad I made this film before following my fancy. I'm sort of a poet." Certainly, his portrait of China, despite its visual evocativeness, is a conventional one. The best episode in the film is the opening in Peking station with the crowds and the various passengers preparing for their departure. When the train finally departs, it puffs its way slowly down a street teeming with coolies, shopkeepers, hucksters, and women shoppers and is held up by a cow in the middle of the track. After this the plot becomes melodramatic. Marlene Dietrich's extraordinary clothes were designed by Travis Banton as they had been for Morocco and The Scarlet Express. Hampden Dining Commons, Tuesday, 11-20, 8.

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS (1937)

The Disney Cartoon in black and white. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 11-20, 7, 8:30, 10.

THREE STOOGES

A group of short comedy films. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 11-16, 7 and 9.

THE WAY WE WERE

Barbra Streisand, gawky and unpredictable, Robert Redford, cool and unapproachable, they are opposites wh somehow mismatch for a marriage of political intrigue and romantic incompatibility. A film of high spirits and loose ends, sustained by the irresistable combination of its stars. It spans decades in the marriage of conservative turned-liberal writer and his radical-turned liberal wife. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Drinan Speaks Of Jewish Struggle

By KAREN LYNCH

The audience was small and intent.

The Congressman was punctual.

Shortly after 7:30 last night, Fr. Robert F. Drinan, congressman from Massachusetts, walked down the aisle in Bowker Auditorium where he was to talk on the matter of detente in the Mideast.

He was taller than one imagined from his pictures, and the eyes were less wild.

After an introduction by Larry Cohen of the Western Mass. Struggle for Soviet Jewry, and Rabbi Aryeh Meir of the Hillel Foundation, Rep. Drinan proceeded to talk about the plight of Jewish people in the Mideast and in Russia.

Drinan said that the situation is more awesome than ever before, and that her future is not bright. Friends for Israel are hard to find.

Drinan then listed the countries of the United Nations who take an anti-Israel position: 12 in the Soviet bloc, 18 of the Arab bloc, 41 of the African bloc, and 75 in the non-alined group.

The oil lobby in this country, indeed in the entire world is calling for a tempering of U.S. policy towards Israel, Drinan said, and warning that otherwise it will be a cold winter.

Though Congress is currently considering the Administration's proposed grant of $2.2 billion for Israel, until this time Israel has always bought its military equipment from the U.S., Drinan said.

But the U.S. has given $55 billion in military aid to many other nations of the world, with the exceptance of Israel, he said.

The Arab nations, on the other hand, had received openly from the U.S. $2.7 billion until 1972, plus the billions of dollars worth of equipment from the Soviets in the last decade. Drinan said.

According to Drinan, Israel does not want war, but rather wants Russia deterred from the area.

"The Israelis want to give some land back, because they want a Jewish state, not a mixed state," said Drinan, referring to the land seized by Israel in 1967.

The U.S. course of action now, Drinan said, should not be to boycott the Arab nations, but rather to take a firm stand on its moral committments to protect Israel.

In regard to the Soviet Jews in Russia who are being detained, Drinan referred to the Jackson-Vanik amendment which may be enacted by this Christmas-time.

The amendment, which then would have to be passed by the Senate, would give the Soviet Union favored nation trade status with the U.S.

Hopefully, Drinan said, enactment of this amendment the Soviet Union to slacken its emigration policy in regard to Soviet Jews.

Drinan, former dean of Boston College Law School, is the congressman from Massachusetts' fourth district and was the first congressman to propose a resolution for the impeachment of President Nixon.

Drinan's appearance last night was sponsored by the Western Mass. Struggle for Soviet Jewry and Hillel Foundation.

Various artists performed native Indian dance and offered excellent musical performances before a large audience of youngsters fascinated by the customs of a foreign land.

The Question Is Settled

Collective Bargaining Nixed

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

UMass faculty defeated collective bargaining last Friday by a margin of approximately 200 votes. Of the 1404 ballots cast, there were 718 votes (58%) against unionization, 510 (42%) in favor, 174 challenged and 2 void.

Ninety-six per cent of the 1449 faculty members eligible voted in last week's election. 1336 faculty voted Thursday and Friday. There were 68 absentee ballots cast.

Professor Zina Tillona, special assistant to the Chancellor for faculty relations, attributed the large turnout to the "vigorous" campaign waged by both sides.

President Robert Wood issued a statement Friday saying that he was pleased that the faculty had "expressed confidence in established governance procedures."

Both sides have until Wednesday to protest the election.

Professor Howard Brogan of the English Department, chairman of the executive board of the Massachusetts Society of Professors-American Association of University Professors (MSP-AAUP), the union on the ballot to represent the faculty, said that he noticed "irregularities in the election." According to Brogan, the union had not yet made a decision on whether or not to submit a formal objection.

The 174 challenged votes were not included in the tallying. The bulk of them were cast by a group consisting of department heads, program chairman and librarians IV and V. The union and Administration had previously agreed to have the group's status clarified by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board, who is conducting the election. The union also challenged several votes cast by lecturers.

Of the 1404 votes tallied, 17 were protested. According to an agent for the commission, a protested vote is one that is not challenged, but whose marking is questionable, such as an erasure. These votes were not crucial to the election.

Professor Seymour Shapiro of the Botany Department, a member of the Committee of Concerned Faculty, a group opposed to the union, said that "the CCF is over, but it's not permanently dead."

According to Shapiro, people usually come out and vote when they want to change something. He feels that the campaign brought out those who didn't want to change anything, and whose voice wouldn't have been heard otherwise.

Union members, however, do not see the election as total defeat.

"A force representing 42% of the faculty is very powerful." said Eduardo Robreno, a higher education consultant for The Massachusetts Teachers Association, an affiliate of MSP-AAUP.

Robreno said that he felt that the union conducted a "tremendous educational campaign which accomplished many beneficial things."

The MSP-AAUP will remain active on campus. Arnold Schneider, a staff member of the MTA support.

A twelve month interval between elections is required by law.

"No one's going to go and hide," Schneider said.

A few of the one thousand people who walked for Belchertown are seen here trucking down an Amherst road.

By JERRY LAZAR

About 560 marchers were greeted by Belchertown State School residents Saturday after hiking twenty miles from Northampton for the benefit of the Adolescent Training Unit at the school.

A group of almost 800 left Sheldon Field in Northampton at 8 a.m. on a route which took them along Route 9 to Amherst Common, and down Metacomet and Stebbins Streets.

Approximately 75 percent of the participants in the walk-a-thon completed the twenty-mile stretch, arriving at the school grounds between 10 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

Money collected from the marchers' pledges will be applied to a program of revitalization of structures and programs for the adolescent residents of the school. The amount will be added up early this week.

The announced goal of the campaign was $15,000.

Nine check points were set up along the route, and first aid patrols were on duty. No accidents were reported. A small band of high school-age instrumentalists accompanied the walkers on a flat truck.

The march was sponsored by "The First Step", a charitable organization that helps support the Adolescent Training Unit, which teaches teenage residents at the school to become adjusted to life outside the school.

Among those walking for the fund raising project were several local elected officials, including District Attorney John Callahan and Senator John Olver of Amherst.

The marchers ranged in age from seven to mid-fifties. The first to arrive in Belchertown were two college men who ran the route in two hours. Shortly after, one jogger made it to the school grounds, and then ran back to Amherst.

The last to arrive at 6:30 p.m. were two elderly women who repeatedly turned down offers to ride the remainder of the route, and continued to walk after sunset with a car's headlights guiding their way.

(Staff Photo/John Stewart)

Scott Bickerton a UMass student, ran the whole route in two hours and fifteen minutes. He was sponsored for fifty dollars.

Southwest Reactions Continue

The recent deaths of two young people in Southwest has affected many students. It has also affected Southwest staff members whose jobs involve working with students.

"I don't doubt that it was a shock to all Southwest residents," said Floyd Martin, assistant Southwest Director. "People will say that it didn't affect them, but you can bet that everyone thought about it." An Assistant Area Director, Martin works closely with student centers and organizations. "It has affected my job in that it has made me more sensitive to some of the student's problems, such as the area of endangering behavior," he said.

This area has been an emphasized topic in Southwest this year. "Apparently there are no emotional outlets where people can express their feelings, aside from endangering behavior," stated Vaughn Jeffries, Staff Assistant For Student Affairs. "Living in a high-density area such as Southwest can result in a lot of cooped up frustration."

Martin concurs, stating that programs in various dorms and centers have been trying, even more so lately, to encourage a sense of community within the area.

But it seems that there are some things that "programs" cannot confront, such as death. "People could identify with the death of a young person," said Jeffries. "I feel that it was healthy for people to gather around the body like they did last Tuesday. It's healthy for them to really get in touch with this basic thing. Strangers were talking to each other. People weren't isolated, they were a community. Its unfortunate that it takes something like death to achieve something like that. For once, people weren't running the rat race. They were dealing with a very raw thing. You can bet that people were going through changes that night." "Southwest was a morgue for four hours," added Martin.

What would happen if another death occured in the near future? "It would be traumatic. One more time would be too much. Especially if it was a resident, someone who had friends and was popular," said Jeffries.

"Obviously, we can't have policemen on constant patrol," said Martin. Both Martin and Jeffries agreed that it is now up to Southwest residents to use peer pressure to stop possible endangering behavior. Both also agree that it should be everyone's job to clean up the "zoo image" that has been hung over the Southwest area.

Student Bootlegger Found Guilty

A UMass sophomore was found guilty on charges of unlawful sale of alcohol and fined $500 in District Court Friday.

Gary J. Shuster, 19, of New Bedford, pleaded innocent to the charge when he was arraigned October 31.

Shuster was arrested in his room in Noah Webster dormitory on October 30 by campus police. Police seized seventeen cases of beer which was allegedly to be sold to students.

Shuster indicated he will appeal to superior court.

Olver On B'town Case

Senator John W. Olver, Chairman of the Special Commission on the Belchertown State School and the Monson State Hospital, issued a statement today commending federal judge Joseph Tauro for the consent decree he worked out in a court suit against state officials by parents of children in Belchertown.

Senator Olver agreed with Judge Tauro's comment that we must be in a "constant state of review" with respect to conditions at Belchertown. The Senator pledged the Belchertown Commission to a continuing role as a legislative monitor of conditions at Belchertown and Monson State Hospital.

Hayden Hewes Tells All About UFOs

The Interview

By ROBERTA McCANN

"I have seen two objects. One in 1965 and one this year. I have never seen what you call a flying saucer. I'm still waiting for that one case when its still sitting on the ground. U.F.O.'s do exist. Exactly what they are, where they come from, this is what our organization is all about."

Hayden Hewes, organizer of the International U.F.O. Bureau Inc., is a subdued man who since 1957 has been investigating reported sightings of U.F.O.s.

"We're not trying to prove anything. We're just trying to collect information and disseminate it to the public.", the thirty year old Oklahoman said in an MDC interview Friday afternoon.

Hewes first became interested in U.F.O.s when he was 14. He collected information from newspaper reports and contacted people who reported U.F.O.s.

"To my surprise, I found that there were many people all over the world who were concerned also", Hewes, the author of several articles for U.F.O. related magazines, said.

Speaking softly and directly, Hewes recounted the change in public opinion toward U.F.O. sightings in the past few years. "What was severe ridicule in the 50's and early 60's is changing into a serious interest and concern. The joke about little green men has changed to maybe something is out there. U.F.O.s are always in the back of people's minds but they underplay it."

Hewes noted that a 1966 Gallup Poll projected that about five million Americans had sighted U.F.O.s. He asked the question, "What of the world-how many people have sighted U.F.O.s?"

The International U.F.O. Bureau, Inc., organized in Oklahoma by Hewes, is a non-profit organization which collects information on U.F.O. sightings around the world. If a high concentration of unidentified reports occur in a specific area, the Bureau sends an investigator to the area.

The Bureau compiles the information and attempts to inform the public through appearances by the eleven staff members at colleges, conventions, civic clubs and other organizations.

"I just want to get people to think.", Hewes said, "Through the release of information to the public, we are not trying to prove any one theory."

The U.F.O. Bureau has contacts with about 5,000 people all over the world who clip U.F.O. sightings out of local newspapers. Hewes notes that this is necessary because the news wires rarely carry stories of U.F.O. sightings.

As for the individuals who report U.F.O. sightings, Hewes said, "People are fascinating and sincere. But there are also crackpots. The majority are honest people."

According to Hewes, a U.F.O. is a conglomerate of many things. It is an object a person observes and within his/her educational background, cannot explain it.

"We have found that approximately 80% of U.F.O.s can be identified, so we are dealing with 20%.", Hewes said.

65% of U.F.O. sightings occur at night while 35% occur during the day. There are more sightings reported during the summer and in rural areas. There are about 30 basic shapes reported. The most common is the domed-shape.

Hewes said that the official government investigation of U.F.O. sightings, called Project Bluebook, was discontinued in 1969.

"Since 1969, there has been no official investigation of U.F.O.s by the government. I believe they still do it undercover. The burden of U.F.O. research is on civilian organizations."

When asked about constant government reports repudiating U.F.O. reports, Hewes said, "The government denies the existence of U.F.O.'s because it does not know the full solution."

Explaining the high occurances of U.F.O. sightings near power plants and water reservoirs, Hewes said, "They may be hiding or drawing on the energy source."

Hewes, who wears a Skylab sticker on his label, said he is for the space program 100%. "Astronauts have seen things. This may be the reason for the space program."

Why are U.F.O.'s here?

Hewes said that he has received reports of alien beings who resemble humans. He speculated that they come from an environment like earth's outside of our solar system. Hewes believes that they are superior to our race.

"I think they're here on a peaceful reconnaissance. They are afraid that we are going to bring war to them. They are concerned and have stepped up reconnaissance in recent years due to our space program. It is a feasible thought but it is theory. If we do get one, we will know the facts, one way or another."

The Speech

By ROBERTA MCCANN

"U.F.O.'s exist. Fact. Where they come from, I do not know. Why they are here, I do not know."

So spoke Hayden Hewes, organizer of the International U.F.O. Bureau to a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last Friday night.

For the next hour, the soft-spoken Hewes bombarded his audience with stories, hoaxes, illustrations, and the history of those strange, inexplicable things we call "UFO's".

Some stories--A farm boy was blinded and paralyzed as one UFO took off from earth. After the high-pitched noise of the ship had subsided, the boy's vision and use of his legs returned. The 8-foot circular hole in which the craft landed can still be seen. Since that time, the soil in the hole has become dehydrated, and nothing will grow there. A soil analysis revealed an unknown and unidentifiable white substance.

On October 11, 1973, two men were fishing on a river in Texas when they saw a bluish-white light hovering near them. Soon after, three alien beings floated across the water. One of the men fainted, while the other was suspended at a 45 degree angle. They described the aliens' language as "humming." The man felt that he was being photographed. The two men were questioned and give a lie detector test, which they passed easily.

Hoaxes--Hewes said, "Eighty per cent of all UFO citings can be identified. It's those 20 per cent that can't be explained that I'm concerned with."

One of the most famous hoaxes occurred in 1953 when one man bet another that he could get his name in the paper by shaving a monkey and saying that he had seen a flying saucer and captured an alien. The man won his bet when he received national media coverage. As a result, a mass reaction occurred, as thousands of Americans reported seeing aliens resembling shaved monkeys. His bluff was soon found out.

Illustrations--Hewes brought about 40 slides with him to show the types of saucers and alien beings which have been seen. There are 30 reported shapes of UFO's ranging from the cigar-shape to the traditional saucer-shape. The three most common beings reported were: the creepy critter, which resembled an ape; the man next door, who resembled a human; and the most common, the enlarged head The "enlarged head" alien was most commonly described as 3 1/2 feet tall, with long arms and a stinging weapon.

History--Hewes has been concerned with UFO sightings for the past 25 years. He said that when World War II pilots began sighting crescent-shaped saucers, the government became interested and established the "Project Bluebook" to see if UFO's really existed.

Hewes said, "During the late 1940's through the mid 60's, the U.S. Air Force under the "Project Bluebook" explained away as many sightings of UFO's as they could."

Hewes concluded, "The point is, the general public has been mininformed and the Air Force has been caught misinforming."

UFO's. Fact or fiction? Real or imagined? While Hayden Hewes is a confirmed believer, he is not a missionary seeking believers. He says, "I am not here to convert you to believe. I am here to give you food for thought. Come to your own conclusions and think with an open mind."

And Now The Schools Cut Down

By JEFFREY D. ALDERMAN
Associated Press Writer

The postgame shower in the school locker room may be a little cooler, winter vacations a bit longer and field trips less frequent as the energy crunch comes to campus.

Already facing a money crisis that has forced both secondary and college level schools to cut educational trimmings from their budgets, many schools were trying to save energy costs when President Nixon made his plea for Americans to conserve energy.

The Los Angeles School District is no longer using its buses to take youngsters on field trips. The buses are only used to shuttle students to and from school and athletic contests. No more field trips until the system is sure it has enough fuel.

Other measures taken by the district: lowering thermostats to 60 degrees, no air conditioning until the temperature hits 78 and fewer lights in the classroom.

Similarly, the Parkland, Pa., school board has decided to cut late afternoon school bus runs transporting pupils home from extracurricular activities.

Students at the four Vermont state colleges are getting a bonus: an extended Christmas vacation. It's part of a state effort to conserve fuel. The vacation will be three or four weeks longer and stretch from mid December through January.

The time will be made up in the warmer spring months.

Lengthening vacations is one of the most popular techniques used by schools to conserve energy.

In Colorado, where the winters are even colder than in Vermont, public school officials in Aurora are thinking about shortening school days this winter. They have been told their heating fuel supply will be at least 10 per cent less than last year.

A fuel shortage is already upon the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond. The heating plant has run out of oil and is being operated on two-standby coal-fired boilers. The school's supplier said it used up its November and December heaing oil allotments and was cut off.

As for lowering thermostats, plant director William Wilcox of the University of Texas told a meeting he felt that would make rooms too cold and would "put people in the hospital."

In Denver, a sweaty afternoon on the playing field may be followed by a chilly bout with the shower. Asst. Supt. Joseph Brzeinski said one fuel-saving measure under consideration is reducing the amount of hot water in the locker rooms.

The Comeback

Nixon Offensive Heading South

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

MACON, Ga. (AP) - President Nixon marched his Watergate counter offensive into a Southern stronghold Sunday, collecting cheers and petitions of support as well as boos and shouts for resignation.

Nixon was in Georgia to salute a retired congressman but unofficially it was a part of Nixon's concerted effort to overcome the Watergate scandal.

The journey had the earmarks of a campaign appearance. At the airport, an estimated 15,000 supporters cheered, waved flats and hoisted signs urging the President to"Hang In There."

Nixon responded, "I'm terribly grateful..."

Crowds along the motorcade route into Macon were generally friendly, too. But signs and shouts of opposition grew as Nixon's limousine pulled onto the Mercer University campus.

There, a chorus of boos rang out from a mostly young crowd of several thousand as Nixon stepped towards a chapel for the ceremony honoring retired Democratic Rep. Carl Vinson and the university's Walter F. George Law School.

"Resign," urged several signs. "Impeach the President," said others.

Nixon clearly viewed the appearance as another step in his public battle to overcome the still swirling Watergate scandal.

The first major public step came Saturday night with a nationally televised news conference where the President strongly defended his personal integrity with a declaration: "I'm not a crook."

Nixon appeared before the Associated Press Managing Editors Association.

A crowd estimated by police officials at from 10,000 to more than 20,000 cheered Nixon's arrival at Robbins Air Force Base outside Macon.

After stepping from his plane, Nixon received from local supporters petitions of support bearing more than 37,000 signatures. "I am terribly grateful to you...It's a great job," he said.

Then the President plunged into a round of campaign-style handshaking along the fringes of the crowd. Twice he was stopped with hugs and kisses from pretty girls.

Signs sprinkled through the crowd proclaimed support, some of them "Hang In There," "Nixon is Our Man," and "We Love You, Mr. President."

White House advance men had worked with local Nixon backers in efforts to promote a show of support for the President.

Addressing the crowd, Nixon made no direct reference to Watergate, concentrating instead on his accomplishments in foreign policy.

He said the communications he opened with the Soviet Union helped defuse the Middle East Crisis, saying the two superpowers had decided to talk about their differences rather than fight about them.

Because of better relations with Moscow and Peking, Nixon said, "I believe we can build a peace that lasts...for a generation or more to come."

But he added that America must remain strong -"in spirit, patriotism and love of the greatest civilization in history."

From the air base, Nixon motorcaded to the campus, standing in his open-topped car occasionally to wave at the crowd lining the route.

As his motorcade neared the university campus, a few signs of dissent appeared. One placard held by a young man said, "Let Me Make It Perfectly Clear, Resign." Boos and shouts for resignation were mingled with cheers as Nixon drove onto the campus.

The President was described as buoyed by reaction to his Saturday news conference and with results of his series of private meetings with Congressmen last week.

On the presidential jet en route to Georgia, presidential chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr. said, "There had been tremendous reaction to the news conference." He said, in reference to Nixon's Watergate problems, "We've got to take them on...We can't go on the way we are," with the whole world watching events in the United States.

As Congress Works

By EDMOND LeBRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic leaders say Watergate has grabbed the headlines this year, but Congress has produced significant and far-reaching legislation.

Among important actions are the Alaska pipeline bill enacted into law, House passage of a Social Security benefit increase and override of President Nixon's vote of limits on presidential war powers.

In the coming week, energy bills head the Senate calendar, while the House takes a 10-day recess.

The Senate scheduled a final vote Monday on legislation giving the President power to deal with the energy crisis.

The Senate Rules Committee plans a vote Tuesday on confirming Rep. Gerold R. Ford, R-Mich., to be vice president.

The House Judiciary Committee will continue its hearings on Ford during the House recess. The recess began at the close of business Thursday and ends at noon Nov. 26.

The Democratic whip office issued one of its periodic summaries of legislative actions accomplished and pending, saying:

"Congress...has in less than a year produced a body of legislation that would equal or exceed that of many previous full Congresses."

Emphasizing especially work done in a busy two weeks before the recess, the advisory lists the Alaska pipeline bill, House approval of $1 million for expenses of its Judiciary Committee's impeachment inquiry, House vote to extend the life of the Watergate grand jury, override of President Nixon's veto of limits on presidential war powers, House passage of an 11 percent Social Security benefit increase and of relief measures for financially distressed key railroads.

Setting Dec. 15 as a target date for adjourning this year's session, the whip report held out hope that by then the House will have acted on compromise legislation for home rule in the District of Columbia, congressional budget reform and curbs on presidential impoundment of funds, better regulation of private pension plans and remaining appropriation bills.

Meanwhile, despite congressional views to stay within President Nixon's original $268.7-billion budget total, it now appears the legislators may exceed that target by $5 billion.

The final outcome is uncertain because additional Nixon vetoes may be interposed to hold down the budget overrun.

Latest Gallup Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The latest Gallup Poll reports 80 percent of Americans approve in principle the new law enacted over a presidential veto that limits the President's power to send U.S. troops into action overseas.

The poll was taken Nov. 2-5, before Congress voted Nov. 7 to override President Nixon's veto of a war powers bill. It requires the President to explain any act of war to Congress within 48 hours.

Under the new law, if Congress does not accept the President's reasons, he could continue the fighting for 60 days and have another 30 days to withdraw the troops. However, Congress could order immediate withdrawal by a concurrent resolution.

The Gallup organization said a key factor in the results of the survey was the public's desire to avoid future conflicts similar to the Vietnam war. It said surveys as early as 1966 showed six in 10 Americans felt U.S. troops should not be sent overseas if a Vietnam-like situation arose elsewhere.

Martial Law In Greece

by PHILIP DOPOULOS
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP) - The Greek armed forces were placed on full alert Sunday and marines in battle dress moved into the capital to quell sporadic anti-government demonstrations.

As dusk fell and a martial law curfew went into effect, no disturbances were reported following a day of hit-and-run rioting by thousands of students near the Athens Polytechnic Institute, where the unrest began Friday after a four-day sit-in.

About 50 armored personnel carriers rolled into the city, doubling the number already on riot patrol duty in the main avenues and squares.

An army soucre said the alert was called as a "precautionary measure." He added that "theoretically, the situation had not gotten out of control."

The alert, he said, meant that Greek forces were ordered to be battle-ready.

Some of the roughest police-student skirmishes took place Sunday in front of the mayor's office, where troops used rifle butts to clear the area of bands of youths who taunted them, witnesses said.

Numerous demonstrators were injured and many were arrested. No exact figures were available.

The government said five persons have died and more than 300 have been injured since Friday, when about 15,000 students and workers took to the streets in an attempt to topple the regime of President George Papadopoulos.

The street fighting was triggered by the student sit-in at the institute, which ended early Saturday when police and troops raided the campus and drove out about 3,000 students in bloody skirmishes.

Official statements reported several hundred arrests, but reliable sources reported that the arrests totaled nearly 2,000.

Tanks and troops guarded all squares and public buildings Sunday, ringing the parliament building in Constitution Square where Papadopoulos has his office. At dusk they were replaced by fresh troops armed with submachine guns.

Several times, troops and police fired warning shots into the air to frighten the demonstrators. Only persons with special passes were permitted to walk on the deserted streets between 7 p.m. and 5 a.m.

To emphasize that the army had the situation in hand, the martial law command announced that all hunting rifles would be returned to their owners. Possession of firearms by citizens was restricted when martial law was reinstated by Papadopoulos Saturday.

Chilean Junta Mandate

Farewell Long Hair

By ANTONIO SALGADO
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile, (AP) — "Bye-bye miniskirt, farewell long hair, here comes the junta, sit straight in your chair."

Those are the lyrics to a sad song circulating among teenagers in Santiago schools. It grew from a press edict put out by the Education Ministry of the military junta that seized control of the government in September.

The edict advises teachers that school unifroms are "the prescribed dress for pupils" and the children "should acquire habits and attitudes of austerity, cleanliness and order."

School administrators have translated the order to mean that girls must lower the hemlines of their miniskirts, avoid makeup and discard their popular clog shoes with inch-high soles.

Many boys are visiting barber shops for shearing of their neck-length hair and are giving up their blue jeans with embroidered slogans of love and peace. Instead, they are wearing gray slacks.

The transition has been difficult for many.

"We're going to look like old women of 80 with our skirts down to our knees," said 15-year-old Carmen Gloria Moretie.

Her girl friend, wearing the traditional blue blouse but with a matching miniskirt, asked, "Does this mean we can't even wear rings to class?"

A 6-year-old boy with long locks returned from kindergarten and nervously told his mother, "Mama, if I don't have my hair cut immediately, the teacher said I can't go back to school."

The family said a telephone call to the school confirmed the directive and the youngster went to the local barber shop to join his waiting friends.

Some parents also complained. One father noted that blue jeans cost less and lasted longer than the wool slacks and that the prices of school uniforms nearly tripled this month under the junta's new free market policy.

But the order didn't make everyone unhappy.

Commission Analyzes Start Of The War

Inquiry By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli government announced Sunday a full-scale judicial inquiry into alleged mishandling of the opening stages of the October war against Egypt and Syria.

The decision on a five-man independent commission came as public attacks on the government and military command continued unabated over Israel's initial losses in the war.

The commission will conduct its probe in secrecy, a cabinet spokesman said. But its findings will be published unless ruled militarily sensitive.

A cabinet statement said the probe will take in "the army's deployment for war in general, its preparedeness in the days prior to the Yom Kippur war and its actions until ih held back the enemy."

The statement also said the commission would investigate what intelligence Israel had on Arab war preparations, and added:

"These today are matters of vital public importance which require clarification."

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan has said Israel had no inkling of impending war until Yom Kippur morning Oct. 6, when the fighting broke out against Egypt along the Suez Canal and Syria in the Golan Heights.

The inquiry looked like it might turn into the biggest Israel has undertaken into its own faults since it won independence in 1948. As far as the Israeli public was concerned, the question was the ability of the country to defend itself against foes.

This kind of commission has been set up three times in the past four years, to investigate widely differing controversies: a fire in Jerusalem's sacred Moslem mosque of Al Aqsa, game-fixing in the national soccer league and mismanagement of an oil-drilling company in the Israeli-held Egyptian Sinai.

Arabs Give Europe An Oil Reprieve

VIENNA, Austria (AP) - Ten Arab oil nations decided Sunday to give most of Europe a one-month reprieve in petroleum cutbacks in recognition of a Common Market political stand generally interpreted as pro-Arab.

The United States, Japan and the Netherlands were excluded from the pause in the Arab oil cutback, imposed in conjunction with the October Middle East war as a means of pressure against Israel and its supporters.

That means that unless some new political developments intervene, the pinch of oil deliveries to Americans, Japanese and Dutchmen will continue unabated.

The United States gets only about 10 per cent of its petroleum from the Middle East. But with the general energy crisis, that margin has become increasingly important.

Europe and Japan depend heavily on the Arabs for oil, however, and the cutback has raised fears of a serious fuel shortage this winter.

The 10 Arab oil-producing nations announced after a surprise meeting here that the additional 5 per cent reduction in production that had been planned for December will not be carried out with regard to sales to the European countries.

The decision means that supplies of oil to Europe, with the exception of the Netherlands, should be the same in December as in November, when they already were sharply reduced.

The Arabs said they were taking this step "in appreciation of the political stand taken by the Common Market countries in their communique regarding the Middle East crisis."

The Common Market statement called on Israel to withdraw immediately to the Oct. 22 cease-fire lines, recognize the rights of the Palestinian people and accept in negotiations a pullback from Arab lands captured in 1967.

But the Arab communique said the production cuts of 5 per cent a mont to Europe will resume normally in January. The relaxation thus will do almost nothing to ease the fuel shortages becoming more acute around Europe.

Various countries, especially the Netherlands, estimate their shortages of incoming crude oil exceed 15 per cent.

Chalk-In At School Of Ed

Experimental Group

Control Group

By JOHN STEWART

In the past several years, our campus has experienced numerous sit-ins, walk-outs, freak-outs and teach-ins. Well, we now have a new "in".

Last week, under the supervision of Mary Beaven, Director of the Aesthetics Center in the School of Education, a "Chalk-In" was held at the Marks Meadow Elementary School About seventy-five, fourth and fifth graders and fifteen future teachers participated in the Happening.

A chalk-in is a gathering of any number of people, who get together anytime and draw with chalk. It can be held almost anywhere desired, have rigid rules or it can be totally unstructured.

The coordinators of the chalk-in and the future teachers held a meeting before the big event at which they discussed the purposes and hopeful outcomes of the project.

One of the main purposes was to benefit the children participating. The kids hopefully were to develop a better appreciation for art, and to learn that art can be fun and interesting. The chalk-in also would expand their idea of what art is, and would illustrate that it is not just something one would see in a museum. Instead, it is a process that anyone can achieve.

The teachers, on the other hand, were given a chance to observe young people's behaviour while being creative.

Each chalk-in has its own rules, depending on what its purpose is. Few rules were utilized at the one for the Marks Meadow students. The kids were divided into fifteen groups, one student teacher for every five young people.

The control groups, which comprised about half of the children, were encouraged to plan their drawings in advance. The control groups were directed to draw a large square and work around that. They could draw inside the square, outside of it, or both.

Lone Group

The other groups were not encouraged to plan ahead, instead they were directed to "do their own thing". The experimental group could work individually, as a group, with a goal, or without one.

The kids had a lot of fun and the teachers seemed to enjoy the chalk-in just as much, if not more.

After the activity was over, the participating student teachers and the coordinaters of the project got together for a discussion. Every one felt the chalk-in was a success. They all had fun and gained a positive feeling toward art. Many of the kids were eager to do it again.

Of all the "ins" and "outs" that exist, the chalk-in seems to be one of the most fun and creative. Try one if you get a chance, they are rewarding.

bARTlett: Student Artwork At A Glance

By

Jim

Most of us go through life not noticing things that we see every day. The only time we notice anything apart from the initial peek, is if we are forced to take notice of it. A prime example of this is the art displayed on the walls of Bartlett Hall. As you pass through the building you may notice that there exists a wide variety of artwork.

The subjects displayed there range from the modern to the more traditional floral murals. Which ever one catches your eye, you'll quickly notice that someone has put a lot of time and work into it. If you have the time, it can really be enjoyable to go looking for some of this work. Apart from the displays in the entrance, paintings are tucked away in some more obscure places. So next time you are running up the stairs to meet a professor or are on the way to a class, stop and take a look at the wall. You may see something you never notice before.

Faculty Opinion About January Break

Of Interest...

Black Careers

The Black Scientist Society of UMass will sponsor a lecture tonight by Ms. Sandra Oyewole of Hampshire College. Ms. Oyewole, who holds a Ph.D. in microbiology, will be giving an address entitled "Careers in Microbiology". Ms. Oyewole is the first of many distinguished personages to be presented by the B.S.S. this year. The presentation will take place at 7:30 p.m. sharp, with refreshments being offered at 7:00 p.m., in Room 413 New Africa House. While all B.S.S. members are required to attend, the entire University and Five College community is welcomed and urged to attend.

Veteran Bonus...

The long awaited Massachusetts Viet Nam bonus payment was recently mailed! Some 18,000 checks were mailed during early September, 2,500 by the end of September, and the remaining 2,000 in mid-October. Of the initial 18,000 mailed, some 500 were returned as undeliverable. In addition to the checks returned because of incorrect addresses, the bonus division indicates a substantial number of applications are being held up because it needs to verify the military service or residence of the applicants. Viet Nam veterans who applied for their bonus before January, 1973 and still haven't heard from Massachusetts are asked to contact the Viet Nam Bonus Division, 23 Beacon Street, Boston Massachusetts 02133.

Student Struggle For Soviet Jewry

The Western Mass. Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry will be present at the performance of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra. There will be a peaceful protest outside of the Curry Hicks Cage, to bear witness to the plight of Soviet Jewry. This protest is being staged in conjunction with the Hillel Foundation at the University.

Why are we protesting this even? Let us explain. You may not see any connection between this concert and the plight of Soviet Jewry, but there is one.

The Soviet Government's policy of Anti-Semitism (in the disguise of Anti-Zionism) effects all areas of Jewish life, including cultural life. For example:

1. Valery Panov was dismissed from Lenigrad's Kirov Ballet, in April 1972, after having applied to emigrate to Israel.
2. All Jewish members of Soviet Radio and Television Orchestra dismissed.
3. Edward Gorwin, musician, allowed to leave for Israel, wife Sofia permission, she remains unemployed, alone, and in a desperate condition.
4. Stella Goldberg, a pianist; husband Victor, allowed to leave, she and her son forbidden exit.

Enjoy the concert, but while you do, remember the plight of these and other Soviet Jews. The protest will start at 7:15 p.m. Monday, Nov. 19 in ront of the main entrance of the Cage. All concerned people are asked to come to a meeting in Hillel Rm. 302 S.U. at 6:30 p.m. that same day.

And Veteran Benefits

Based on a recent class action, it has been declared unconstitutional for the Veterans Administration to refuse eligibility to those who have completed alternative service. The government is appealing this decision to the Supreme Court and has obtained a stay of the judgement, pending the appeal. However, all those interested and eligible should apply now.

Conscientious objectors who have completed alternate service and who wish to apply for veterans educational benefits should obtain Form 21E-1990 at any VA office or from the UMass Office of Veterans Affairs, Whitmore, Rm 241. By filing this application immediately you will establish a VA file number, and establish a date of eligibility. This is important because if the case is upheld the VA may be obligated to pay benefits retroactively to date of application.

Only those who completed more than 180 days of satisfactory alternative service are eligible, and certain documentation and information is needed when filing the application. You will need your Selective Service number, dates of alternative service, and Certificate of Release from Alternative Service. For further information contact: Office of Veterans Affairs (Don Ryan), Whitmore, Rm 421, 5-1346.

Singles Parties?

By THOMAS BRINE

After two and one half months of living on a University, I find myself in a position of not knowing many girls. In trying to reason why I come to the realization that the approach to this process is only by using extreme methods.

Let me give you some examples of what I mean. One of the ways to meet new girls is to attend a party. At first you really get excited when you see so many attractive girls at the party. Usually, there is a dance there to help you get to know some girls. However, after looking for prospective girls to ask, you find out something unfortunate. A large portion of the girls are either assisted by another guy or the remainder of the girls are grouped together. If you haven't tried to ask a girl while she was with a group of girls, you are missing an experience. So what are you to do? You have to use an extreme method. You have to ask a girl that's in a group. Depending on how experienced you are, it can be an embarrassing situation.

The Blue Wall and the Hatch are exactly the same. The girls are split up into the same two catagories. Without using extreme methods similar to going to a party, the chance of meeting a single girl is pretty dim.

Meeting girls at the your local dining commons is again a good example. Most of the girls will either sit with their girlfriends or with a boyfriend. You again must sit with a group of girls and somehow strike up a conversation depending on how much it is worth to you.

If you are a guy that happens to live in a co-ed dorm, the chances of getting to meet different girls is obviously a lot better. In fact, I think it's the best way to get to know girls. However, co-ed dorms do have a few difficulties. Only a small minority of guys get to live on a co-ed dorm and the number of girls in a co-ed is limited.

What it really amounts to is that the ability to meet different girls is not very good. In my opinion, most guy's that have been here the same amount of time as I have, are in the same boat. The social activities do not tailor the desires of the single guy or the single girl for that matter.

I have a suggestion. For guy's who feel the way I do, for girls that interested, and for social organizers who want a change, I would recommend a party with dancing in which only singles of both sex can attend. Then the single guy has a great chance of meeting some girls and vice versa.

Some people might argue that this is being restrictive and unatural. However, I feel that the idea of a party or any other social outing is to enjoy yourselves. Certainly, it will accomplish that. It sure is more natural to meet girls in this atmosphere. It not only is a better atmosphere in which to meet girls at, but it undoubtedly will increase the amount of guys and girls going which makes it better for just about everybody.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Fred Weiss

Soap Selling

There he stood. A clenched fist in the air; drooping jowls and opened lips, the President looked like he was almost moaning. Behind him stood a gigantic American flag consisting of different colored light bulbs. With the Presidential insignia in front of him on the podium, and the flag behind him, he almost looked like a scene out of Hollywood. Perhaps it wasn't an accident.

And he spoke. Told a crowd of 3000 Realtors that he was the President. He exclaimed "I was elected to do a job. I'm not going to walk away until I get that job done." And they cheered. These 3000 Realtors in Washington for a convention cheered. It was as if the President was a side-show. Somewhere between the booze and talk of business there was the President's speech. It was under these kind of conditions that the President made his first move to take his case "to the people". The Realtors...representatives of the public opinion of the United States.

As I read the Springfield Union on Friday, and saw the picture of this desperate man in front of the electronic flag...fist clenched and in the air. . .jowls drooping and the Presidential insignia...I read the banner - REALTORS CHEER DEFENSE OF ROLE BY PRESIDENT. The story described these cheering realtors as a "sympathetic audience". Somehow the entire scene seemed a bit bazarre. The President was "coming out" and "fighting". Yet it was a phantom fight...to be won with a phantom punch. If Nixon does succeed in pumping up his pathetic popularity quota (at last count it was 27% in favor of the President - the rest unsure or against him), it will be a "tribute" to the mass media technicians, the P.R. men, and the advertising agents who got him elected in the first place. For anyone who ever read The Selling of the President, it must be clear that what we are seeing is these same techniques being used again; mob manipulation, phantom cheering; and "picking out" sympathetic crowds to give the illusion of Presidential popularity. It is clear that the President does not want to meet the people..he wants the people to see him cheered by "others"; to see him being "loved by the people" and say to themselves, "maybe he's not such a bad guy after all...maybe it is my imagination." It is the same technique that is used to sell soap!

But who are these "others" who cheer the President? Last Thursday he spoke to the Realtors; over the weekend he went down south; first to Florida, then Georgia. For his televised "Question and Answer" period with the News Media, he picked the Associated Press managing editors in Orlando, Florida. Wow, what a big break for them. Do you think that these local newsmen asked the real tough questions? The kind of questions that would have been asked by a Dan Rather or a Roger Mudd. A Walter Cronkite or a John Chancellor? But of course they never really had a chance to talk to the President. They know the issues. The President knows this and probably they will never get a chance to ask any of their questions to the President in public.

And as the President talks to friendly crowds the scandals grow and grow: The number of companies that have admitted their guilt in donating corporate money illegally to the "Committee for the Re-election of the President", has risen to seven. Company officials have said that they were protecting themselves; the implication being that if these corporations did not donate money to the President's re-election they would be "low man" on the Executive totempole. The implication was that it would be a very bad thing to be the "low man" on the totempole. Add extortion to the lists of break and entry as some of the "functions" performed by the President and his cronies.

While people talk about "the tapes" there are other things to consider; the President talks of "energy crisis" then flies all over the country (Florida, California, the White House and Camp David) in search of the "perfect lounge chair" in which to watch the Sunday Football games; the Milk industries were not granted an audience with the President, or a subsequent permission to raise prices until they kicked in a substantial amount of money to the "Committee to Re-elect the President". While the President talks of "ending the Vietnam War", actually he was President for the longest time of any President before it ended; and settled for little more than the North Vietnamese offered was in the first place when he first took office. And consider that Dita Beard is still a very relevant name in America today, and that before all this Watergate mumbo jumbo the IT&T scandal was considered quite significant in itself.

On Friday afternoon I walked around this campus, and though of the man with his hand clenched in the air, surrounded by an electric American Flag behind him...and a band of enthusiasts in front of him. Between the man and the enthusiasts stood only the Presidential insignia. "I was elected to do a job." he seemed to moan. "I'm not going to walk away until I get that job done." His words sounded no less repulsive, and no less sickening the second time around.

Charles Camelopard

Nixon To Tour

President Nixon is preparing a speech to give to Northern Michigan Society of Colored Toilet Bowl Manufacturers later this week, while on tour trying to regain public confidence lost over Watergate and the upcoming possibility of fuel rationing. Other biggies on this week's agenda are a press conference with Society for the Prevention of Pneumatic Wheeled Skate Boards and a splinter group of the International Billiard Ball Polishers who wish to retain their identity as a strictly right handed organization.

White House press releasers have included briefings of the upcoming political events and among the released information were the President's statements concerning his role in the energy cutbacks and of course denials of progiteering from political office.

Here are some of the tricks Mr. Nixon will use to regain the confidence of his audiences. A federal purchase order for thirty-four pairs of bright red union made long johns for Presidential use has been made public. Mr. Nixon claims that he will wear the underthings this winter. He has said that at anytime he will make public his use of the federally purchased drawers. This is one time, the release claims, Mr. Nixon won't mind being caught with his pants down.

He has further stated that all federal employees will be required to wear and display their reds so that all branches of the federal government can set an example for the public to follow.

The President will maintain that he needs four houses to conduct his business from. He will, however, reveal that at times the residents in San Clemente, Key Biscayne, Washington, and Camp David have been used for social purposes. In the future, Mr. Nixon plans to travel vigorously from house to house looking for tapes and other hidden goodies of his terms.

Mrs. Nixon will accompany the president in one of her respectable Republican cloth coats, as will Ron Ziegler who will be wearing hip and shoulder pads in case the President gives him a friendly shove or two while on the road.

Elliot Richardson has been invited to go along too as long as he maintains voluntary silence for the weeklong swing through middle America. Rumor has it that George Meany will attempt to interrupt the president by presenting him with a bag of brains to replace the ones Mr. Nixon has lost.

Sony Radio Corporation has offered the President the use of tape recorders to protect forever the words of our leader as he tours the America he loves.

Death Taken Casually

To The Editor:

Death is a rather difficult subject to deal with, violent death even more so. As a resident of Southwest I was deeply distraught over the recent tragedies, and the feel the question of blame is totally irrelevant. What is relevant is to understand why people reacted in the ways they did, rather than condemning them for being excitement seekers.

I was sitting in the laundry room of my dorm when I was informed about the suicide from Washington. I was stunned, and returned to my room, on the way running into people returning from the scene. The remark that most disturbed me was from a man who said, "Oh well, another Umie bites the dust". I really couldn't believe the calousness and lack of compassion among my fellow students. For two hours I sat in my room, wondering what I was doing at a place where these things were taken so casually. Then I realized that every person was affected by this death. It's just that many couldn't deal with it, so they had to laugh and joke. The people who gathered around the body were not blood lovers. I am sure each person felt pain, confusion, anguish over what they were experiencing. It was not a sick crowd, but rather a concerned group of people trying to cope with something that was difficult to understand. Some could not express their feelings in a concerned emotional way, which is not to say that they didn't feel these things.

The people who live in Southwest are no different from people in any other area of campus. We hurt, some of us cry, some can't. We have our own inhibitions and capabilities. We all care. We just all have different ways of expressing our caring.

Wendy Zimmer

We Are People

To The Editor:

I live in Southwest. I saw a young man dead on the concrete pavement. For the past week I've heard much talk of life, death and Southwest; some of it makes sense, some of it doesn't. At this point the question seems to be what is wrong with Southwest and the people (or had you forgotten we are people) who live there. Maybe those of you who are so quick to pass judgment can help me understand how things should have been. Should I have shut my eyes and pretended the body lying outside my window really wasn't there at all? Should I have denied myself the right to question and think of that mysterious and awesome state of being what we call death? Or maybe I should have taken one small glance and then bemoaned the fate of an innocently misguided youth. Should I have cried, should I have laughed, should I have cared at all?...Before you who pretend to know, start with your criticisms and insults just remember one thing, we are people, people who face the same trips the rest of the world faces, people who live and learn, just like the rest of the world lives and learns. Things are hard enough for us as they are so just spare us your contempt. We will not let you take our dignity.

Want A Nice Juicy Story

To The Editor:

I am writing in regard to the recent apparent suicide death of a former UMass student, Ed Waddington.

I know how tragic deaths affect certain people, especially those who have no respect for the dead. In an event such as this one, besides being obstacles for authorities, police, and medical examiners, spectators generally portray an overall ignorant and inconsiderate attitude. I agree that curiosity is a human trait (as well as an animalistic one), but really, to gawk at a dead body. I myself can see no satisfaction in the viewing of a corpse, i.e. the corpse of a nineteen year old who was evidently having problems with life, and decided to put an end to it. We should all feel a deep sense of tragic loss for this person, even though the majority of us never even knew him. The fact is, a person died, died because he may have thought that he wasn't worthy of walking the face of this earth. So do some have the right to joke about such a tragedy? Some joke alright. Whether or not these people's "Jokes" were just to mask their inner feelings, I see no reason for such poor taste. The majority of people, (I hope) would react to a situation such as this, in the form of great awe, and empathy for the victim(s) involved. And just this week I heard a line that really galled me to no end. It went as follows: "Hey, why did that kid jump from Washington, the library would have been a lot more effective." I would say that that person has a humanitarian problem — a bad one.

It seems that some people even hope for a nice juicy story to accompany the incident like: "Yeah, he was stoned-out, and had a bad trip." I can almost bet that some people were disappointed in the true story. Let's face it, with all the violence that surrounds us everyday, i.e. movies, television, and books, then wouldn t it be a natural thing for people to get their jollies at other's expenses'?

I am not speaking about just the residents of Southwest — HELL NO. I'm speaking about those of you who made fools out of yourselves by gawking at the body of Ed Waddington, and those who succeeded in bringing forth distasteful remarks. Is that any respect for the dead?

I would like to end this by saying that I feel sorry for those of you who don't possess genuine, human feelings.

Trash Makes Money

To The Editor:

This is meant as a joint reply to the article on PINK FLAMINGOS by Kevin Mack and the letter on movie admission increases by Steve Goldberg. The two situations described and condemned are caused by general student apathy to good film on this campus. While I don't applaud the showing of FLAMINGOS, I can recognize the necessity for showing the film to make money--money that was lost from poor attendances for better films. If Misters Mack & Goldberg and perhaps the Collegian itself would look beyond the surface they would see a very nasty trend overtaking this campus. I've never had much respect for the UMass film audience and it seems a bitter uphill struggle at times to educate this community to the fine films that are ignored in favor of NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD or REEFER MADNESS. The commercial tinge that is beginning to show up more often at film showings bothers me further. Posters are getting to sound like Madison Avenue copy and programming is beginning to look like the huckster's dream come true--pack 'em in and give them as little for their money as you can. The battle for space on the Mezzanine in the Student Union is taking on the character of a price war. I'm not even sure Mr. Goldberg is complaining enough when more movie programs are charging $1 for a seat now.

I think the situation arises out of two basic conditions. First is the fact that well-meaning groups can't make money on good films to they hype bad ones. With rentals going up on Bogart films and other popular stars (despite Mr. Goldberg's opinion, I cite two good examples: FRANKENSTEIN's rental price rose from $25 to $85 in two years, Bogart-Hawks' THE BIG SLEEP went from $25 to $75 in one year and these two are only a few) the programmer has to turn toward trash that is still overpriced but comes with assurances that the group will make money. The same people who sign petitions to bring Moe Howard to campus and ignore the other fine DVP presentations bring down film quality also.

It's a good bet that this situation could turn UMass into the play-place of the East but I wonder if that's what all this physical plant was built for. It's a well-known psychological/anthropological fact that surroundings have a great effect on an individuals' or group's behavior. In this way the University powers-that-be are very much responsible for making the students here into a mindless mass that drifts from the Bluewall to their rooms and back without very much else than a peripheral awareness of the world and its pleasures about them. The creation of a university city with its self-enclosed, self-serving conveniences makes it possible for the inhabitant to even forget he's got other options. The creation of the Campus Center and its endless crippling bureaucracies, pin-ball machines and plastic entertainment put the cap on any creativity that might have generated from student groups.

My letters on film always seem to come out as propoganda for the Amherst Film Cooperative, but this time I'll resist that temptation. But there are groups on this campus trying to do some very commendable things and they meet resistance from that great mob out there and the petty bureaucrats in there until, their energies are sapped and they resort to the easiest approach, "Let them eat cake".

If you really care, Mr. Goldberg; if you really care Mr. Mack, then do something about changing priorities around here. Man at play is a wonderful thing to behold if the games he plays elevate and sensitize him to the beauty of himself and his creations. It may be easy to say "there are more important things to worry about", but work, politics, food, survival and play are part of a chain of life. If one link in that chain fails there may be little hope for the other links. Think hard about the quality of your life here and those who are responsible to you for allowing you to grow.

Murder Has No Place

To The Editor:

We are writing this letter to inform Col. Bullock that in fact there are those on the UMass campus that are still vehemently opposed to ROTC, the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marines and all that they stand for. There are indeed those that still believe that murder indoctrination, under whatever course title you wish to use, has absolutely no place in an academic community or anywhere else.

True, there are no more demonstrations, but maybe there is still hope — hope in the power of the mind over hatred; hope in the power of right over might; and hope in the possibility that the next time a President or anyone else tries to send men to destroy human beings, those men will say: "I refuse to shoot at my brother."

We Are The State

To The Editor:

We feel that the forced resignation of Don Connors as the Central Area Academic Affairs Counselor, was an outrageous violation of his right of free speech.

That the two faculty members (who remain anonymous), had the balls to threaten the Central Area Colloquia Program with loss of accredidation because of their dislike for a few sentences in the Collegian, is an excellent indication that the two faculty members are totally callous and unaware of the student's wants and needs. That these two individuals would threaten a loss of accredidation that would affect many students, shows that these faculty members should not be influential in matters relating to the Central Area Coloquia Program. We therefore agree with Don Connors in that it should have been the two faculty members who should have been asked to resign.

We call for a complete reform between administration and student relationships. Obviously the administration and some faculty are insensitive to the student body.

We, the students, should have a voice in matters such as this; a voice that is heard UMass is a state institution: we, the voters, are the State.

Commentary

Let My People Come Home

By ALI ALIE

In response to Dr. Marcelo Dascal's commentary of Nov. 8, "THE FUTURE OF PALESTINIAN LEADERSHIP", I prefer to take into discussion a few points and issues from his intended scattered-over discussions.

First of all, Mr. Dascal's going over tens of issues fails to justify his ESCAPE from facing criticism of his articles an talks lately. Reading about your ideas and listening to your contradictions, I believe your ideas lack the consciousness of sincerity. In my opinion, your thinking is typically conservative and reactionary as long as you take the intitiative. "Since my main purpose in participating...on mid-east is to help clarify the issues and to put foreward some ideas that may be useful in bringing peace", and as long as you treat realities and issues in a completely different manner.

The recognition of the State of Israel. (with guaranteed secular borders), by the Adelete

The recognition of the State of Israel, (with guaranteed secular borders), by the Arab States has not been an issue since Nov. 1967 when the Arabs accepted resolution 242 of the Security Council and the "Roger Plan" of the U.S. in 1970. Both resolutions insisted on Israel's acceptance to withdraw from occupied Arab territories in order to achieve a permanent peace. But not too long ago, and up until weeks before the latest war started, Golda Meir and Moshe Dayan, along with other Israeli leaders declared that the Arabic Sector of Jerusalem is "not negotiable", the West Bank is "not negotiable", Sinai, the Golans and Gaza are "not negotiable," and how many times did they say to the world "Palestinians do not exist"? Then what are the Arab States to negotiate, their defeat?

It is natural, under such and many other contradicting situations, for the PLO to declare for liberation of Palestine and for one democratic secular State from the Mediterranean to the Jordan, even though I am sure that the PLO knows it is impossible to do so. But realistically and logically speaking, they had to say this to get the Meirs, Dayans, and the Israeli people to admit that Palestinians EXIST, exist as an usurped nation, culture and society. Dr. Dascal is blind when he says, "The PLO itself is nothing but a federation of 5 different terrorist groups, who represent at best, a few thousand terrorists each, and impose their will on the population of the refugees by the sheer force of terror. The PLO pretends to be a revolutionary and progressive force".

In fact, 1967 made the Palestinians see themselves and their situation in a new light. Over half of the Palestinians were living under Israeli rule. The Palestinians have now become the "Jews of the Jews". But unlike the Jews, who were in their homeland, a stirring spectacle in the eyes of the world, the Palestinians' loss of a homeland was of little moment. They suddenly saw themselves for what they were in the eyes of the "civilized" world, another species of Third World sub-humanity, existing outside history, the new Red Indians, the Blacks of Israel.

The new conditions under which the Palestinian masses (intellectuals, workers, peasants) now lived were, like their former conditions. Living on international charity, exploited as cheap labor by the expropriators of their land, the Palestinian masses experienced only an extension of their former exploitation and misery. The pursuit since 1967 of a revolutionary conception has produced not only an impressive body of literature, but practice in the Palestinian experience has tended to develop largely independent of systematic theory, which, as expressed in institutions and behavior, lagged behind. Theory and rhetoric were indistinguishable, and practice mostly took the form of spontaneous, disorganized activity.

To be sure, picking up the gun demonstrated lessons which no theory alone could have taught. The first day of resistance showed not only what human will could generate, but also affirmed revolutionary action as the only way to self-transformation. It become clear that nothing could free society from the shackles that bound it except the force stored in its oppressed and exploited masses. We saw the new Arab Man emerging in the shape of the Palestinian fedayeen. We envisaged the Arab revolution being born from the Palestinian resistance movement.

The immediate aftermath of the 1967 defeat was the heroic period of Palestinian resistance. The courage and determination of the fedayeen injected new life in the Palestinian and all the Arab masses. Never before in their history did the Palestinian feel so strongly bound together. The fedayeen crossed the river and for the first time in 20 years were able to hit back at the oppressor. But, precisely at the moment when the movement seemed about to enter its decisive stage, it was seized by crippling contradictions, both internal and external. Unable to unite around a common strategy, the movement now become a victim of the forces of conterrevolution. Blow after painful blow by "friendly" and unfriendly regimes began to fall upon it, until the crushing assault of September 70 in Jordan. Friends and supportors began to disperse and the period of euphoria was over. Suddenly the Palestinians found themselves isolated again, alienated from their Arab hosts and confronting the enemy alone.

The Palestinians, however, see no option other than to continue the struggle. Their fight is for their full human rights, including the fundamental right to live in a democratic freedom in their own homeland. To the Palestinians, Israel today is nothing more than what it has taken away from them, "Israeli happiness is made of Palestinian tears". If today the Israelis are people with a country, it is because the Palestinians are people without a country.

Objectively, the Palestinians have no choice but to fight against domination as such a struggle cannot be viewed as an aquixotic venture, or "destructive", but as a matter of survival. Nor can the Palestinians be a party to any "partial" solution under prevailing conditions. Every "partial" solution is in fact a total solution in as much as it involves all the fundamental national and human rights of the Palestinians. Dr. Dascal claims that the PLO is the over all representative of the Palestinian people, but there is the Central Committee and the Palestine National Congress which broadly represents the Palestinian people including both commando and civilian groups. I am sure in case of peace talks, a representative Palestinian Government in exile would be formed. The Palestinians of the West Bank and the Gaza could not be represented in such a government in the exile, while the Israeli occupation of their territories continues.

It is untrue as Dr. Dascal claims that the guerillas "do not receive any support from the local Palestinians" of the West Bank and Gaza. How about the 16,000 stone houses which have been destroyed by Israeli forces after the evacuation of their residents between '67-'70 because those people gave shelter to guerillas? How about the mass arrests, collective punishment, concentration camps, interrogation, and destruction of villages in occupied territories? Was that because people were sitting in their homes accepting Israeli military rule and persecution or because they were resisting the oppressor? (Mentioned Israeli atrocities have been documented and condemned specifically by the U.N.).

It is untrue as Dr. Dascal claims that the PLO have "adopted the view that any Palestinian who would accept" an establishment of Palestinian State on the West Bank "would be considered a traitor and be executed". How about those Palestinians who are calling for such a State--people as Dr. Hamdi Taji, Attorney Aziz Shehaden, Mr. Sini Bitar, Mr. M. Abo-Shilpayah, and many other Palestinians who say their views publicly and have already published books of them. With respect to Arabs getting killed in Gaza by grenades "thrown by guerillas", I am ready to present to Mr. Dascal documents about the Israelis throwing those grenades at Arab crowds in Gaza. Let's face it. Israel was born by force and continues to maintain itself by force. Israel lacks political or juridicial foundations. The mythological tenet to which Zionism lays claim has no meaning or validity outside the religious or psychological subjectivity of Zionists and their supporters. The State has only empirical existence, with no more than an emirical validity. True, Israel offers peace, but it can only offer it without options: it is a peace predicted on DOMINATION. Zionist leaders today cannot see any form of Palestinian-Jewish linkage. They consider this possibility rather remote, like every settler state creates its own grave diggers. This in part, because the Zionest ideology is unable to see its own contradictions.

The vision of Zionism is limited by repressive mechanisms which block vital aspects of self-knowledge of how Israel came into being, knowledge of the Palestinian...But these aspects cannot be indefinitely hidden or repressed. The veil which hides colonial reality from itself is ruptured by the thrust of struggle and the emergence of radical internal criticism. When the Palestinians picked up the gun in 1967 and organized for armed struggle, the beginning of self-doubt for the first time set in some Israeli minds: the Jewish state looked less utopian and more colonial. Many Jews inside and outside Israel--Zionist settlers, Zionist and non-Zionist supporters of Israel--felt somewhat ill-at-ease. They had either consciously to ignore the facts or to suppress their moral instincts or to rationalize the new knowledge away. Self-doubt, suppressing moral feelings, rationalizing the sense of guilt are among the first signs of ripening internal contradictions. Finally about the Palestinian Revolution as Jean Genet puts it, "A revolution which does not aim at changing me by changing relations between people does not interest me; what is more, I doubt whether a revolution which does not affect me enough to transform me is really a revolution at all. The Palestinian revolution has established new kinds of relations which have changed me, and in this sense the Palestinian revoltion is my revolution".

Rep. Conte On MUA

Energy Crisis Talk

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast a speech on the energy crisis delivered by Congressman Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) at Hampshire College last Wednesday.

The broadcast is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Tonight's taped broadcast includes the Republican Congressman's remarks on impeachment, American aid to the Thieu government in South Vietnam, and other matters — in a question-and-answer exchange which followed the speech.

Conte's appearance was part of a Five College Science and Society Symposium at Hampshire College.

Don't Forget Mayall

This is a reminder to UMass students that upon returning from vacation on Sunday, November 25 and Monday November 26, John Mayall will be appearing in concert at the Curry Hicks Cage at 8:00 p.m. Appearing with Mayall on Sunday night will be special guest artist Bruce Springsteen and on Monday night the voice of Maria Mulduar will resound through the Cage. Tickets for the concerts are now on sale at the student Union Lobby counter from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Tickets will also be sold the days of the concerts at the counter from 3:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m., however it is advised to pick up tickets early.

The Mayall concert is one in a series of five concerts to be presented this year by the UMass Concert Committee. Student support is needed if these major concerts are to be continued, so see you at the Cage!

PSE For Greeks

The final meeting of the fall semester for the Greek area Peer Sex Education Program Series will be held at Phi Mu Delta in Fraternity-Sorority Park on Monday, Nov. 19th at 7 p.m. The topic for discussion will be "Alternative Lifestyles" and the guest speaker will be Ron Mazur, a member of the Health Education staff at the Infirmary. Ron is currently the co-director of the PSE program on campus and has been working hard for the establishment of the program in areas outside the residence halls. He is also the author of two books, Commonsense Sex and The New Intimacy. All Greek men and women are invited! Come and experience PSE, it will be a pleasant surprise!

Speak Out

Steps are being made towards dealing with the complex anxieties students experience today. The Student Development and Career Planning Center task force (a student coalition is attempting to motivate a higher level of relevence and effectiveness in the delivery of human services.

The next open hearing is: November 19, Colonial Lounge - Student Union - 6:00-8:00.

All students are invited to relate their experiences and opinions about counseling and career planning at the university.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

When I want a balanced, impartial view, I usually seek Libra. These persons seem capable of evaluating, of putting together the pieces and of bringing opposing factions away from conflict and into areas of harmony. Libra can also be tempermental, artistic and ready to stand tall for principles. A key word for the Libra woman is "elegance." For the Libra man, the word is "justice."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Push forth plan to make home more comfortable, family member more contented. Accent is on co-operative efforts, partnership, marriage. Legal papers are in picture. You may be asked to sign papers relating to special payments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Low-key approach serves your best interests. Know it and be a shrewd listener, observer. Leave direct action for another time. Pisces, Virgo persons could figure prominently. Remember diet, health resolutions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get results. Applies to professional and personal activities. Style, creativity and significant changes are featured. You gain recognition--and money. Added responsibility adds to prestige. Member of opposite sex is involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Completion of assignment, project is indicated. You get decision regarding home, property. What does occur is likely to have long-range implications. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently. Focus on values.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New actions are featured in connection with neighbors, relatives. Get ideas before public. Highlight independence, originality. You can make important contacts. Check copyrights, patents. Story or product concept might result in ultimate profit.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What had been "owed" is likely to be repaid. You collect, add to possessions. Conservative approach assures that you don't rock boat. Aquarian is likely to be in picture. Take stock of valuable. Be aware of prices.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Efforts now attract favorable attention. Horizons expand. Timing improves. Judgment is on target. You shake off emotional rut. Humor is featured. You are able to laugh at foibles, others' and your own. Take lead. Be a self-starter.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You feel restricted. What appeared a "cakewalk" may now seem slightly more hazardous. Key is to be thorough, aware of details. Don't delegate duties. Gain co-operation of group, special organization. Deal with Aquarius, Leo individuals.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent is on how you relate to friends who are restless, somewhat impatient. Do some analyzing--discover reasons. Take nothing for granted. Aid one who is temporarily incapacitated. You will be rewarded, gratified.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasize goal. Speak to one who pulls strings. Be diplomatic but insist on getting credit for achievements. Steer clear of excess in any celebration--and this includes sweets. Taurus, Libra persons may be involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect now coincides with long trips, philosophical concepts, plans for future. You learn and teach; you share knowledge. You are somewhat introspective but this is all to the good. Find out what's going on "inside." Get to know yourself!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get accounting. Check statements. One who reassures you may be taking too much for granted. Insist on facts, no' promises. Mate, partner wants to talk money. Review investment portfolio. Become knowledgeable about hidden clauses.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, independent, somewhat arrogaut and very creative. Your drives are strong. You get involved all the way and there are embarrassing moments. But that is you and most persons who know you wouldn't have it any other way. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently in your life. December will be one of the most important months of this year for you.

THIS IS REALLY AMAZING- THE STRONGEST POLITICAL MOVEMENT ONCAMPUS IS ONE TO GET MOE HOWARD AS A DVP SPEAKER.
IT'LL BE INTERESTING TO SEE IF THE POWERS THAT BE WILL RESPOND TO SOMETHING THE STUDENT BODY REALLY CARES ABOUT FOR A CHANGE!
NOT A CHANCE! THE POWERS THAT BE DON'T THINK LIKE THAT!
YOU JUST WAIT AND SEE! WE'LL JUST GET THE USUAL RUN-OF-THE-MILL DISTINGUISHED SCIENTISTS, BRILLIANT ARTISTS AND CONTROVERSIAL POLITICAL FIGURES!

Third In DVP Series Tonight

John W. Spencer

John Wallace Spencer, author of the book "Limbo Of The Lost" will speak tonight at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom. The program is the final lecture in the Believe It Or Not Series sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

"Limbo Of The Lost" is Mr. Spencer's book about the Bermuda Triangle, an area of the Atlantic off the southeastern coast of the U.S. where many people, ships, and planes have mysteriously disappeared. Although many explanations have been given, Mr. Spencer concludes that U.F.O. activity is to blame.

Pats Put Packers In Place, 33-24

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Quarterback Jim Plunkett threw a pass interception, the New England Patriots fell behind 24-9, and he would like to have shot himself. "I was just wishing I had a gun on me," Plunkett said.

"However, that interception at the start of the second half made me bear down more," he added.

Plunkett bore down all right. He picked apart Green Bay defenses with brilliant passes and the Patriots rallied for a 33-24 victory over the once-mighty Green Bay Packers Sunday in a National Football League upset.

"You wonder why we can't do this every week," Plunkett said. "We had both the blocking and the running game to make our passing go. I had time to pass out there. I was surprised because Green Bay does have a very good pass rush."

Plunkett admitted that he played while hurt. He said he suffered aggravation of an old right leg injury when sacked in the first period after the Packers had taken a 14-0 lead. However, it didn't show in the field.

"The key was second effort and determination, on the part of every player," New England coach Chuck Fairbanks said.

"Today's game is an indication of the type of capabilities that Jim Plunkett has. He did a really fine job. He did a fine job, he was very poised. We also gave him a lot of help out there. He had time to pass.

"It was a great day for us, a great victory for us."

"It was a day of missed opportunities, both offensively and defensively," Green Bay Coach Dan Devine said. "We had some mental breakdowns. That's what it's been all year."

Detroit Lion quarterback and former UMass star Greg Landry underwent knee surgery last Wednesday to correct an injury sustained against the Packers on October 28. Landry will be sidelined for the remainder of the season.

Pairings Announced For Major Bowls

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

(AP) - The bowl lineup came into focus over the weekend, and the nation's top college football teams now can get down to the business of settling the muddled national championship picture.

Top-rated Ohio State visits No. 4 Michigan to decide the Big Ten title and one berth in the Rose Bowl, and second-ranked Alabama visits No. 7 Louisiana State to settle Sotheastern Conference honors.

The Pacific-8 Conference champion and the Rose Bowl host will be decided when eighth-ranked UCLA and No. 9 Southern California tangle in Los Angeles.

In weekend action, Ohio State pounded winless Iowa 55-13, Michigan trimmed Purdue 34-9, UCLA blasted Oregon State 56-14 and Southern Cal whipped Washington 42-19.

Alabama trounced Miami of Florida 43-13 and accepted a bid to play Notre Dame in the Sugar Bowl. Penn State, rated sixth, drubbed Ohio University 49-10 and signed for the Orange Bowl against Louisiana State, a 26-7 winner over Mississippi State.

Nebraska, ranked 10th, accepted a Cotton Bowl bid following a 50-21 hammering of Kansas State. The Cornhuskers will face 11th-ranked Texas, which earned its sixth consecutive Cotton Bowl trip and clinched a tie for the Southwest Conference crown, walloping Texas Christian 52-7.

Meanwhile, third-ranked Oklahoma, ineligible for post-season play, trounced Liberty Bowl-bound Kansas 48-20.

"It sure does feel good to be beating so many bowl teams," said Coach Barry Switzer, whose club also has beaten Texas and Missouri and gets a shot at Nebraska on Friday.

Kansas' opponent in the Liberty Bowl will be No. 20 North Carolina State, which beat Duke 21-3.

The Gator Bowl lined up 12th-ranked Texas Tech, a 55-24 winner over Baylor, to meet No. 16 Tennessee, even though the Vels lost to Mississippi 28-18.

Arizona State, rated 13th, crushed Texas-El Paso 54-13 and will represent the Western Athletic Conference in the Fiesta Bowl if it beats No. 19 Arizona next Saturday.

Arizona lost a non-league 27-26 game to Air Force. The visiting team will be Pitt, which blanked winless Army 34-0.

The Sun Bowl wound up with two of Saturday's losers-No. 14 Missouri, which bowed to Iowa State 17-7, and Auburn, which fell to Georgia 28-14 and still must face Alabama.

The Bluebonnet Bowl will pair No. 15 Houston, idle Saturday, against Tulane, which knocked off Vanderbilt 24-3 after accepting the invitation.

Miami of Ohio, ranked 17th, officially will be named Monday to play in the Tangerine Bowl. The Redskins completed a perfect by shading Cincinnati 6-0 when Larry Harper returned the opening kickoff 95 yards for the only score.

Maryland made it to the Peach Bowl with a 28-13 decision over Clemson.

Falcons In "Must Win" Vs. Vikings

By ED SHEARER
Associated Press Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) - Minnesota and Atlanta, two of the National Football League's hottest teams, collide Monday night in a nationally televised game that is pivotal to the Falcon's hopes of reaching the playoffs.

Minnesota, 9-0, the only undefeated team in the NFL, already has clinched the National Football Conference Central Division championship, while the Falcons, 6-3, have a five-game winning streak and are in strong contention for the NFC's West Division title.

"We have great respect for the Vikings, because they earned it," says Atlanta Coach Norm Van Brocklin, who laid the groundwork of Viking power while serving as Minnesota's coach for its first six seasons beginning in 1961.

"They have great personnel and Coach Bud Grant has done a fine job of molding things," added Van Brocklin.

"Atlanta is a contending team and we're catching them at their peak," said Grant. "I've said it before, a lot depends on when you play a particular team on your schedule."

The starting quarterbacks, Fran Tarkenton of Minnesota and Bob Lee of Atlanta, have had tenures under both coaches. Tarkenton and Van Brocklin became involved in a feud when each was at Minnesota. The coach benched his quarterback because of Tarkenton's scrambling style of play.

Lee, undefeated since becoming Atlanta's starter five weeks ago, was acquired in an offseason deal with the Vikings.

Tarkenton, who hasn't thrown an interception in his last 90 pass attempts, will be throwing against the NFC's leading pass defense. Over-all, he has connected on 112 of 185 passes for 1,456 yards and 10 touchdowns.

Lee, who missed Atlanta's first three games because of an injury, is 79 of 132 for 1,091 yards and six touchdowns.

However, each is expected to have ready for action outstanding running backs who have been nursing injuries-No. 1 draft choice Chuck Foreman for the Vikings and Art Malone for the Falcons.

Lawson Leaving For Full Scholarship

By BETH O'BRIEN

If you saw UMass's first lady of track around campus, her face would probably be crinkled in a broad grin. And it's no wonder, for things have been going great these days for Kathy Lawson; UMass junior, Olympic track hopeful and the best thing to hit the Amherst campus since Julius Erving.

After spreading the name of UMass through national and world-wide competition, come January, Kathy will depart for California on a full scholarship to pursue her track career with the Lajoila track club under a new coach. Her reason? "It's the best offer I've received", says Kathy, who also emphasizes, "I am coming back next fall because I want to graduate from UMass."

Kathy was drawn to UMass from New Hampshire with a false promise of a scholarship from someone not even connected with the athletic department. But she loved the campus and facilities so much that she decided to stay even though there would be no money. She credits track coach Ken O'Brien not only with getting her into the University, but with providing every possible aid to further her running career.

"The way it worked out", says Kathy now, "it was better for me to go here. I've had the training and facilities, all the help I've needed. The money situation worked out, and I'm getting a better education here."

Kathy isn't bitter in the least about broken promises or lack of financial assistance from the University, for as she will tell you, again with that big smile, "Women don't get the athletic scholarships here!"

"I'm not leaving because of that" she states emphatically. "And I'm not quitting at all. I just want to train all spring and find out if I can run well in future meets. But in order to train well and work on my technique, I have to be with a coach and a team now."

Kathy has set a goal for herself, to make the 1976 Olympics, and is going all out to accomplish it. She's bounced back after bad luck and bad knees kept her off the 1972 Olympic team; determined to try again.

When Kathy Lawson leaves, UMass will be losing more than a valuable resource. And for those who know her, it's a shame to see her go. But if her attitude and personality are any indication of future success, UMass will be boasting an Olympic champion among their alumni.

TOUCHDOWN — Ed Hajdusek grabs an over the shoulder touchdown pass from Peil Pennington as UNH safety Brad Yurek dives in vain. Yurek batted down several other UMass passes, but three big ones still got by. UMass won the game, 28-13.

Bruins Notch 6th Straight

BOSTON (AP) — Phil Esposito backhanded his 21st goal and added two assists to run his National Hockey League leading point total to 43 in just 19 games Sunday night as the Boston Bruins whipped the Atlanta Flames 5-2.

The victory was the sixth in a row for the Bruins and widened their lead in the NHL East.

The Bruins, who had won their last two games by 10-2 and 8-0 scores, got on the board at 1:44 of the first period when Wayne Cashman flipped in an Esposito rebound.

Carol Vadnais and Johnny Bucyk got power play goals around an Atlanta score by Larry Romanchych for a 3-1 lead at the end of the first period.

Rookie Tom Lysiak batted in a rebound of a shot by Leon Rochefort for Atlanta's second goal in the second period, but Esposito got the advantage back for Boston moments after Bruins goalie Gilles Gilbert came up with four spectacular saves.

Ken Hodge would up the scoring with his 14th goal in the finale.

Peck & Frosh Flip UNH In Season Finale

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The Freshman football squad completed their limited five game schedule Friday afternoon on the upbeat, as they yawned their way to a 26-16 victory over the New Hampshire Frosh, in the cold at Alumni Stadium.

26-16. Sounds like a reasonably close game, but not really. The Minutemen dominated all but a 48 second stretch of the affair (late in the fourth period) in which time, the little Wildcats scored two touchdowns against the Freshman reserves.

Bob Peck got things started; well, he even finished things. He made the little UNH'ers bid goodbye to any possible victory hopes they may have had, as he tallied three times, twice on ground rampages (runs of 43 and 15 yards) and once as the recipient of a Frank DeFillipo aerial (of 32 yards).

Steve Jabout finished the scoring out for the little Minutemen as he scored via the ground route from five yards out. The score was 26-0, it was time for a coffee break.

Scott Seere found his split-end John Baudin for a 39 yard touchdown play to put UNH on the scoreboard, and after three incompleted passes by UMass, Warren Ellock rambled 86 yards on the next play to turn a rout (26-0) turn into a respectable score.

It's getting to the point where freshman games are not really indicative of anything, because of the various number of freshman dressing and playing with the varsities. The future of freshman football programs may be in jeopardy.

The frosh concluded their season at the 3-1 mark. Starting with a victory over URI, the Pups were downed by BC, before finishing strong with victories over UConn & UNH.

Hopefully the experience was incremental for the Freshman involved on this year's program. Where the majority of the guys will go (in their UMass football careers) only time will tell.

Thomas & Co. Vs. The "Prefontaines"

By SCOTT HAYES

Randy Thomas, UMass' premier cross country runner, may not be running up there with the greats like Steve Prefontaine, but you can bet he and the rest of the UMass Cross Country team will go all out in an effort to finish among the ten best teams in the country in today's NCAA championships.

Thomas and company will be running in Spokane, Washington in the meet which will determine the top cross country teams in the country. The meet will take place in Hangman's Valley Golf Course.

Thomas regarded the trip to Spokane as "a chance to see where I stand in the country." The junior harrier explained that the team will be out there to give it everything they have, the same as they have been doing all season long.

"Our team is out to represent the University as best we can," he said, "We've worked hard as a team this year, and that's helped us a lot."

Tom Maguire said he thought the trip to Spokane would be a good experience. Maguire and his teammates will be running against the best runners in the nation.

Commenting on the six-mile course which is standard in NCAA competition, Maguire said, "It won't matter to me, but it might help other members of the team." Maguire feels that Paul Segersten will be helped by the added mile, which makes the race a little less dependent on speed, and more focused on endurance. Maguire also stated that the experience will help his future running. "It will be an enormous help for next year," said the sophomore runner.

Thomas said that he hopes to see a little of Prefontaine in today's race. Prefontaine, the pre-meet favorite, is in a class of his own. As a freshman, in 1970, he accomplished the following: 1) beat Gerry Lindgen, his idol, by 27 seconds in a six-mile cross country race; 2) ran two miles in 8:40, the third fastest time for the first half of 1970; 3) ran three miles in 13:12.8, the fastest in the world for the first half of 1970; 4) ran six miles in practice in 28:20 which is at a remarkable pace of about 4:42 a mile. He did all these while a 19 year-old running for the University of Oregon.

Oregon will be up there in today's NCAA meet. In Eugene, babies are teethed on stopwatches, and at most any hour from dawn to until dusk, the streets are jammed with joggers, their wheezing in tune with the rumble of passing log trucks, each perhaps pretending for a moment that he is one of Bill Bowerman's (Oregon Track Coach) track stars, such as a Prefontaine.

Prefontaine is a prime example of the kid who was too light for football and too short for basketball. In eighth grade, at less than five feet and 100 pounds, he went out for football and basketball.

It was during a physical education class that "Pre" found the sport he was to excel in. Everyone had to run a mile a day. During the second week, "Pre" finished second and discovered that he loved to run.

Since then, he has developed into probably the best cross country runner in the United States. He is blessed with a cardiovascular system that is so superior to the average human, that it is almost unbelievable. "Pre" took part in the 1972 Olympics, but he didn't fare as well as he had hoped to against the best runners in the world.

Thomas and the entire UMass Cross Country team will be competing against "Pre" and many other great performers. Thomas may not finish ahead of Steve Prefontaine in today's meet, but you know that he'll give it all he's got. When you're running against a man as remarkable as "Pre", all you can do is go out there and run the best race you possibly can.

Gridders Tuned-Up For B.C.

By STEVE CROWE

UMass and Boston College were involved in sparring matches over the weekend in preparation for their anticlimatic bout in Newton this Saturday. UMass had a good turnout; B.C. got sucker-punched.

Last year, when UMass stunned B.C. 28-7 at Alumni Stadium, the Eagles were coming off a 38-26 loss to Penn State and as UMass coach Dick MacPherson said, "they thought they were a good football team and they didn't think we were that good."

"Now," said Coach MacPherson, "they must prove themselves. Not only will they be out to avenge last year's loss to us, but now because they lost to Syracuse (24-13) they have the extra incentive to prove to everyone they're a good team. That loss to Syracuse didn't help us at all."

The UMass defense simply straight-armed the New Hampshire boys like a big kid holding off the futile swings of a determined punk for most of the game. The only time the hometown fans had anything to wave their scarfs and toss beanies over was a 55 yard touchdown on a fullback draw play early in the third quarter.

But the UMass offense, which scored on its first two drives, was left crippled when center, Kevin Moran limped off the field.

That was with 3:45 left in the first quarter for the next 30 minutes of play, UMass could not get back on track. Pennington was intercepted on the very next play (the only time all afternoon), he was sacked three times, and completed only one first down attempt in seven sets of downs.

Finally, with 3:06 to go in the third quarter, Peil Pennington hit Tim Berra for a 44 yd touchdown pass. UMass was now over their shock of losing Moran and began to dominate the match again with freshman Rich Jessamy sprinting 83 yards for a TD on a draw play and then on eight yard TD pass from Pennington to Berra.

The game was characterized by UMass' dependence on the big play. Except for the opening drive which featured Jim Torrance running 6 times for 35 yards and Pennington keeping for 22, it was the big plays like the 83 yard sprint by Jessamy, a 28 yard TD pass to Ed Hajdusek, the 44 yard TD pass to Berra, and a 61 yard pass to Berra setting up the final score, that made up the bulk of the UMass offense.

Tim Berra had a fine day, but unfortunately half his performance was wiped off the record book. He had six receptions for 172 yards, two touchdowns (his 13th and 14th of the year). But his opening 100 yard kickoff return and later 52 yard punt return were called back on clipping violations.

Meanwhile, out at Syracuse, the Orangemen were demoralizing the Boston College Eagles. At about the same time Andy Dutkanitz was kicking a 67 yard punt through the air for UMass. Syracuse (heard over the radio) was letting the air out of the Eagle attack by stopping B.C. star running back Mike Esposito on a 4th and 1 1/2 yard plunge.

Later, after B.C. recovered a Syracuse fumble (their first turnover of the day), B.C. came right back and dropped the ball, too, on the very next play. That was their fourth fumble of the day.

But the crucial blow came when a B.C. 86 yard touchdown pass play was called back on a clipping charge. The clip was made on a player who the receiver (Briggs) had already passed. Thus B.C.'s sparring partner went on to knock the Eagles out of any possible bowl hopes and into an "I'll prove that I'm really good" situation at their Alumni Stadium this Saturday.

INCIDENTALLY: Rich Jessamy, who ran that 83 yard TD play, wound up with 83 net yards in 8 carries...so he went nowhere for seven attempts. It was, however, the most total yards gained for a UMass runner this year. Ed McAleney was the defensive standout for UMass. He was in the backfield most of the afternoon. At one point, he sacked the quarterback three plays in a row...UMass is now (4-2 in the conference) 6-4 overall, thus assuring them of a winning season. UNH finished their season at 4-5.

The UNH crowd of 9035 at Cowell Stadium stayed right to the end of the game, which must have been frustrating for many of them.

UConn won the Yankee Conference championship by tying URI, 7-7. URI's conference record is 4-1-1; UConn finishes at 5-0-1; and is being considered for a Boardwalk Bowl bid, which come out later this week.

The University of Massachusetts football team has a chance to atone for their prior sins this Saturday afternoon against Boston College. The Minutemen should be in a more poised frame of mind following last Saturday's adventures at Cowell Stadium. To replay the brilliance of Pennington, Berra, and the electricity of rookie Rich Jessamy, join Marty Kelley and Earle Barroll for all the action at the Bluewall TONIGHT at 7:30 prior to Monday night football for the UMass-New Hampshire replay.

Jack & Julius

Jack Leaman used to get all sorts of phone calls from all over the ABA where Julius Erving would be appearing. "When he first left here," said Leaman, "they figured I'd be controversial. They figured I'd be mad."

"But, heck, one day I was figuring it out," he said. "And here was Julius making in four years what a guy named Leaman would make in 38. I think I'd leave on those odds."

Expectantly the volume of calls has diminished. "Since Julius went to the Nets," said Leaman, "I've received only one call and that was for films of him while he was in college."

Leaman still gets to speak with Erving quite frequently considering the busy schedules both maintain. The coach also speaks a great deal with "75% of Erving's success", his mother.

When you mention Erving to Leaman the coach immediately lights up. And why not. At Springfield earlier in the fall when the Nets were in town for a game with the Virginia Squires Leaman came into the Civic Center while Erving was warming up. They embraced at center court.

"He's the last hope of the ABA for parity with the NBA," said an always proud Leaman. "Bringing him to New York was great for him as far as getting publicity was concerned. But realistically it was a business move to keep the league healthy."

Regardless of the motives, the fact remains with me that publicity alone will not predicate the effectiveness of the merger. Rather the ability of the ABA to play the Erving game, which involves a simple and basic concept of basketball --- the game of fundamentals.

Behind all the Erving gyrations and stories of him taking dollar bills off the top of a backboard and leaving change, there is and will always be the sound game of basketball he learned here at UMass. That's why he's so far ahead of the rest.

"He learned self discipline while he was here," said Leaman. "He learned how to move without the basketball. He learned the values of conditioning and what it was like to be a team player."

And so while the ABA continues to stockpile the free-wrist and over-the-rim generation players; the "Mad Bombers", the Dwight Lamars who play only "O"; the Genesis for merger will remain only a thought. Until the ABA produces the sound-multi-versatile players a la Erving (and they're trying with the application of former NBA veterans in their coaching ranks) the ABA can stay where it is, regardless of the Erving publicity gimmick.

"I've seen players who can shoot better than Julius," said Leaman. "I've seen guys who can pass the ball better. There are some who can rebound a little bit better. But there is no one in that league and very few in the NBA who can do all the things as well as Julius can." That includes defense.

Did Leaman realize what he had when Julius was here? "We thought he'd be good when we first saw him," he said. "He had the flexibility, the quickness and the jumping ability. But we never thought he'd be doing it so quick. Actually he was never challenged while he was here on the court."

In those days while Erving had all the tools to deal with anyone in the country (including you Sydney Wicks and Artis Gilmore freaks) he still didn't have the backing he needed outside of New England. His exposure was practically nil. His competition likewise.

"The difference between the pros and college basketball is like night and day," he told me at Springfield. "The play is wide open here which allows all the players to utilize their skills (vs. the college rules that cramped his style). In college ball maybe two players can do it and the rest are fringe players, but in the pros everybody can do it out there."

No one does it like the Dr. As his former high school coach and now assistant here at UMass Ray Wilson says, "I was the smartest one of all. All I did was get out of the way and watch the show."

Students, Workers Arrested

Demonstrators Held In Athens Stadium

By PHILIP DOPOULOS
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP)-Soldiers and troops rounded up scores of youths and workers in a soccer stadium Monday following student-led riots that left 11 persons dead and at least 148 persons injured.

Those apprehended-half of them construction workers and local union leaders, according to one high official-were taken to the stadium for questioning, then released or taken to jails.

The number jailed was undisclosed.

The arrests appeared to indicate students won at least some support from workers in their bid last week to topple the army-backed regime led by President George Papadopoulos.

Troops and tanks patrolled in Greece's three largest cities-Athens, Salonica and Patras-enforcing the martial law declared Saturday after bloody clashes between police, troops and dissidents.

Army tanks smashed into the Athens Polytechnic Institute yard early Saturday to end a sit-in. The campus was still littered Monday with broken chairs, socks, shoes, blankets, steel pipes, wooden clubs and broken bottles.

Four construction workers in their 20's convicted of violating a ban on gatherings of five or more people were each sentenced to four years in jail. A fifth man was acquitted and set free.

The construction workers were politically active before the coup but since then have been quiet. They have won hefty pay increases to as much as $30 a day, one of the highest wage scales in Greece.

The Federation of Builders and Related Trades of Greece condemned the Polytechnic incidents of Friday and claimed the students had been led astray "by extremist elements."

The federation said its 250,000 members had nothing to do with the disturbances.

The undersecretary to the premier, Spyridon Zournatzis, told journalists Sunday night that some politicians had acted "irresponsibly." He was referring chiefly to statements made in support of the student cause Friday by Former Premier Panayotis Canellopoulos.

On Monday, Canellopoulos said the government was insulting "those oppressed for so many years and who desire freedom" by calling them anarchists.

He called for a government of national unity to re-establish calm and "prepare the country for a normal transition to democracy."

Salonica University was reopened Monday, but Patras University and colleges in Athens have been closed indefinitely following the bloody disturbances at Athens Polytechnic Institute.

Zournatzis said that 866 persons including 150 women had been taken into custody during the disturbances.

Rep. Collins Plans Controls For Nuclear Power Plants

By MARK CITRON

AMHERST----A state representative wants to spread the tax benefits from $1.3-billion nuclear power plants to several towns that would share the "accident risk".

State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, announced Sunday he is preparing legislation that will affect the Northeast Utilities if it decides to erect twin nuclear plants in Montague. The utility has said it will decide between Montague and Middletown, Conn., around the first of the year.

Collins' legislation would:

--Spread the tax revenues to all communities that could be affected by the plant, the amounts to be determined by an independent study;

--Establish minimum safety requirements on storage and transportation of nuclear wastes, nuclear plant construction, and the core cooling systems of nuclear plants.

His announcement came on the heels of a report from Northeast Utilities that it has taken a buy-sell option on 1,500 acres at Montague.

In contrast to the Ralph Nader group that intends to use Massachusetts as a spearhead in a national moratorium drive on all nuclear plants, Collins said he would rather define safety standards and then work with all interested parties to see the standards met.

Collins felt that while President Nixon's energy statement called for the speeding up of nuclear power development, any position that reduces public hearings on nuclear plants is "irresponsible", and that he plans not to allow nuclear plants unless certain safety guarantees can be met.

"I don't think the utilities are trying to blackmail people into accepting nuclear plants because of the energy crisis," said Collins, "but up to this point the people of Massachusetts haven't been given the full story from the utilities."

David R. Inglis of the UMass Physics department and past chairman of the Federation of American Scientists said, "People who build nuclear power plants claim there is no danger, but there have been serious accidents. We don't know that one of these plants won't have a catastrophic accident. If one did happen, thousands would die."

Allan Hoffman, also of the UMass Physics department and science advisor to the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution said that the public has a right to demand nuclear power be safe, but that nuclear safety programs have not been handled as well as they should.

"All the taxes from the plant go back to Montague, but the risks go beyond Montague," he continued. Montague might not be so desirous of the plant without the tax revenues."

Robert Walker of the Montague Nuclear Concerned Group said he was surprised a lot of Montague people are remaining neutral on the plant, but "it's better than them being for the plant just because of the lowered tax rate," he said.

Bermuda Triangle: Limbo Of The Lost

"Not From This World..."

By DEB GOGUEN

"Knowing is believing about U.F.O.'s," stated John Wallace Spencer, author of the book "Limbo of the Lost" and member of the National Investigation Commission on Aerial Phenomenon, during his speech in the Student Union Ballroom last night about Unidentified Flying Objects.

This lecture was the final one of the Believe It or Not series sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Spencer gave many detailed accounts of mysterious disappearances of ships and planes in the Bermuda Triangle, which was the subject of his book. He told of the disappearance of five fighter planes in 1945, three commercial airliners in 1948, 39 crew members of a ship in 1972 and many other such occurrences which have not been solved by numerous boards of inquiries.

"All seamen know about the Bermuda Triangle," maintained Spencer. "These events have been going on for at least 100 years. It's nothing new." He then added, "By the way, is anybody planning a trip to Bermuda?"

He acknowledged that the U.S. government does not officially recognize the existence of U.F.O.'s because of the lack of what it calls positive proof, but a Public Information Officer for the Coast Guard who was in the audience explained that when people called to inquire about the Bermuda Triangle, his bureau usually advised them to read Spencer's book, "Limbo of the Lost".

At one point, Spencer asked the audience in the crowded Student Union Ballroom to raise their hands if they had ever seen what they honestly believed to be a U.F.O., and about one-fifth of the people present responded by raising their hands. When he asked how many of these people had reported sighting a U.F.O., only three raised their hands.

He commented that in a peak year about 1500 to 2000 sightings are reported, but that there are normally only about 500 sightings within a given year. Since this is a peak year, he maintains, about all you have to do is to watch the sky during three good clear nights, and in the space of that time you will probably sight a U.F.O.

In December of this year, he added, there will be a telephone number that anyone can call from anywhere in the country to report U.F.O. activity and an investigator will be sent to the spot within a few hours.

Spencer claims that he is "a down core realist" but he also states that after studying U.F.O. reports, "we realize rather quickly that these things are not from this world".

In Rebuttal

By MIKE KNEELAND

John Spencer made some interesting observations. No doubt there have been some peculiar incidents in what he calls the Bermuda Triangle. But he carried his point to the extreme in an attempt to convert the audience's non-believers.

Spencer failed to consider the following:

--That the waters off Cape Hatteras, N.C. are known by mariners to be among the most treacherous waters to sail. Even in calm weather, nasty seas are not uncommon.

--That many accidents at sea happen so quickly that the mariners go down with the ship before they can don lifejackets.

--Any fortunate mariners who escape with their lifejackets will probably be eaten by sharks. There will be no sign of survivors. The ship's debris may scatter quickly and this debris is virtually impossible to sight from the air.

--That the Coast Guard, as Spencer maintains, has never attempted to "cover-up" a mysterious incident at sea in order to mislead the public. A few marine board of investigations are kept secret by the Coast Guard as a matter of law, not their personal preference.

The objections could continue but the point has been made. Surely the public must approach such phenomenon with an objective mind. But they shouldn't be misled by exaggerations.

About Mr. Spencer...

By JO ANN DOMINICK

"In the last ten years, Lloyds of London has paid millions out on insurance to 60 ships and 987 people in accidents occuring at sea, which had no explanation." He spoke in an MDC interview yesterday through the DVP 'Believe It or Not' Series.

A former investigator for the National Investigation Committee on Aerial Phenomena, Spencer's book deals with a factual account of the area known as the Bermuda Triangle which he terms "Limbo of the Lost."

Spencer disputed the concept of the so-called "Bermuda Triangle". "There is no such thing as the Bermuda triangle. It is a romantic name given by the original researcher. The actual area is not the shape of a triangle at all. It is 380,000 square miles and extends from Cape Maine, New Jersey due east on the edge of the Continental shelf, down around the shelf, adjacent to Bermuda, arches around it, goes back to the Gulf of Mexico, encompasses the entire area, and that's the "limbo" area." he said.

Spencer also spent ten years and three months in the Air Force in public relations at the Sioux City Air Base where "My job was to make the Air Force look good in the eye of the public when UFO's were involved" he said.

"I'd give the Air Force the line that it was a weather balloon or anything else the press would believe. The whole idea of my saying these things was funny since I believed in UFO's since I was 16."

"It was purely accidental that I began to investigate the area of the "Limbo of the Lost". I was on a radio program and a woman called up to ask about the Bermuda Triangle saying she had read an article about the Triangle. After reading the six page article, I became interested and began to investigate on my own. I have enough information to fill the Encyclopedia Britanica." he said.

In his investigatory work, he uses Armed Service Records and reports from insurance companies and eye witnesses.

"The others spending the most time investigating are the Coast Guard and insurance companies because of the excess amount of money they lose." said Spencer.

"I definitely believe that UFO's are connected with the losses in the area of the "Limbo of the Lost". The number of UFO's reported in that area is greater than any sea area. Ships captains sighting UFO's report seeing them go into and then under the water, doing this only in the "Limbo of the Lost" area." said Spencer.

One of the episodes of the "Limbo of the Lost" was the unexplained disappearance of six Navy planes and the loss of 27 persons on Dec. 5, 1945, in calm weather off the coast of Florida. The Navy released a statement saying "It is the darkest investigation in the annals of Naval history, we are simply baffled by the loss."

Cambodians Bomb Presidential Palace

by MATT FRANJOLA
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH (AP) - The palace compound of Cambodian President Lon Nol was bombed Monday for the second time in nine months by one of his own fighter planes, but he and his family were reported unharmed.

Three other persons were killed and 10 injured, witnesses said.

Cambodian guards in bunkers and at the U.S. Embassy about 300 yards away fired wildly in all directions. Young girls strolling on the sidewalk in front of the embassy, screamed and ran when the firing broke out.

The bombs were dropped by a Cambodian air force fighter on a bombing mission to Phnom Penh's southern perimeter, 10 miles south of the capital, military sources at Cambodian headquarters said.

The informants said the pilot, Lt. Pech Lim Kuong, radioed during his mission that his bombs would not release. He broke away from his formation, heading for the palace as the other planes prepared to land, they added.

Most witnesses said four bombs were dropped around the palace grounds, but only two explosions were heard. The Cambodian national radio said Lon Nol was uninjured but did not say where he was at the time of the attack.

There was no word on the pilot's whereabouts or the reasons for the bombing. His plane flew low after dropping its last bomb and then headed east, said antiaircraft gunners stationed around the palace.

A large conference hall inside the presidential compound was hit in the first explosion. The next followed a minute later.

Last March 17, a renegade Cambodian air force officer dropped two bombs in the vicinity of the presidential palace, striking a barracks compound nearby and killing 36 persons and injuring dozens more.

Lon Nol was not in the palace at the time.

The pilot flew his stolen plane to Communist-held territory. A month later, he appeared in Peking.

In other Cambodian action, Khmer Rouge ground attacks declined but insurgent shelling increased on Kompong Tralach and Trapeang Trey Ros villages, 41 miles north of the capital on Highway 5, military sources said.

The fighter planes were called in to bomb a Khmer Rouge concentration on Highway 5 north of Sala Lek Pram, 39 miles north of Phnom Penh. No further details were known. Insurgent forces occupy a five-mile section of the highway beginning two miles north of Sala Lak Pram. The highway has been closed since Sept. 6.

Shelling continued in the insurgent attack of three government positions at Talat, 41 miles west-southwest of Phnom Penh on Highway 4, the capital's route to the seaport at Kompong Som.

How Much Will Vets Get?

By WILLIAM DICKE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vietnam veterans probably will receive an increase this year in educational benefits, but it won't be as much as expected, says the chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee.

Rep. William Jennings Bryan Dorn, D-S.C., chairman of the committee, says he wants to pare the boost to GI Bill benefits from 13.6 per cent to 8 per cent.

"I have doubts about 13 per cent becoming law — certainly not anytime soon," Dorn said.

"I think that eight per cent is reasonable and can become law."

Dorn said his committee soon will consider a bill raising monthly payments to single veterans attending school from $225 to $250 per month, with proportional increases to other veterans.

The Veterans Administration has opposed any increase but Dorn said in an interview he does not expect President Nixon to veto the smaller increase.

"I think we can get that through if we don't get hung up on 13 per cent and then make an attempt to pass it over an expected veto," he said.

The 13 per cent hike followed an independent study which concluded that Vietnam-era veterans are worse off than their World War II predecessors.

Rep. William F. Walsh of New York, a Republican member of the committee, has reintroduced a companion bill that would add tuition grants to the monthly stipend.

Walsh's bill would pay the amount of a veterans's tuition over $419 per year, with a maximum payment of $600. He said $419 is the average tuition per year at the nation's public two- and four-year colleges.

Dorn has introduced a bill increasing compensation for disabled veterans by 15 per cent and says the committee will hold hearings on this proposal in January.

The Energy Crisis

No More Sunday Drivers?

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress was told Monday that a ban on Sunday driving and closing of public parks to automobiles are steps being considered to help meet the energy problem.

Charles DiBona, the President's special assistant for fuel policies, also said New England and the East Coast could run 50 per cent short of fuels this winter if voluntary and mandatory controls are not quick successes.

DiBona said one of the steps the administration is considering to assure home heating thermostats are set no higher than 68 degrees is an immediate 20 per cent reduction on the deliveries of home heating fuels.

DiBona told a congressional joint economic committee that rationing is being considered seriously and said: "Knocking out Sunday driving is a real possibility."

He said other options include a ban on fuels for private and corporate airplanes and boats and an immediate ban on the use of natural gas to fuel decorative outside gas lamps.

DiBona said a Sunday driving ban would save 660,000 barrels of gasoline a day. The ban may be partial so people could go to church.

A group of more than 80 persons with the help of the Office of Management and Budget is "aggressively" considering a fuel rationing plan, DiBona said.

DiBona said a sufficient supply of fuel is now on hand to permit the nation to continue its normal patterns of energy consumption through December.

He predicted the nation's fuel supply this winter will run about 17 to 18 per cent short, based on a normal winter and continued cutbacks by the Arabs.

He said the shortage will amount to about three million barrels of fuel a day less than are needed. Current mandatory and voluntary restrictions on fuel use and increased U.S. oil production will produce only about 2.35 million barrels a day, he said.

DiBona said a 25 per cent shortage predicted recently by the American Petroleum Institute is based on a more severe winter and less voluntary cooperation than the administration thinks is realistic.

But he said estimates of a shortage of up to 50 per cent for the first quarter of next year, particularly along the Atlantic seaboard and in the Northeast, are realistic if large cuts in the use of fuels don't begin immediately.

DiBona said the United States is taking these steps to increase domestic production or to save petroleum.

-Reopening the naval petroleum reserve at Elk Hills, Calif., with an estimated yield of 160,000 barrels a day.

-Increasing pumping in certain American oil fields with an estimated increased yield of up to 250,000 barrels a day.

-The identification of 46 electric generating plants across the country that could be converted from oil to coal at a savings of up to 430,000 barrels a day.

Senate Passes Bill That OKs Rationing

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A bill declaring a one-year nationwide fuel emergency passed the Senate Monday and was sent to the House.

The bill authorizes, but does not require, rationing.

The House cannot take the bill up until at least Nov. 26, the day it returns from its Thanksgiving recess.

The Senate deleted a provision to tap the nation's naval petroleum reserves but rejected most other amendments, including one its sponsors said would save fuel by prohibiting busing school children for racial balance.

Another amendment adopted would permit Congress to terminate the emergency after six months, if it decides it is no longer needed.

The bill would require the President to set up a system of fuel rationing within 15 days, although it would be up to him when or whether to put it into effect. Nixon has said he hopes to avoid rationing.

The Senate voted 48 to 39 to table an amendment offered by Sen. Jesse C. Helms, R-N.C., to ban the busing of school children for desegregation purposes.

Rep. Brock Adams, D-Wash., issued a statement on the bill, saying "I have grave doubts about giving the President a free hand to continue pursuing his policies of making the average American bear the full burden of inflation and the energy shortage." He said the measure would "enrich the wealthy fuel interests."

Helms said his antibusing amendment would save substantial amounts of fuel which in many cases he said is used to transport a few pupils over long distances.

"Why keep busing in effect when we are talking about closing schools and limiting the hours of schools?" he asked.

German, Danish Motorists "Grounded"

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The car-loving nations of Germany and Denmark have banned Sunday pleasure driving because of the Arab oil squeeze in Europe.

The orders issued Monday made the Germans and the Danes the third and fourth nations of European motorists, after the Dutch and the Belgians, to be deprived of their Sunday drives in a growing effort to economize on petroleum products.

West Germany also ordered tougher speed limits already in force in Denmark and Belgium to save scarce fuel.

Bonn urged Germans to lower room temperatures and save heating oil. The Danish government ordered a 25 per cent cutback in heating oil sales and a curb on electricity use that will darken Christmas street lighting.

Britain asked motorists to reduce weekend driving voluntarily and slow down to less than 50 miles per hour. London said it will order oil companies to cut by 10 per cent deliveries of all main oil products.

Scandinavian Airlines System suspended its daily Stockholm-New York flight from Wednesday until Dec. 12.

Holland, totally cut off from Arab oil, urged its Common Market partners to share their oil with the Dutch or face a cutback in Dutch natural gas deliveries. Common Market foreign ministers meet Tuesday in Copenhagen to discuss the situation.

The European moves to further save oil came despite Sunday's announcement by Arab oil countries meeting in Vienna that they will give eight of the nine Common Market members a one-month exemption from a planned 5 per cent monthly oil cutback.

The 10 Arab oil-exporting states said their slight relaxation, for December only, was "in appreciation" of the Common Market stand on the Middle East. They excluded Holland, which is under a total oil embargo for a Middle East policy seen by the Arabs as pro-Israeli.

The total blockade against the United States and Holland will continue and the planned 5 per cent cutback in January will apply to all countries, the Arab oil states have said.

The fuel-saving moves by Germany and Denmark came after earlier steps in which Belgium and Holland banned Sunday pleasure driving.

IF YOU WISH TO SUBMIT A PROPOSAL TO THE BUDGETS COMMITTEE YOU MUST FIRST PICK UP A "BUDGETS INFORMATION PACKET" IN THE STUDENT SENATE OFFICE, ROOM 420 STUDENT UNION.

THE DEADLINE FOR SUBMITTING PROPOSALS TO THE COMMITTEE IS FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1973, at 5:00 p.m., in the student senate office.

For more information, call the Student Senate Office at 545-0342.

Your Head

Turned Off And Turning On

By DR.'S ANDREW W. McCASHIN and STEPHEN M. KLEIN

Q. What does it mean when someone is really turned on at the beginning of a relationship but when they get the other person to like them they lose interest?

A. It sounds like that "someone" mostly likes seduction.

Q. Isn't masturbation one of the best ways of relieving emotional tension?

A. No, viewing masturbation this way denies the fact that it's primarily a means to experience sexual pleasure.

Q. Don't people have to transcend and compromise their personal motivations in order to achieve good communication in a relationship?

A. You seem to be saying in an abstract way that you are having an argument with your partner. It would be more useful if you looked at the specifics involved.

Q. You've written that "growing-up" means emotionally rejecting your parents. My mother is the best friend I have. Am I supposed to reject her?

A. Certainly not on our account.

Q. I'm really frustrated. I'm having a "platonic" relationship but I'd like it to be more than that. How can I do it without being rejected?

A. You will have to give up the pretense of "just being friends". Of course this will involve choosing between frustration and the anxiety of possible rejection. There are no guarantees.

Q. My roommate is always trying to get me to wrestle with her. Lately it has been getting out of hand and I'm getting pretty bruised up. Should I get a single room?

A. A single room might help but it's likely that your bruising confrontations will continue on a home and away basis unless you make it clear to your athletic cohort that you are retiring from action and that she should pursue her ambitions at the gym.

Q. I experience strange sensations when I begin to drift off to sleep at night. Because of this I've been taking a long time to go to sleep. Do I have a sleep disorder?

A. You are experiencing the natural hypnogogic trance-like state that preceeds sleep. Anxiety about this "altered state" of consciousness and the loss of control that is involved keeps many people awake. Instead of worrying, float through it, enjoy the experience and you will fall asleep.

A number of legislative bills are presently in committee in the House and Senate to improve veterans benefits. Some of the educational provisions are: extension of the eight-year eligibility period; cost of living increase for veterans basic entitlement; extension of the entitlement period beyond 36 months; direct student loan program for veterans; and direct payment to institutions. To hasten these bills out of committee and to improve their chances of passage, vets, students, and faculty are urged to write their Congressman endorsing passage of bills to raise Vietnam era veterans benefits to a level at least comparable to those enjoyed by their counterparts from WW II and Korea.....and their adversaries from North Vietnam.

Newt-Think

By RUSS SETHER

Men, I ask, do you ever sit there and wonder whether you should buy her a drink or let her get it herself? And women, do you ever sit there after finishing a drink, in subdued apprehension because you can't decide if you should get yourself another or wait until he buys you one?

What I mean to say is that lately, being within the last hundred years, we as human populace seem to regard death and dying with more apprehension and anticipation than we ever feel towards birth. People dying in the desert, in the jungles, dying off of towers, down elevator shafts, and death in the family in the form of impeachment. We think and talk and wait for death to come, spending most of our time thinking of ways not to think about it, and "doing our best to deny it".

What comes virtually unnoticed within the frame of our self-indulged vision is the miracle of Birth. There is really nothing miraculous about Death. As children we could watch for the first time a mother give birth to her kittens...seeing them mysteriously squeeze out into the world one by one like tootsie-rolls shining with suck, or a calf emerge frightening our young minds because we weren't quite sure that it would walk...until majestically by some occult phenomenon it wabbles its way to its feet and begins a life...Life from Life...and as children we saw Birth as a miracle. Unexplained and beautiful because it was. Then we were spared the superficial explanations of it all: scientific, philosophic, and theologic. It was something we could barely think about without at times gazing unknowingly at the sky.

I believe Birth can only be comprehended in terms of the Spiritual, the Theosophical. I derive this perception out of the knowledge that Death, as we know it, is the result of the material world....technology, literature, theurgy, and Churchianity....and that Birth is a source and emanation of the non-material world....i.e. The Deity, Nature, the Supernatural, and the Occult. We "understand" science, technology, and the other so-called objectivist doctrines concerning creation, but we only understand them on the physical plane, a material interpretation. On the other hand, or out of what I prefer to call the "secret knowledge", we are historically astounded and emotionally swept up in awe by what we cannot define, explain, or determine on the Spiritual plane.

This is because through time and "the ages" we, individually and collectively, have unconsciously archived our perceptions of the Spiritual world away from our technological consciousness, therefore in a sense, filing such "data" under a grouping designated as "esoteric", "unscientific", or "unexplained phenomena" according to our sophisticated comprehension of the material world.

Birth does not emerge out of the material, whereas Death does. This material world is irrelevant, therefore Death and dying are existentially irrelevant. Birth is our only direct link with the Spiritual, and therefore the Deity, and should exist as the center point of all our lifelong considerations. "Only those who foolishly concern themselves with death, are the ones who die." (Mercier).

Think of Birth, and touch Life. Life from the Living. Miraculous. Beautiful. Real. Alive. Think about it....getting born, witnessing Birth, and being Alive! We need not concern ourselves with Death, for thinking so will tear a human down. Preoccupation with the reality and splendor of Birth will insure a lifelong renewal of body, mind and spirit.

Don't wait around for someone to buy you a drink, and at the same time, don't be uptight about buying one for a friend. The attraction may be physical, but the giving, whether to yourself or to others, can only be soulfully rewarding.

Russ Sether is the founder of the Theosophical Society of Newtopia.

Keep Moe Away

As part of my new role as Mr. Clean — the seeker of prestilent conspiracies at large on this University Community, it is my duty as an investigative reporter to expose another malicious organization that had infiltrated UMass. This organization, though very active and very much alive to the especially observant, is a secret one not evident to the disinclined. Yes this Committee To Keep Moe Away has been active in just that regard, that despite the tremendous pressure to bring Moe Howard to UMass in the last few weeks, it has not been done. However, thanks to an informant with whom I conversed yesterday, we are ready to blow the lid open on this sordid affair. Keeping his indentity a secret is a necessity for his life would be in danger otherwise.

Z.N.: "How long has the Committee To Keep Moe Away been active?

Mr. X.: "In its present form, the Committee has been together for six months.

Z.N.: "Tell me, Mr. X, why do you want to keep Moe Howard away?

Mr. X.: "Well, the way we see it is that Moe Howard and the Three Stooges are part of the One World Conspiracy for Foolery and Amusement, the pinko OWCFA whose base of organization is the United Nations Security Council. We believe that by keeping people like Moe Howard from the public eye, the world would keep to its serious business, and the democracy of the little guy that is sacred in this country would be preserved."

Z.N.: "Do you mean to say you are against laughter. What about Spiro Agnew? What about King Dick and Missing Tapes? What about the Boston Red Sox? Thse are truly laughible and farcical.

Mr. X.: "Aha! But they're not. If you really think about them long and hard enough, your initial laughter will turn into anguish and heart rendering tears. Moe Howard on the other hand is always funny!"

Z.N.: "I see your point. Tell me, who exactly is running the Committee?"

Mr. X.: "The National Office is run out of Philadelphia, the Great Leader himself being Mayor Frank Rizzo with his Pigs as accomplices. There are district and regional leaders that report directly to him. Here on this campus Mr. Big is Dr. Heinrich Nimbletree of the School of Abnormal Psychology."

Z.N.: "How much exactly has the Committee infiltrated UMass?"

Mr. X.: "We have infiltrated the area to the point of saturation. We have agents in every dorm, fraternity, sorority, R.S.O. group. We have a block of votes in the Student, Graduate and Faculty Senates, people in Whitmore, ladies in the Dining Commons and even two elevators in the Library — all belonging to the Committee. They report to Dr. Nimbletree's secret office in the bell tower at the Old Chapel."

Z.N.: "How effective has the Committee been?"

Mr. X.: "Very effective, very effective indeed. You recall the flood of mail the OWCFA flooded the presses with? Well we first diverted attention away from Moe Howard with letters for other speakers, and then we stifled our opposition completely. You don't see hear any more about it, do you?"

Z.N.: "Frankly, no!"

Mr. X.: "Our next step was to infiltrate the Distinguished Visitors Program with our agents and to keep it from acting on Moe Howard, which it has been successful in avoiding, despite tremendous pressure. And then together with our net of people everywhere, we have returned UMass into what it likes so well — a hotbed of Apathy where no one gives a shit about anything. And finally, for those few so inclined for agitation, we engineered other strikes and controversies. We had the energy crisis trumped up and we set up the defeat of the Faculty Union."

Z.N.: "Why the defeat of the Faculty Union?"

Mr. X.: "Simple the Union was for Moe Howard. This of course is consistent with their philosophy that education is a joke."

Z.N.: "Wow! I never knew that. Tell me Mr. X, as a final question, why did you defect?"

Mr. X.: "Its simple. I'm defecting because I'm convinced that life here is sad enough and that UMass deserved the visitation of a true clown, not any ole stooge. How about Ron Ziegler?"

The War Is Not Over

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

"Sing! Let us sing out,
Sing out so that our hearts may burst into flame and our burning blood may finally melt these chains.
So that in the depth of the blackest night
The sun forever shines." — song from Con Son Prison

Eyewitness accounts in south Vietnam report a normal early-morning occurence of no-knock raids which are carried out by thousands of police as a standard operating procedure of the Thieu regime. Warrants are not used and explanations are not given by the US-funded intruders of the Vietnamese night. One checks under the bed, in the bathroom, and rifles papers, while the other demands identification from the American journalist who is staying in a modest room within a large apartment house. At the break of dawn, uniformed, sunglassed police is the street-corner rule, who (in order not to be cheated out of spreading darkness) mechanically stop motorists and check their I.D. cards which are required by decree and must be carried at all times. Each is plugged into a dull metalic brain. This computer currently houses over 11 million bio-dossiers for all Vietnamese over 15. Whether by sunlight, moonlight or no ight, the Vietnamese are not as fortunate as our American journalist. They are arrested at anytime and in anyspace — home, workplace, school, market....

What the police call interrogation of suspects (the time between arrest and imprisonment) the prisoners call torture. Fred Branfman, Director of the Indochina Resource Center in Washington and the author of Voices from the Plain of Jars, spent many years in Indochina, and shares part of his experience in December's Ramparts Magazine.

Trial is held in a fashion one would expect from Thieu. Five military men are the judges. There is no jury. Should the victim attempt a defense, any judge present will rant and rave about the defendant's insubordination. In south Vietnam, the military is supreme. Case closed.

The prison system includes over 1,000 structures financed with American tax dollars. (Washington supplies Thieu, Inc. 90 percent of Saigon's budget overall.) That includes the abominable Tiger Cages, built by American Korporations, and the caustic lime that's thrown on men, women and children as a "disciplinary measure". The police and security force numbers about 300,000. Amnesty International conservatively estimates that south Vietnam has 100,000 political detainees. A truer estimate doubles that figure. Many political prisoners were taken during U.S. Army operations. Wholesale arrests of villagers were not infrequent. And the beat goes on....

The regime claims in its official "White Paper" on prisons that "Periodically...the International Red Cross send inspection teams which visit the centers and subsequently submit reports about their respective conditions." Fred Branfman visited the International Red Cross building in Saigon on July 3. he was given a press release which states in part: "Because of the restrictions imposed by the government of Saigon on the visits of its delegates in the places of civilian detention...(the Red Cross) decided in March 1972 to suspend these visits."

The Paris Accords are being flagrantly violated by the barbaric Saigon government through its use of torture and imprisonment of peasants, priests, teachers and doctors, and the U.S. has donated $150. million plus towards this end. Senator Kennedy uncovered the Pentagon plan that would funnel an additional $14.8 million for that purpose if approved by Congress. Thieu also has what may be called cash reserves, at our expense, on tap. His Army will be the recipient of a $140. million grant, courtesy of Food for Peace, which is a small part of the $200,000,000-$1,200,000,000 package plan. (Ever wonder where INFLATION comes from?) (Energy crisis?)

On the war front, Thieu regime planes — courtesy of Nixon — bombed a town on the Cambodian border. Last weekend's attack devastated a hospital among other buildings, and killed and wounded an undetermined number of civilians. Meanwhile, Hanoi has accused the U.S. of illegally shipping arms to south Vietnam in large quantities, illegally sending reconnaissance flights over North Vietna, AND THREATENING TO RESUME BOMBING OF THE NORTH. Moneywise, the U.S. Administration continued to extend MILITARY aid of more than $3,000,000,000 to the Saigon Administration in the 1973-1974 fiscal year. Apparently, the "cease-fire" is being crudely and systematically violated by both Washington and Saigon.

"People are tired of the war now. They don't want to think about it anymore. They want it to be over." The Senatorial aide who said that a short time ago, was the one who had drawn up the first stop-the-bombing amendment back in March of 1971. He said his Senator was not interested in doing something on political prisoners now. But the war is NOT over.

Contact your congressional representative now! Ask for a deletion of funds for Thieu's prison-police system, for "Emergency" Cambodia Nixon requests, and ask that no funds be granted to countries violating the Paris Accords. Say yes to Life....

Letters To The Editor

Pay Without Return

To The Editor:

Every semester when we receive our bill for going to school here, we find a lot of little catagories that buck ($) us to death. For example, parking fees, athletic fees, health fee, and probably the most maligned of all, the Campus Center fee. Most people feel that they pay their 52 dollar or so Campus Center fee and never see the money again. That's not necessarily true.

I think a large part of this feeling, and a general air of apathy on this campus is due to the tact that very few people actually know little, if anything, about such groups as the Concert Committee, RSO, Student Activities, the Distinguished Visitors Program, and the Program Council. Of the Campus Center fee we pay, some of it is returned to us students by way of the Campus Center Program Council. The Council is composed of several committees which are granted sums of money to plan events for the campus.

Concert Committee, DVP, RSO, and Student Activities are separate organizations but do interelate). Hopefully, these are events the students would like to see here. There's no way for the planning committees to know what people want here unless they come to committee meetings and express their ideas. Interests on the Program Council include an Art Committee, a Film Committee, a Recreation Committee, a Special Events Committee, and a Social Committee. In addition, there is a large amount of dough set aside for a Winter Carnival. But we need ideas. When was that last Winter Carnival at UMass that you remember?

The concert situation on this campus is slowly returning to a "restrictedly" normal state. The Concert Committee is responsible for planning large concerts and some small ones, while the Social Committee of the Program Council is primarily concerned with small but musically decent shows.

It seems strange that after such a long drought of music, that only 1/22 of the student body came to see Hathaway; a dance with two decent bands did not sell out, nor did a concert with the Mahavishnu Orchestra. Is it right for a college to sponsor concerts when it can't supply the audience from among its own people?

It's also pretty amazing how people write and complain about the Campus Center fee, yet don't have the time to either write to the committee, work on a committee to help spend the money, or even go to the event. And it doesn't take a heck of alot of time or effort. All it takes is that you come to meetings of the committee of your interest, signing up, and expressing your ideas. The committees are generally so small that everybody is going to be listened to and weighed into planning of events. Notices are put into the Collegian about upcoming meetings, times and places. So what do you say, folks. How about some interest?

In Appreciation

To The Editor:

I would like to commend the UMass bus drivers. They are friendly and courteous. I know they must get tired of answering the same questions, "Where does this bus go?" (even though it is written on the front of the bus), "Where do you stop?", etc. There have been times when a bus driver will pick me up even though I am not quite at the stop, or honk for the bus in front of him or her to wait, so I can make a connection. Greyhound and Peter Pan could certainly take a lesson from these people.

Please Leave

To The Editor:

I am addressing this letter to the four gentlemen who were playing cards at a table in the Blue Wall between 11:45 and 12:10 yesterday (Monday) morning. You had obviously been at the Wall for your lunch break which is fine and dandy but when you finish your meal it would be most considerate of you to leave the area so other hungry people could make use of the tables that are in great demand during the luncheon hours.

If you must persist in playing cards on lunch break then please have the courtesy to retire to one of the many lounging areas in the Campus Center or Student Union. Let the people who have purchased food be able to sit to eat it.

William M. Brophy

Unclear Parallel

To The Editor:

Concerning the "artistic" covers of the Course Description Books —What do gravestones have to do with choosing a course? At first I thought the cover was supposed to depict the buildings in Southwest, and maybe the person who designed the cover feels that Southwest is in fact a gravestone, or that education itself reflects death and depression. Whatever the intent of the designer, I feel that he was attempting to inflict his own opinions upon the Student Body. Death was played with in poor taste. In any event I fail to see the parallel between death and education.

Open Letter To Dr. Gage

Dear Dr. Gage,

The resignation of the Grayson House Residence Director has imposed an unfair and intolerable burden on its residents. It is imperative that a replacement be found as soon as possible. Furthermore we feel that the continued refusal of the Administration to appoint a full time Head of Residence, results from an unrealistic assessment of the needs of the students concerned.

It is unreasonable to expect a part-time residence director to adequately deal with the multitude of problems which arise in a dormitory of this size (320 students). Since the house had it's Head of Residence position taken away three years ago, there has been a noticeable lack of community spirit in Grayson. One only has to look at the other three dorms on Orchard Hill, to see just how much a Head of Residence position means if a house is meant to be something more than a student barracks. To expect a graduate student to administer the business, security, and maintenance of the house is asking quite a bit. But to also expect that person to be involved in house social and cultural activities, as well as personal counselling is totally unreasonable.

No better evidence can be given to verify these contentions, than Graysons inability to maintain a Residence Director. The job has been so demanding that six individuals have filled the position in Grayson House over the past two and one half years. Moreover the last Residence Director was forced to resign because of physical exhaustion, which can undoubtably be attributed to the excessive demands of her duties.

In light of this situation, we hope that you are concerned enough with improving the quality of life in UMass dormitories, to assign a high priority to the appointment of a Head of Residence to Grayson House.

What Would You Do?

To The Editor:

November 14, 1974...Richard Nixon announced today that due to the failure of all present drug control programs he had ordered a legal house by house search for illegal drugs. He further stated that the search would be conducted by locally appointed officials and that no one would be hassled. However the national guard would be called in if necessary. Why? Because it would be effective.

What would you do?

The McNamara House Council was faced with a difficult problem, the disappearance of hundreds of dollars of dorm furniture. They could either purchase new furniture using house funds or conduct a room by room search. They voted for the search. Not because it was right but because it would be effective. The rooms are to be checked between the 16th and 19th of November by members of the house council, "the police may be called if necessary."

This is not meant as a criticism of the House Council, They are hard working people, but this time I don't think they realized what they were doing. I'm asking you to do something they didn't: think about what their dicision means.

What would you do?

Give Us A Call

To Amherst-Northampton Area Tenants:

The Valley Tenant Association has been trying to get in touch with other tenant unions but has not had too much luck because the list we have does not have all the tenant unions in the area.

If you belong to a tenant union or know someone that does belong to one, we'd appreciate it if you would call us and give the name, address, and telephone number of the tenant union. You can reach us by dialing 549-4524. If the line is constantly busy or if there's no answer, don't give up, just try again later.

An Essay On The Elderly

To The Editor:

I hope that in writing this prose composition that I will propagate; to help spread the knowledge, and to instruct and pursuade all of you to share my feelings and opinions through experience, about the world of geriatrics.

After working in nursing homes for almost three years, and functioning, learning, feeling, understanding, and growing, I feel it is necessary to share and reveal a few things that I feel everyone should know.

It seems to me that when we approach the elderly people we are all too likely to be self-conscious and on the defensive, forgetting that it is they that have helped and pleased us, and not we who are trying to please them.

We need to relate to the minds of the old as well as care for and tend to their physical needs. There is a great deal they also have to contribute to us if we would give them half a chance.

Old people do not set out to be mysterious but, rather to reveal mysteries. They do not seek to lock doors against us, but to open them. As people get old, we recognize their physical weaknesses and emotions, but become oblivious to their intellect. Therefore, we are shutting them off and not giving them this chance to open up.

Alot of people preach about the old people needing us, how we should help them, how they need friends at this time in their lives, and how they need to be needed. Well, does anyone ever think about how we need them? That our life styles evolved from their culture; that is their knowledge has helped us to deal with many contemporary problems.

The old people are history in themselves and it is important to let them know how significant they are as a group, generation, or as individuals. How worthy and fulfilled do the old people feel their lives were and how much do they feel needed if we are not even concerned enough to ask?

If we all care so much about this culture we live in today, then we should all be deeply concerned and interested in how it came about. That information is in the past, and the past is right here to learn about.

Thus historical and cultural insights can be found in the minds of the old. We need to engage in more than token interaction with the elderly to gain these insights ourselves.

Support The Palestinian-Arab Struggle

To The Editor:

This letter from the Committee in Defense of the Palestinian Arab Struggle formed by the Arab Student Organization, the Third World Students, the Association of African Students, the Union of Black American Students, the Young Socialist Alliance and the Young Workers League, is mainly to make available to the UMass community a number of facts.

1. The members of the Committee were shocked by the Collegian's biased attitude. Our statement submitted to the Collegian was published Oct. 31 with a whole part missing. At first we thought there was a mistake but we were only too naive. When a member of the Committee went to the Collegian and asked for the original copy he found that a part had been crossed out. He asked about the reason and the answer was that there was not enough space. The crossed out part was very essential to our statement. It ran as follows "The Arab-Jewish friendship is a long tradition which should be preserved and made to flourish. Anti-semitism is a purely Western phenomenon. For example, the Jews in Moslem Spain flourished and had the necessary security to exercise and develop their thought and culture until they were persecuted, from the inquisitions onwards, by the Europeans." We ask in whose interest should a statement stressing Arab-Jewish friendship be crossed out? We asked for a correction. Two days later, there was an apology from the Collegian, the missing part was printed but AGAIN with a missing sentence, which made the statement confusing and meaningless.

2. A number of letters and commentaries from the Zionist point of view, were recently published in the Collegian. The Committee would like to point out to the readers the many falsifications included in them.

a. It was said that the Palestine Liberation Organization did not represent the Palestinian people and that it was a number of terrorist groups joined together. The Palestinian people have an elected National Council which represents them. The different Resistance Organizations (called terrorist groups) constitute the main body of this elected council.

In April, 1973 three Palestinian Resistance leaders were assassinated in their houses in the middle of the night by Israeli guerrillas in Beirut. The response of the Arab people, Palestinian and otherwise, was as follows: big demonstration-funerals filled the streets of all the Arab cities on the same day. In Lebanon alone, one of the smallest Arab countries, more than a quarter of a million people participated in these demonstrations. The masses chanted Palestinian and Arab popular songs, and their slogans stressed the necessity of continuing the struggle and liberating the land. The Palestinian Revolution has changed the refugee camps to revolution camps. There are health and education campaigns. The Palestinian Revolution is a rebirth of the Palestinian people. If it was a terrorist movement why then has it been acknowledged by all liberation movements in the world? Why did Ho Chi Minh and Chairman Mao receive the representatives of the Palestian Revolution? Moshe Dayan, on the other hand, went to South Viet Nam for a period of training! The Palestinian Revolution is a liberation movement whose aim is the survival of the Palestinians not as refugees but as a people.

b. It was said that the Palestinians inside Israel and the occupied territories do not support the Palestinian Resistance. Why then are the people of occupied Gaza subjected to Israeli aggression, terrorism and group punishment? They do not only support the Resistance, they are the Resistance. The Committee would also like to point out that the first resistance against the Israeli colonialist settler-state took place in 1955 when Palestinians inside Israel started a movement called "Al-Ard", "The Earth". The present Resistance Movement which started in 1965 is a continuation of "Al-Ard" Movement inside the state of Israel.

c. Many people talk of Palestinian terrorism. The committee would like to warn the readers not to fall into the racist pitfalls which seem to be everywhere. When the Americans, French or Portuguese subject the African and Asian natives to the worst kinds of torture, the West tends to forget about it. People there also tend to forget that the Israelis killed 250 Palestinians in 1948 in the Deir Yassin Massacre and 48 Palestinian workers in the Massacre of Kafr Kassem. In 1969 Israeli-American phantoms bombed an Egyptian elementary school and a factory during working hours. However, it seems that African and Asian lives do not really count, do they?!

d. There were a number of letters published in the Collegian which went into a very funny sort of debate. The Egyptians are not Africans, these letters said. The Sudanese are not Arabs...etc..The division of Africa into the North of the Sahara and Black Africa is part of the old colonialist game: divide and rule. The Arab peoples, which should not be identified with the Arab governments, are Third World peoples and their struggle is a liberation struggle. Is Israel a Third World country? Is it trying to liberate itself by means of driving the Palestinians out of their land and occupying Egyptian, Syrian and Palestinian territories? Israel is allying itself with the imperialist powers, exporting intelligence experts to the Shah's reactionary government in Iran and supporting the genocide government of South Africa. During this war U.S. planes carrying military supplies to Israel were allowed to land for fueling in only one European country which is Portugal. The significance is obvious and can be easily understood.

e. It was said that the Arab students were numerous on campus. The Arab students are very few. Only 10 Arab students are in this Committee. They are effective not because they are numerous but because they are allied and supported by all progressive powers on campus. The Arab students are Third World students and African students and it is only as such that they are strong and numerous.

3. The Committee, its members have decided, will not go into any more debates. It is a vicious circle and the Zionist and progressive people will never meet. People interested in the Middle East conflict have the library and the works of Zionist leaders such as Herzl, Ben Gurion, Begin...etc. Their books very well show who is the oppressor and who is the oppressed. Also there are the works of progressive Jewish thinkers like Lilienthal and Rodinson who give the perfect example of scholarly objectivity.

The Committee calls upon all people concerned in the Arab-Palestinian struggle for liberation and a just peace in the Middle East to come and join. There will be weekly meetings at 6:00 p.m. every Tuesday in the Campus Center and a number of teach-ins in the five colleges are being planned.

Support the Palestinian-Arab Struggle.

The Agony Of Politics

To The Editor:

Rosenberger said, "I believe Woubishet Adisaw was guilty of a lack of intellectual honesty in his reply to my initial letter." And I plead not guilty. It is true that "reason" that is not expressed with emotion is worth nothing. However, a prophetic statement as "Israel will live on as she always has, long after the voices of her enemies have died in the wind," is in the way of where history is going to be a witness, and the agony of politics is to be unfolded.

I condon my ideas to be referred not as intellectual but native to me only where my nativity fails me I am intellectual as I have appeared to be to Rosenberger. I am glad that Rosenberger has disclosed his innocence by saying, "I know of no instances of Arabs being enslaved by Black Africans." I would like to inform him that in one of the roles of history, in the Axumite kingdom of Ethiopia, being one of many other instances in Afro-Asian history, Arabs had come under Ethiopian domination. Nevertheless, this is besides the point. It is definitely an insult to Blacks in particular to talk about their history as a continuous reflection of the "curse of Ham."

It is ironic that Rosenberger cited the case of Sudan Civil War as an example of the disunity of Arabs and Blacks. I have been in direct contact with the Anna Anna (as southern Sudan Civil War leaders were called) in 1966 and 1967 in the bush, as a teacher.—Philip Adak, a Nuer, Joseph Uteya, an Anuak, to name a couple of the leaders then. One of the main causes of the war according to these civil war celebrities, was the ideological gap created by the American Presbytarian Missionaries before they were expelled from the south, where they had been the educators. I was also in touch with these same missionaries who established themselves at the Ethio-Sudan border in South western part of Ethiopia to run refugee camps along with supplying arms in disguise. At that moment in time the Ethiopian government entertained what the missionaries were conducting since Sudan had been sheltering Eritrean liberationalists of Ethiopia in the North. In the final analysis, Ethiopia and Sudan ironed out their political differences at the expense of driving out the refugees from their respective frontiers. Now we find some of the Anna Anna in Amin's Uganda as mercenaries. And Haile Selassie, Yesteryears public celebrity in this country until he denounced Israel's aggression, despite of his worship of Judea, who is also one of the reactionary (for lack of a better terminology) elements in the politics of the Horn of Africa throws out his wisdom at an opening of a special session of the United Nations Security Council in Addis Ababa by saying:

"Throughout history it has been the inaction of those who could have acted, the indifference of those who should have known better, the silence of the voice of justice when it mattered most, that has made it possible for evil to triumph." (CCT-January 31, 1972).

This is again a mini-illustration of the agony of politics. In western politics, "might" could be "right". In Africa politics is a reality. This was the objective I wanted to point out in my previous letter to the failure of those who did not understand it. Yakubu Gowon of Nigeria had this to say:

"Until Southern Africa is free, the rest of Africa is in bondage. The blacks of Southern Africa are our brothers. We must sink or swim with them." (Boston Globe, November 13, 1973).

And in the same edition Randell Robinson, a member of the Pan African Liberation Committee stated that the North African Arab Nations have over the years contributed generously to the liberation campaigns in the South, realizing the geopolitical and moral implications for all of Africa and increasingly Black Africa perceives the Palestinian struggles in the same light. It is for this and other reasons that the so called, "Third World Entity" or "ordered Anarchists" in anthropoligical jargon, if you wish, support the cause of the Palestinian-Arab struggle. I personally think that Israel is not our enemy, she is not our friend either. But while my own back is itching me, I find it unquestionably difficult to scratch Israel's back. As an African, the jungle in me tells me that I do not have to monkey with Israel. As one of the generals of Persian invaders to ancient Athens boasted about his military might over Athenians and said that Persians shall cover the sky with arrows and block out the sun on Athenians. And an Athenian general answered by saying that Athenians shall fight back under the shadow. This is to say, if everything else fails, the Palestinian-Arabs too could fight it out under the shadow of Israel missiles.

Cook And Economize

Are you interested in some new ideas for stretching your food dollar?

You can learn how to prepare some low-cost, high protein main dishes when the Hampshire County Extension Service presents "Money Saving Main Dishes" in the Berkshire Room, Student Union, University of Massachusetts on Thursday, Nov. 29, 10 - 12 noon, in cooperation with the University Health Services. The program is open to the public and free of charge.

Several meals using soybeans, lentils and split peas will be demonstrated and discussed by Rachel Swicker, Regional Extension Home Economist in foods and nutrition.

Participants will be able to taste the appealing, nutritionally well-balanced money saving meals after the demonstration-discussion. Recipes, menu plans and other bulletins will be available.

Are You A Parasite?

A new course entitled "Concepts of Human Parasitism" will be offered next semester by the Department of Public Health. This course will be most rewarding for people with a science background who are interested in the concepts involved in the spread of human diseases. Selected topics on communicable, chronic and environmentally caused diseases will be discussed for their historical, current and future value. Each selected topic will be discussed in relation to the host-defense mechanisms, how parasites have affected the host (infectivity), what the present status of the host-parasite relationship is and what could happen if the present barriers are broken. The course will be offered in a seminar fashion with guest speakers, Tuesday and Thursday mornings 9:30-10:45.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Persons born on the 7th, 16th, or 25th of any month tend to be introspective, have a desire for perfection, can be moody and often brood about the past. This is especially applicable to individuals born on those dates in July or March. These are the people who become involved in clandestine activities, often work behind the scenes and deal in illusions, law and religion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Caution, patience now are twin allies. Hold off on legal commitments. Look beyond surface indications for hidden meanings. One who spins tales of romance may have ulterior motive. Protect yourself in emotional clinches.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stick to mainstream. Leave sensationalism to others. Display ability to handle responsibility. Older individual could open door of major opportunity. Maintain steady pace. Capricorn, Cancer persons could figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What was smooth emotional ailing could run into a squall. No one promised you a rose garden. Know that and act grown-up. Member of opposite sex tests, wants assurance and would love to be "spoiled." If wise, you won't settle for role which makes you a substitute parent.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't fear revision. Polish your work. Get rid of the superfluous. Tear down for purpose of rebuilding. Get on more solid ground. Don't fool yourself. See situations, individuals as they are, not merely as you with they might be.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on development of ideas. What appears a mere whim could be developed into viable concept. Aquarian is likely to be in picture. Relative who has hunch should be heeded. Be receptive. You get chance for solid advance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Opportunities may be plentiful but you can't be everywhere at once. Know it and don't scatter forces. Money now exhibits way of slipping away. Pull in financial reins. Put stop order on extravagance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may receive unorthodox assignment. Scorpio person could be involved. Feeling of restriction could actually be a test or challenge. Indications point to successful conclusion of efforts. Check with money adviser.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could gain access to privileged information. Key is to analyze. Piece together bits until whole picture emerges. Utilize natural ability to analyze. Gemini, Virgo persons could play prominent roles.

SAGITTARIUS (NOv. 22-Dec. 21): Make peace on domestic front. Check possibility of remodeling. Make home a more comfortable place. Family member does deserve extra consideration. Remember resolution about "nerves." Don't create tense situation out of pique.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Key now is selectivity. See in light of reality. Overcome temptation to romanticize. Pisces, Virgo persons could be in picture. One who holds rein of authority is likely to be confused. Don't cast first stone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What seems far away is closer than might be apparent on surface. Plan ahead for travel, educational project. You could have opportunity tossed in your lap. Be ready and show you can handle pressure.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Finish rather than initiate project. Study Aquarius message. You have chance to get ideas, products before more persons. Money backing could come from one close to you. Dig beneath surface indications.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY many feel you are "two persons." Means you don't always know your own mind and you show it. You are sensitive, basically truthful and abhor deceit. Persons born under Cancer and Capricorn are drawn into your sphere. Domestic adjustment made this year will be rid of burden in December.

Namath: Flair For Dramatic

By ALEX SACHARE
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Namath returned to the football wars Sunday and showed that his flair for the dramatic remains as strong as ever.

Relegated to the sidelines with a separated shoulder the past seven weeks, Namath came off the bench in the closing minutes at Cincinnati and moved the New York Jets the length of the field before being stopped by the Bengals' defense — and the clock — just one foot shy of a game-tying touchdown.

Even though the story-book comeback fell short and Cincinnati won 20-14, Namath proved he remains the most magnetic force in the game.

"Man, the things he can do when he's in there," said Bill Bergey, the middle linebacker and leader of the Bengals' defense, shaking his head in admiration.

"I've got to hand it to Namath," added Paul Brown, the Bengals' astute coach. "It's a rare quarterback who can throw time after time and take his team right down the field."

Jets Coach Weeb Ewbank said he did not want to use his fragile passer, who separated his shoulder in the second game of the season. But starting quarterback Al Woodall was knocked out of the game after being kicked in the head, leaving rookie Bill Demory as the only other quarterback.

Namath — who came out of the game with no ill effects and is expected to start next week against Atlanta — completed consecutive passes of 21, 16 and 31 yards to move the Jets from their 21 to the Bengals' 11.

He completed two more passes, both to tight end Rich Caster — but Caster was ruled out of bounds outside the end zone on the first, and was tackled short of the goal line on the second.

Caster contended he was in the end zone both times and a TD should have been allowed.

After Caster's second near TD, the Jets had the ball inside the one. A running play failed and Namath tried to get off another play with five seconds left, but penalty flags were dropped as the gun sounded.

The referees said the penalty was against the Jets for illegal procedure, and that the game was over.

Amidst the confusion, Bergey ran over to Namath after the game and hugged him. Why?

"Because it was such a great game, and, well, he's such a great competitor."

Dolphins Clincher Was "Expected"

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Dolphins had clinched the American Football Conference East Division title and a spot in the playoffs, but you couldn't tell it in the dressing room.

"This place is like a morgue," Dolphin linebacker Nick Buoniconti as the Dolphins dressed at Buffalo's Erie County Stadium and prepared to return to Miami after shutting out the Buffalo Bills 17-0 Sunday.

No one was splashing champagne, no one was turning cartwheels, and no one seemed particularly excited that the world champion Dolphins had assured themselves another shot at reaching the Super Bowl.

"It's just another of those games," said running back Mercury Morris. "This puts us through Phase 1. Now we've got to get ready for Phase 2 in a three-phase pattern — the playoffs and then the Super Bowl."

The Dolphins clinched their divisional championship with a 9-1 record, and wide receiver Paul Warfield commented matter-of-factly that winning that title was "something we expected to do."

Many of the players were thinking about Thursday's battle against the Dallas Cowboys.

"When I got to the locker room I was looking for champagne, but I didn't hear any corks popping," said running back Larry Csonka. "Just as well. We've got to get ready for Dallas right away, anyway."

"You can bet Coach Don Shula is not relaxing just because we got the division clinched. He'll be working us hard in practice tomorrow," Csonka added.

But if Csonka didn't mind the lack of champagne in the locker room — where all alcoholic beverages are banned by National Football League rules — defensive tackle Manny Fernadez was a little irked.

"Baseball players can have beer in the locker room after every game. But you see, we're animals. We can't cope with alcohol," he said. "We go through four years of college to get in the pros, but we can't be trusted with alcoholic beverages. They're afraid we migh say something to the press. What they don't realize is we say it anyway."

Penn State Still Leads In Lambert Voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Penn State, en route to the Orange Bowl after a 49-10 rout of Ohio University last Saturday, has the Lambert Trophy wrapped up for the third straight year — if the Nittany Lions can get past Pitt this weekend.

Penn State, 10-0, received all eight first-place votes in the weekly balloting to determine at season's end the top major college football team in the East.

Pitt, 6-3-1 after marching over Army 34-0, is runner-up with 66 points and headed for the Fiesta Bowl. Temple, 8-1, dropped from second to third with 64 points. Harvard, tied with Dartmouth for the Ivy League crown, was fourth, followed by Rutgers, which moved up from seventh to fifth after a 27-7 triumph over Holy Cross for a 6-3 record.

In the second five are Dartmouth, West Virginia, Connecticut, Boston College and Yale.

Orr Sets 3 Scoring Marks

MONTREAL (AP) - Defenseman Bobby Orr set three scoring records and provided much of the firepower last week as the Boston Bruins erupted for 27 goals in four games.

Orr connected for three goals and four assists in a 10-2 romp over the New York Rangers, establishing a National Hockey League record for most points by a defenseman. All three goals came on power plays-another first for a backliner.

Orr's assist on Andre Savard's goal in Saturday night's 8-0 rout of the Detroit Red Wings was a 453rd of his career, breaking the NHL career mark of Doug Harvey.

Orr, who later added to his assists record, currently has 458 in 486 regular-season games. Harvey played in 1,113 games over 18 seasons.

Despite Orr's big week, teammate Phil Esposito continues to lead the scoring list, according to figures released Monday by the NHL.

Esposito has scored a phenomenal 43 points in just 19 games, with a league-high 21 goals plus 22 assists. Orr, the assists leader with 26, in second overall with 37 points.

Ken Hodge, another Bruin, is third with 30 points, five more than Richard Martin of Buffalo and Wayne Cashman of Boston.

Big E Leads NBA Rebounders

NEW YORK (AP) - Elvin Hayes of the Capital Bullets, who hauled down 32 rebounds at Atlanta Nov. 17 for a single-game high in the National Basketball Association this season, continues to lead the league in rebounding with an average of 18.5 per game, according to statistics released Monday.

Hayes has a substantial lead over Dave Cowens of Boston, the NBA's most valuable player last year, who is second with an average of 15.4 rebounds per game. Bob McAdoo of Buffalo and Nate Thurmond of Golden State are next at 15.3.

Atlanta's Pete Maravich continues as the NBA scoring leader with an average of 29.2 points per game. McAdoo, the rookie of the year last season, is second at 27.9, with Lou Hudson of Atlanta and Gail Goodrich of Los Angeles at 26.6.

In other categories, Chicago's Cliff Ray leads in field goal percentage at .582; Jeff Mullins of Golden State is the free throw percentage leader at .959; rookie Ernie DiGregorio of Buffalo is tops in assists with 7.7 per game; Atlanta's Herm Gilliam leads in steals with an average of 2.92 per game, and Elmore Smith of Los Angeles is first in blocked shots with 7.06 per game.

An Attempt To Appease..

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Six blacks turned down appointments to a Sugar Bowl advisory committee Monday, saying the posts would not constitute meaningful representation for the black community.

A joint statement was issued by the six after the president of the New Orleans chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People termed the appointments "an attempt to appease the black community."

The new 23-member committee which included the blacks was announced by the Sugar Bowl Thursday. it would have marked the first time in its 40-year history for the Sugar Bowl to include blacks in its organization.

Milwaukee Bucks Mere Putty In Hands Of Knicks

By KEN RAPPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The Milwaukee Bucks are among the terrors of the National Basketball Association, but putty in the hands of the New York Knicks at Madison Square Garden.

New York's Walt Frazier explains why the Knicks have maintained their superiority over the powerful Bucks at the Garden, winning 10 of their 11 regular season meetings in New York.

"They sort of choke in the Garden," says New York's premier backcourt player. "They seem to feel the pressure more than we do. It seems the Bucks never come up with a key basket here.

"Most of the games, they've made it close. But in the last few seconds, when it counts, they get the percentage shot - and miss."

Literally, Frazier's "choke" theory would seem to be the only explanation of the Bucks' mysterious failure to win their share of games in New York. They've won six of 13 regular season games in Milwaukee against the Knicks since coming into the NBA six seasons ago.

But the Bucks have had numerous opportunities to beat New York in New York - and just haven't.

"Kareem Abdul-Jabbar the Milwaukee center gets psyched up in Milwaukee," observed Frazier after the Knicks had beaten the Bucks 100-93 last Saturday night at the Garden. "He just kills us there. But here....."

That old crowd magic's on the Knicks' side as well. The Garden is filled with nearly 18,000 roaring fans whenever the Bucks are in town. In Milwaukee, the games are played in a much smaller arena.

Does the crowd affect the pros? Yes, according to Frazier.

"As far as I'm concerned, when I hear the crowd call, 'Come on, Clyde,' it turns me on," said Frazier.

Frazier said certain player matchups are a point in New York's favor. He says the Knicks' forwards have an advantage there.

"Dave DeBusschere contains Bob Dandridge," said Frazier, and he added that Bill Bradley is better than anyone else the Bucks use at the other forward spot.

The Knicks also gang up on the 7-foot-2 Jabbar and never give him a moment's rest.

Also, Frazier pointed out: "The Bucks have no bench, no depth."

Miller's Hi Life

NEW YORK (AP) - Miller Barber's record $100,000 payday in the World Open Golf Championship vaulted him into the top 10 money winners on the pro golf tour and boosted his season earnings to a personal high.

Barber, a 42-year-old tour veteran who had never won a tournament, wrapped up the two-week, 144-hole event in Pinehurst, N.C., Saturday with a total of 570.

With the six-figure first prize, he jumped from 30th place to sixth on the PGA money list.

A Caviar Sport

I don't like Chris Taylor anymore. There I said it. I didn't think I would be able to after all the contributions he made to amateur wrestling. I gave that guy a lot of ink last year. But he deserved it; two time NCAA Heavyweight Champion for Iowa State, World Games medalist and Olympic bronze medalist.

After all when a guy is 6'5" and weights 400 pounds he is bound to attract a little attention no matter what he does. But big Chris chose wrestling and all that glorious publicity that came with that bulk did more to publicize amateur wrestling than the success of ten Dan Gables.

So why don't I like Chris anymore? Because he went and committed the most unpardonable of sins for the amateur wrestler. He turned "pro". Soon he will grace the TV screens across the nation as the "Mad Mongolian" or some other equally ludicrous name and he will proceed to "unmercifully beat" or be "beaten" by other so-called "wrestlers".

The truth of the matter is amateur wrestling bears absolutely no resemblance to "professional wrestling". No how, no way. "Pro" wrestling follows a script, uses holds that would definitely injure if pushed far enough, and creates myths of goodness and badness about otherwise normal people.

Amateur wrestling, I was informed by a former participant the other day, is in that class of sports known as "caviar" sports. It is extraneous to the world of athletics that supposedly sees its ultimate perfection in participation at a professional level. Amateur wrestling, whether it be collegiate, freestyle, or Greco-Roman, ends after an Olympic medal. There are always open tournaments, or special exchange teams that go all over the world, but television and stadiums full of people-never.

I like amateur wrestling in its pure form. It is all around the most physically and mentally demanding sport in the collegiate sports scene. It is one of the few sports where the excellent warm-up by running ten miles a day. That is just to get the cardio-vascular system ready for the shock of wrestling. For the uninitiated, I offer a simple demonstration. Go find someone about the same weight and face them standing. Then by any means except biting, punching, kicking, or gouging, try and bring that person to his-her back and hold them there. Make sure your opponent is trying to keep you from doing that to him, while he is trying to do it to you. Keep it up for a couple of minutes. Then lay down on your back and have that person hold you down and keep you there, while you try to get over to your stomach or your feet. That is what wrestling is all about. It is going full tilt for eight minutes against someone else going full tilt. It is taking your normal body weight and cutting anywhere from ten to forty pounds off and keeping it off from November to March.

It is mentally tough because it is an individual sport that sees one man walk on the mat to face another with no help from his teammates or coach. If he gets pinned in thirty seconds or he pins his man in thirty seconds, it is his own doing and he comes off the mat-alone in victory or defeat.

Most of us will be heading home for some kind of Thanksgiving repast. The collegiate wrestler heads home to run every day over the holiday and eat next to nothing to keep his weight down. All of this for the pure sake of sport. If wrestling is a caviar sport it is one that is rich only in sacrifice.

McGrail Stumbles, Thomas Runs Shoeless

Handicapped Harriers Finish 15th

By SCOTT HAYES

What does a championship cross country season depend on? What does all the hard work and agony ride on? A lost shoe and a fallen runner?

Yesterday in Spokane, Washington, the UMass Cross Country team took 15th place against the best teams in the United States. That is quite an accomplishment in itself, competing against All-American runners and harriers who have run in the Olympics. It is a remarkable feat when you realize exactly what happened at the NCAA championships.

Hangman's Valley Golf Course was the setting for a meet in which nothing seemed to go right for UMass. When the team arrived, it was snowing, but by race time it had cleared up and ideal conditions for running prevailed.

Randy Thomas, who had enjoyed a highly successful year, somehow lost his shoe at the start of the race. He ran the rest of the race -- close to six miles, wearing only one shoe. You have to admire dedication and courage like that. Thomas probably knew that his chances for garnering a top spot were slim once he lost his shoe, but he knew that this year's UMass team had come much too far to let something like a lost shoe stand in its way.

Courage -- that's what competition is all about, and that's what makes the difference between a good and an outstanding runner. Like John McGrail -- a freshman who has amazed all UMass cross country followers, and has improved almost unbelievably with every meet. McGrail was the second UMass runner with one and a half miles to go. He was where he wasn't expected to be -- in front of teammate Tom Maguire. Then he fell -- and all the hard work and suffering went down with him. But McGrail also knew that his teammates had worked too hard to be let down. McGrail dug down deep, got up, and gave it all he had. Truly, John McGrail ran yesterday's race not as a freshman, but as a seasoned veteran. What was so remarkable was that McGrail was still able to come within four seconds of Tom Maguire.

Thomas took 78th in 30:02, leading the Minutemen Maguire captured 97th with a tme of 30:18, followed closely by McGrail's 30:22. Bill Gillin, whose health was not up to par put on some show for the first mile or so. Gillin was 25th after the first mile, in an attempt to go right out, but the course took its toll on the junior co-captain, and Gillin wound up 127th in 30:33. Paul Segersten ran the course in 31:03, good for 160th, while Paul Doiron was just five seconds behind in 31:08, taking 165th. Chris Farmer was able to finish 190th with a clocking of 31:52.

Steve Prefontaine, as expected, won the meet, but not as easily as he was supposed to. "Pre" ran the six mile course in 28:14, good for his third NCAA championship in four years. The senior did not compete in last year's NCAA's because of his Olympic training schedule.

Nick Rose of Western Kentucky was five seconds behind "Pre", in 28:19. Rose led a group of four foreign-born harriers who dominated the top five. Two Irishmen, Gordon Minty of Eastern Michigan and Neil Cusack of East Tennessee State, took the next two positions. Minty was timed in 28:21 while Cusack ran the course in 28:27. Wilson Waigwa of UTEP (University of Texas at El Paso) was fifth, Pat Mandera of Indiana took sixth, and Doug Brown was seventh in 28:40. Gary Bentley of South Dakota, John Ngeno of Washington State and Craig Virgin of Illinois placed eighth, ninth, and tenth, to round out the top ten.

Oregon, paced by Prefontaine, easily won team honors. The winners totaled only 89 points, while runner-up UTEP scored 158 points. Washington State was third, William and Mary took fourth, and Oklahoma State placed fifth. Colorado's 217 points were good for a sixth place finish, while Western Kentucky was right behind with 218. East Tennesse State, last year's runner-up managed only an eighth place finish. Wisconsin took ninth, while Penn State, led by Charlie Maguire, took tenth. Maguire fared better than his younger brother, Tom, and made the All-American Cross Country squad by placing 23rd. Maguire was the first runner from the East to finish the race.

In all, twenty-two teams ran for the NCAA University Division title, while 74 schools were represented. The number of runners taking part in the meet was close to 300.

In finishing 15th, UMass was two spots behind the defending champions, Tennessee. The Minutemen did beat such powerful teams as Alabama, the 1973 Southeast Conference Champions, and Minnesota, the Big 10 runner-up.

Soccer Squad Never Gave Up

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Technically, the soccer season ended in Durham. Actually, it ended earlier than that, in Springfield. And Storrs. And Orono.

Those cities and towns proved the downfall for the Minutemen en route to a 6-3-1 season record. Each one of them dashed the booters' hopes, which had originally included ideas of a conference championship and a berth in the NCAA New England soccer regionals.

And Orono. The Black Bears of Maine completed their best season ever in '73, and stuck it to the Minutemen in the process. It was a 1-0 deal, one of those crazy games in which each team played well but somebody had to win, so why not Maine?

And Storrs. If the Minutemen's conference dreams had been jolted at Maine, they were completely crushed at UConn. The Huskies had been ranked between second and fourth in New England all season long and they showed the UMass booters that they deserved the recognition.

And Springfield. The Minutemen travelled down the road to the big city with hopes of grabbing the fourth and last spot in the regional tournament. But 4-0 killed that hope as both the game and the season faded into the artificial turf.

But there were bright spots for the team that refused to quit.

There was Tufts. A sub goalie made a name for himself by shutting out the Jumbos, a team which was rated sixth and had their own delusions of grandeur.

There was URI. The defending conference champion Rams did nothing right and the Minutemen did nothing wrong.

There was Vermont. It was the game following the crunching at UConn and the Catamounts provided the perfect medicine.

And then there was New Hampshire. The team had nothing to gain. It was only a case of the seniors ending their careers and the others simply winding up the long, and in many ways frustrating season. But, the way it turned out, the Minutemen played their best game of the season in the cold and wind that is Durham in the fall.

The road the UMass booters travelled was studded with all-stars. Among the best along the way were Alan King of WPI, Franz Innocent and Tim Hunter of Connecticut, Tim Fenton of Rhode Island, Bob Black of New Hampshire, and Tom Goodman and Pete Chandler of Springfield.

But somehow the smoothest players to watch were in the maroon and white uniforms of the home team.

There was Mark "One-time" Tyma, the master of the midfield. There was Tom Coburn, who found the net so often that his shots must have been tracked by radar. There was the battered Carl Vercollone who dove and slid to save after save. There was Kurt Syer who glided around in the UMass defense like he forgot what season it was and kept on his skis. And there were countless other individual heroes.

But the big hero was the team. They wouldn't quit. They proved that in Durham. They went out a winner. They generated a positive feeling toward seasons yet to come.

And hope springs eternal.

WMUA

By GERRY BROOKS

It's on the road again for the grand finale of the not-so-grand Minuteman football season. But Boston College is always a game to get up for, and WMUA will be there. So if you're going to be around after Thanksgiving, tune in as the two biggest turkeys around, Don Gorski and Larry Convoy bring you all the action live. Game time is 1:30; air time 1:20. That's Minuteman football on WMUA....91.1 FM.

Bill Ballou

Double Trouble

In past seasons a sports weekend like the one coming up for UMass might have been billed "Clem Kaddidlehopper Relives the Little Big Horn" or "Bonzo goes to Boston College."

The Aggies were supposed to make their annual pilgrimmage to the Big Town to get their lesson in humility.

Last year's 28-7 win by the Boardwalk Bowl-bound Minutemen changed it all. It took a long time, but the pitchfork jokes emanating from Chestnut Hill subsided.

Hopefully they've subsided for good, but if things go like they might on Saturday, the Henny Youngmans of Newton could return.

Two UMass teams play at BC Saturday, and both are decided underdogs.

The football team, of course, plays the Eagles at 1:30. In between the upset win for UMass predicted by a few (mostly inmates at various institutions) and the three-figure annihilation forecast by a few more, lies what looks like a Boston College win.

Though upset in the past three weeks has become a more likely result than annihilation, the Eagles should have little trouble with UMass.

The other game follows immediately after the football game. This one's an exhibition between the Division I powerhouse Eagles and the who knows how good Division II Minutemen.

BC should kill the skaters. But still, the past couple of years have proven that the BC scrimmage is a good indicator of things to come.

Two years ago, the year UMass won its first and only divisional title. they tied BC 4-4 in a game called early on account of the figure skaters had the building rented out starting at six o'clock.

Last year, on their way to a not-so-good season, the hockey team allowed more points in their game than the football team and lost by a ridiculous score.

It's a big day for both teams for different reasons.

For football it's a chance to make 1973 respectable. What went down the drain during the embarrassing five seconds it took for Molly McGee to run into the end zone can't be recovered. But team pride can.

The opponent immediately following UMass on the BC schedule is Texas. Granted, it's ten months away, but it proves the Minutemen are playing in some pretty good company.

The BC hockey team is rated, in pre-season, as second in the East and ninth in the nation. The Eagles are one of several Eastern powers UMass plays, and one of a couple of national powers.

A win would do wonders for what is now an underconfident UMass team. Even a loss will give Jack Canniff an excellent chance to evaluate his talent against tough competition.

But, as lopsided as the scores may be, BC is really the team behind the eight-ball. They're in a "damned if you do, damned if you don't" situation. If they win, people will say "so what?" They were supposed to. But if they lose, you'll hear the moaning all the way to Hadley.

The Eagles won't take these games lightly either. For them it's a matter of pride too. But it isn't a matter of life and death.

Neither is it a matter of life and death for UMass. But for one team it's an end, another a beginning, and for both, an opportunity. It should be an interesting afternoon.

Students Feel Energy Crisis

By DENNY MATTEAU

The energy crisis has been on for a few weeks now, and most students seem to be making at least minor changes in their lifestyles to adjust to it.

While walking through Southwest, I noticed that less than a third of the windows were open. That's quite a change from a year ago, when all the windows were open. I spoke to some students in MacKimmie about it, and they said that the Physical Plant has indeed turned the temperatures down.

A student named Vicci said "People have been more careful about turning their lights out when they don't need them. That's about the most they can do, since very few dorm residents own cars."

Down in Pierpont, the attitude is a bit lighter. One student said, "Well, I'M not electric anymore!" He asked not to be named, saying "I'm a professional paranoid." A guy named Rod entered the room and pointed out that lovemaking wastes less energy than warmaking. "And we all must take showers together!" he said.

I left him with the professional paranoid and grabbed a bus for Central. Very few windows were open there. Gary Gomes of Greenough said, "I haven't been turning my heat on at night, but I'm not sure if that really makes a difference as far as the output of the Physical Plant is concerned."

John Hoffman, of the Maintenance Dept. of the Physical Plant said that it does make a difference. "If the heat can be turned low even 50 per cent of the time," he said, "the power load can be changed to as little as two pounds, instead of four or five pounds."

The off-campus students have been doing their share of adjusting, too. Jim Matteau, of Cliffside Apartments in Sunderland, said that he and his wife, Lucy, have cut down on the use of their car. "We use the bus whenever we can," he said, "And I don't drive over fifty. That makes a difference." They've turned their thermostat down to the "cool side of comfortable" and have managed to completely eliminate the use of their air conditioner, he said.

Kris Jackson, another commuter, said he isn't doing anything about the energy crisis, but that's a lie. This reporter knows for a fact that the thermostats in the house he shares with three people in Belchertown are always turned down to 65 degrees or 68 degrees, and down to 50 degrees when nobody but the dog is home.

CC Board Of Governors

Upcoming Concerts Planned

By SHARON HUGHES

The Program Council announced the following upcoming concerts: December 10, Muddy Waters and Babe Rino (Student Union Ballroom); January 30, Leo Kottke and Ellen McIlwaine (Student Union Ballroom); February 10, Linda Lewis and Bonnie Raitt (CC Auditorium); February 21, Bill Staine and Proctor and Bergman (CC Auditorium).

They announced tentative plans for seven, one man art exhibits to run for one or two days. They also plan a photography exhibit of photographs of women from Die Speigle in the music-reading room.

A Christmas party for children of UMass students and any needy child is being planned by the Council. Santa will attend; gifts, ice cream, and cake will be available.

Coin operated, self service lockers will be installed in the Campus Center (CC) and the Student Union (SU) per order of a motion passed last night by the CC Board of Governors.

The Board's Program Council announced some of its upcoming musical concerts, photography exhibits, and a Christmas party for children of UMass students.

The student governing body with jurisdiction over the CC & SU waived two rental fees for Hillel; one for a future art exhibit and one for a past rally for Israel.

The purchase of lockers was termed a response to increased demand in a memo from Bernard Wilkes to CC Director John Corker. The demand called for secure public storage facilities for hotel guests and for general student use e.g. (books, clothing, cycle helmets).

Tentative locations for the lockers are the CC concourse, outside the Hatch, on the 1st floor of the CC, and in the Hotel, according to the memo.

Corker suggested that a definite decision about the color and location of the lockers be worked out in co-ordination with the design firm renovating the SU.

According to the memo, two types of lockers are needed: extra large ones to hold suitcases and large parcels and smaller ones to hold articles the size of books.

Large lockers will cost 25 cents and small ones will either cost 10 cents or be operated on a coin return basis i.e. students and the general public would receive the service at no cost.

The Board approved two waivers. One is for an art exhibition and sale featuring work of both local and Israeli artists with proceeds going to the United Jewish appeal.

They also waived a rental fee for a rally for Israel sponsored by Hillel in the beginning of the semester.

Pentagon Correspondent Warns Press On Watergate

By MARK VOGLER
Special To The Collegian

WASHINGTON, D.C.--"Agnew's got a point...Watergate, think again...We have a problem — the preoccupation of exposing scandals...there's a great danger that we can contribute to this crisis." — John Pinny - New York Times

The press has never looked better during the Watergate Scandal; but there is a danger that it might become "overzealous" and indiscriminantly expose scandals for scandal's sake says a New York Times reporter.

"There's a danger that we can give the public the wrong impression of the nature of government — a distortion that everything is wrong and corrupt down here," John Pinny recently told a group of UMass interns placed here by the Outreach program.

"And while the press is caught up in Watergate they're missing an awful lot of substantial news stories."

Besides cautioning the press in its pursuit of scandal stories, the Pentagon correspondent discussed news leaks, accused Henry Kissinger of manipulating the news media, and criticized the Boston Globe for "going off an a great tangent."

Pinny said the role of leaks in Washington has been exagerated and added that it is a matter of "just good journalistic digging."

"Someway, leaks make the town go around and the news business go on...Many times it's a case of a reporter not being intelligent in piecing his facts together — releasing his information in little kernals of knowledge, bits at a time," he said.

Howard Spier, an intern in Congresswoman Shirley Chisolm's office, questioned Pinny on the nature of investigative reporting during the Watergate and Agnew stories.

"Agnew's got a point. In quoting anonymous sources, aren't we prejudicing the case? Aren't we indicting him before the grand jury does? The press is going have to examine this," he said.

"We have opposing values. The energetic digging of the press led to the Watergate case; yet all anonymous sources. I don't think it would be fair for anonymous source stories to come out against a youth in Amherst accused of murder.

"But maybe we should use a different standard with politicians. Perhaps they're fair game...In such a muckraking expose, all of the emphasis should be on exposing wrong doing."

Pinny said that President Nixon

The Next Fire Extinguished May Be Yours!

By RICHARD MEEKINS

Probably one of the most time consuming jobs on campus is the inspection of all fire extinguishers. The responsibility falls under the University Department of Environmental and Public Health. The Department is headed by Director Gleason. The job of inspecting the extinguishers falls under the supervision of Unversity Fire Marshall Ed Goetzal.

(Staff Photo - Larry Stein)

All fire extinguishers are required under state law to be inspected once a year. Gleason said that there are roughly 3,000 fire extinguishers on campus. There is only one man from the Department assigned to the job of inspection, he said.

Gleason cited the limited amount of funds available as the reason why there are not more personnel hired.

In addition to the limited amount of personnel, theft and vandalism problems exist. These two crimes are also on the increase. Gleason said that from July 1972 to October 1972 144 extinguishers had been tampered with. During the same four months, a year later, 264 extinguishers have been tampered with. He also said that during a year an average of seven extinguishers are stolen each month.

"It's discouraging to find fire extinguishers tampered with and stolen," Gleason said.

The number of extinguishers to be inspected is increasing due to the continuing construction of new buildings. Gleason said that during the last three years the Graduate Research, Tobin Hall, and the University Library have been added to the list. Soon the new Fine Arts Center will be added.

He also said that the duties of the Department have expanded in recent years. From the once lone duty of inspecting fire extinguishers they now include conducting fire drills, building inspections, fire fighting training programs and approving all Physical Plant building modifications.

Gleason said much of the inspection is done during the summer when most of the campus is deserted. In addition, all fire alarms, emergency lights, exits and passage ways are inspected.

Fire Marshall Goetzal said that the extinguishers into an inspection shop. It may take one or two hours to inspect and repair one extinguisher. The Fire Marshall also said it would cost roughly 15 dollars an extinguisher if outsiders were called in to do the job.

Director Gleason said, "A commendable job is being done by the Fire Marshall and his subordinates."

Dickinson Starts Escort Service

By ED GORMAN

Emily Dickinson House has started an Escort Service for women of the dorm who do not wish to walk up Orchard Hill alone at night. According to Susan Webman, director of the service, "many women are afraid to walk alone at night even though no rapes in the area have been reported this year."

All Dickinson House women will find a page in their mailboxes containing the names of 15 students who have volunteered to escort women from campus after dark. The list contains addresses, telephone numbers, and times available of the volunteers. The women may call the volunteers at the specified time or make arrangements with them earlier in the day to meet at a specified point.

Ms. Webman said that a similar service was extended to Dickinson women about six years ago. She added that the volunteers are from the sixth and seventh floors of Dickinson only. She said that an extension of the service to all Orchard Hill women would not be feasible unless more volunteers came forward.

The volunteers are primarily males although four women have agreed to work in pairs.

"And the editors are so caught up in their own knowledge that Nixon has nothing to fear. Reporters never kick him, they're all being glorious individuals thinking about that one question they'll ask...most of the time they don't listen to the answer.

He added that while Washington Press Corps make their living asking questions, "Editors make their living feeling important."

Secretary of State Kissinger uses the press as an arm of diplomacy, "very cleverly, too cleverly," according to Pinny.

He said the press is so overwhelmed by Kissinger's image that they don't do a thorough and critical enough job in examing his policies.

"His policy bothers me too much. It's a matter of time to see how Henry Kissinger stands up. If he gets peace in the Middle East, then he deserves his Nobel Peace Prize." Pinny said.

Criticizing the Boston Globe for "going off on a tangent," he said the editors are making a mistake in trying to shape the paper into one that would be recognized nationally. In so doing, the Globe is leaving its main body of readership, he added.

The Globe should concentrate more on regional problems of New England and cover in more detail the Massachusetts Delegation in Washington, Pinny suggested.

"I think they're missing the boat in neglecting local stories...there's a good corruption story a day coming out of Sommerville," he said.

Explaining one of the few virtues of the Watergate Scandal, Pinny said there had been a previous inclination of reporters to believe what the government told them.

"Not anymore, though. There's a Marie Antoinette syndrome associated with the present administration, a let them eat cake attitude — 'let the ordinary slob suffer.'," he said.

If the press doesn't prick them, they'll get away with it. It really irks me. You got to prick the bastards. One of the rewards of being a reporter is that you can be impertinent."

Thanksgiving Travel

The New Modes - Bus, Train

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Holiday travelers, faced with cutbacks in airline flights, apparently are turning to trains and buses in an effort to get home for Thanksgiving.

Amtrak, the nation's rail passenger corporation, reports the number of calls at its eastern reservation center Monday totaled more than 26,000. The rail company had been getting an average of 14,000 calls per day in October.

The Southern Railroad, which operates passenger trains in the South, said it has been receiving "calls asking about train service to places we haven't served for a long time."

The Greyhound bus line, which doesn't take reservations, says demand apparently will be heavy throughout the Thanksgiving holidays.

Almost all of the nation's airlines report their flights on Wednesday and Sunday-the two most popular days for Thanksgiving travel-are booked solid with waiting lists for the most popular departure times.

"Anyone who hasn't a seat reservation by now had better plan on spending the holiday at home," said an American Airlines spokesman in Philadelphia.

The cutback in airline flights and the strike against Trans World Airlines were cited by several spokesmen as contributing to the problems.

The airlines have been required to cut back 10 per cent of their flights in order to get within President Nixon's fuel allocation program. However, most airlines say they compensated for the holiday seasons by cutting back on flights earlier this month and adding additional departures during the Thanksgiving holidays. TWA has been idled since Nov. 4 by a strike of 5,300 airline stewardesses.

They Stole His Tank!

Norman Leger, who owns Norm's Shell Station, says he discovered Tuesday that someone had stolen 1,970 gallons of regular gasoline from one of his underground tanks.

"This never happened to me in my 12 years in the business," he said. The tank was not locked.

"The way I figure it, the thieves are using a regular oil truck. We get night drops regularly, so a passing police cruiser wouldn't pay much attention if he saw a tank truck at a station."

At 43.9 cents per gallon, the gasoline was worth $864.83.

The Golden Gate Bridge was only half as bright Monday night, as every other light was turned off to conserve fuel.

Bridge manager Dale Luehring said the one-night experiment was designed to see whether the conservation measure was safe for driving. All lights will be turned on in heavy fog, he said.

"There's still a lot of visibility out there and we don't have any traffic problems," said Lt. Al Dubrin of the highway patrol at the bridge office. He said the bridge uses powerful sodium vapor lamps.

Police are looking for an unknown Mercedes limousine driver who insisted on buying a full tank of gasoline Tuesday at a service station. Told he could get only four gallons, due to the current shortage, the driver drew a pistol and forced the attendant to fill the tank.

He paid his bill of about $22 and raced away, his tank filled with about 18 gallons of gas.

Senate Rules Committee Unanimously OK's Ford

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The nomination of Gerald R. Ford to be vice president cleared its first hurdle yesterday and headed for an early confirmation vote in the Senate.

All nine members of the Senate Rules Committee voted to recommend approval of the nomination to the Senate, where a vote is set for next week.

The action followed weeks of investigations and hearings into Ford's personal, political and financial background that began after President Nixon named him to replace former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, who resigned Oct. 10.

Rules Committee chairman Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., said the panel conducted "an inquiry of historic proportions" on Ford, a Michigan congressman and House Republican leader.

Reporting the nomination to the Senate floor, he siad the five Democrats and four Republicans acted with the "very real possibility that the nominee could become President of the United States."

Hearings on the Ford nomination continue in the House Judiciary Committee with a vote expected there sometime next week.

A House vote is scheduled for no later than Dec. 6.

Meanwhile, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said the President's decision late last week to sign a medical services bill he had previously vetoed "could be a significant indication of the salutary influence that Gerry Ford is having on the White House."

Cranston said Ford intervened with the President on behalf of the bill.

In another development, Cannon made public Ford's financial statement showing he had a total net worth of $256,378 as of last Sept. 30.

Nixon Tells Rep. Governors: "No Further Embarrassments"

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — President Nixon told the nation's Republican governors yesterday he knew of no further embarrassing revelations which could come out of the Watergate scandals and said he was sorry for the problems he had caused them.

Nixon huddled for almost two hours with the governors at their winter conference, and several governors said later the President promised them full revelations about Watergate.

"The President looked at us around the room and said, "I'm sorry if I have added to your burden'," Tennessee Gov. Winfield Dunn said.

Dunn added that Nixon assured them he knew of no more painful facts about the Watergate still to come to light.

"He said if there are, he is not aware of them," Dunn told a news conference. "If there's anything waiting yet to be revealed, he's not aware of it."

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerold L. Warren said Nixon "felt it was a very good session..."

Warren said Nixon told the governors he would "cooperate with the courts and with the special prosecutor...that he was determined to make the facts known."

However, Warren said he had no further details on precisely how the facts will be presented, saying those decisions will be made known "as soon as we can."

Dunn said Nixon answered the governors' questions extensively and gave the strongest indication yet that full disclosure on all aspects of the various White House scandals will be forthcoming.

"He indicated a number of papers will be issued clearly responsing to the questions which have been raised," Dunn said.

Dunn, newly installed chairman of the Republican Governors Association, said Nixon mentioned his personal finances, the ITT case and the milk case as potential subjects of the papers.

Nixon, making his third Southern appearance in four days, spoke before the meeting to a crowd of several thousand near the Memphis river bluffs.

"Part of the greatness of America is that when we have problems we just get out and solve them," Nixon told the banner-waving crowd.

While not referring directly to Watergate in his public speech, Nixon made several references to being able to solve other problems from the Middle East to the energy crisis.

Referring to a placard which said "I Believe in Nixon And America," the President said, "I believe in you, every one of you."

Nixon also drew a few boos and jeers from the crowds estimated by local officials at about 5,000. Some signs read "Impeachment Now More Than Ever" and "Free Democracy, Resign."

The Memphis appearance followed weekend appearances at Macon, Ga., and Florida, including a televised news conference at The Associated Press Managing Editors Association meeting in Orlando Saturday night.

The meeting with the governors was similar to sessions Nixon had held in private at the White House last week with congressional leaders.

It followed several days of discussion among the GOP governors about the impact of Watergate on the Republican party's future.

The Republican governors adopted a resolution Monday generally praising Nixon's record in foreign and domestic programs but indirectly urging him to clear up the Watergate problem.

Republican party chairman George Bush told the governors yesterday that Watergate will not hurt them in the 1974 elections.

"These haven't been easy times," Bush said, "but the thing that is so greatly encouraging is seeing the Watergate matter turned around rather dramatically as a result of the President's actions in the last few days."

He said the party machinery is running smoothly toward the 1974 elections.

"Anybody who takes any look at history is going to discover that scandal does not harm party," Bush said.

Also yesterday, the governors heard Nixon's top energy adviser, former Colorado Gov. John A. Love, say the current oil shortage is, "the worst problem we have faced other than wartime."

Both Love and Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton said they believe that gasoline rationing may come but only as a last resort if the present system of allocations and voluntary cutbacks in fuel don't work.

In related developments yesterday:

—Sen. John G. Tower, R-Tex., chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, told newsmen in Washington he is confident Nixon will soon make public copies of all relevant tapes and documents bearing on Watergate.

—Sen. James L. Buckley, Cons.-N.Y., said Nixon is "still short" of what he has to do to regain public confidence because of Watergate. Buckley said it is too early to assess the impact of Nixon's public talks in recent weeks on the American people.

—The Americans for Democratic Action called on Congress to investigate 73 incidents which it said amount to criminality on Nixon's part. The list, which it said covered men under Nixon's direction too, includes financier Howard Hughes, businessman Robert Vesco, dairy and carpet industry campaign contributions.

—Sen. Lloyd M. Bentsen of Texas, chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee, said Nixon's problem can be the credibility issue. "If he Nixon makes a series of appearances across the country and is candid in his answers he can make a gain, but depends on whether the public feels that they are candid. The people will decide." Bentsen spoke on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

Cambodian President "Determined To Win"

By MATT FRANJOLA
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - President Lon Nol, whose palace compound was bombed by one of his own pilots, told the nation in a radio address yesterday, "I am determined to lead the nation until final victory."

Referring to Monday's bombing, in which he escaped injury but three others were killed and 10 wounded, Lon Nol said, "There will always be an elected president, with one following the other without interruption."

He said the pilot of the T28 aircraft, Lt. Pich Lim Kuon, 29, "joins a small group of people who ignore the notions of liberty and prefer to be sold to the North Vietnamese Communists."

An official source said so far there has been no evidence that the bombing was anything but a single individual's attempt.

Where the plane landed is still a mystery, the source said.

On the military side, U.S. experts said the anticipated Khmer Rouge offensive against Phnom Penh is now expected to come before the end of the year. Insurgents are already preparing for the battle, they said.

The Mideast fuel squeeze reached Cambodia. A diplomatic source said the Cambodian armed forces had been ordered to make a 10 per cent cut in their fuel consumption.

On the country's war front, field reporters contradicted an announcement by the Cambodian command that it had recaptured Kompong Kantuot. The reporters said it was not yet possible to enter the destroyed town 13 miles southwest of Phnom Penh because of scattered Khmer Rouge resistance.

Gasoline Crisis

Independent Stations Are Hurting Most

By BOB MONROE
Associated Press Writer

Independent gasoline station chains are taking the brunt of the impact of tight gasoline supplies and by one estimate may have lost as much as 20 per cent of the business volume nationally.

One recent survey said members of a national independent retailers group have closed nearly 3,200 of their 20,000 stations this year, almost half of them permanently.

The shortage has abruptly reversed a 10-year trend during which independent chains selling private brand gasoline grew to the point that they pumped 25 out of every 100 gallons sold to motorists at retail.

Many independents today have been forced to raise prices to the point that they are nearly equal to major brand stations.

Unable to secure sufficient gasoline, one independent company after another has closed stations. Some smaller chains have virtually gone out of business. Several major oil companies checked reported no similar permanent shutdowns.

In a complaint last July, the Federal Trade Commission accused eight major oil companies of manipulating the existence of a shortage to the competitive disadvantage of independent refiners and marketers.

The charge, which the companies denied, was based on an FTC staff study which estimated that 1,200 independent stations closed in the first five months of this year.

Recently the Society of Independent Gasoline Marketers of America — SIGMA — surveyed its 212 members, whom it estimates operate about one-third of the private brand gasoline stations in the country.

The survey concluded that nearly 1,500 of the members' 20,000 stations were closed permanently, another 1,700 were temporarily shut down and

He estimated that the independents' share of the 100-billion-gallon-a-year retail market had declined from 25 per cent in 1972 to "less than 20 per cent," — a 20 per cent drop in the independents' volume.

Judiciary Comm. Starts Bill To Make Saxbe Eligible For Att. General

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Without making a recommendation, the Senate Judiciary Committee turned over to the Senate a bill intended to make Sen. William B. Saxbe, R-Ohio, eligible for appointment as attorney general.

The effect of the unanimous vote yesterday was to refer to the Senate the controversy over whether the administration-proposed bill can remove Saxbe's constitutional disqualification for the Cabinet post.

The bill is slated to be brought up in the Senate after it votes next Tuesday on the nomination of Rep. Gerald R. Ford, R-Mich., to be vice president.

Saxbe's nomination has been held up because the Constitution prohibits the appointment of a Congress member during the term for which he was elected, to an office for which the salary has been increased in that time.

Saxbe, whose term does not expire until Jan. 3, 1975, was a member of the Senate in 1969 when the salary of the attorney general and other Cabinet members was increased form $35,000 to $60,000 a year.

The administration has submitted a bill to roll back the attorney general's pay to $35,000 in an effort to overcome Saxbe's ineligibility for the post.

The bill was approved by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee last week but then was referred to the Judiciary Committee, all of whose members are lawyers, to pass on its constitutionality.

However, with the committee divided and some of the members reportedly still trying to make up their minds, the bill was sent back to the Senate without recommendation.

Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., said he is satisfied that passage of the bill would clear away the constitutional barrier to Saxbe's nomination.

He told a reporter that, if a vote had been taken, he believed that a committee majority would have supported it.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., a committee member and the Democratic whip in the Senate, took the lead in arguing that the constitutional ineligibility clause is so clear-cut that no legislation could waive it.

Saxbe's nomination will not be submitted to the Senate until the measure to cut the attorney general's salary of $35,000 is passed by Congress.

Pediatrician Trouble In Virginia

CLARKSBURG, W. Va. (AP) - Dr. Phillip Hall, one of two pediatricians in this central West Virginia city, sat behind bars on a back alimony charge yesterday while parents threatened to bring their children to the jail for treatment.

"I couldn't begin to tell you how many calls we've gotten," said Angelo Second of the Harrison County Sheriff's Department. "They call and say their baby is sick and they want to see the doctor. I tell them they'll just have to call his office, there's nothing I can do."

Hall went to jail last Thursday. Women and children picketed City Hall Saturday and Monday for his release. The town has a population of 24,800.

"The town is very much divided on this, you could talk to 49 people and get 49 different opinions," said John Martin, editor of the Clarksburg Telegram.

The town's only other pediatrician is Dr. Robert Marks, Hall's partner. He joined the pickets Saturday, maintaining he was unable to keep up with the work load thrust upon him by his partner's incarceration.

Judge Robert Ziegler found Hall in contempt and ordered him jailed after the 43-year-old physician refused to pay $4,000 in back alimony to his former wife. He had been given 15 days to comply with the judge's order.

Hall, who has kept up with his $600-a-month child support payments for his three children by marriage, said he refused to pay because it was a matter of principle. He said that his wife had refused him visiting privileges since they were divorced in 1971 and that he would not pay the back alimony until she met the stipulations of the divorce decree.

The former Mrs. Hall could not be reached for comment but a hearing on the case was scheduled for Friday before Zeigler.

In Mid-East News POW Exchange, Cease-Fire

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The prisoner of war airlift shuttled more Egyptian and Israeli POWs home yesterday, and the United Nations announced plans to add Americans and Russians to its cease-fire observer force.

A U.N. spokesman in Cairo also said observers had reported three violations of the Middle East cease-fire over the weekend.

The prisoner exchange, part of the cease-fire agreement worked out with the help of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, brought 20 more Israeli prisoners home, making a total of 182 repatriated so far by Israeli count.

The Egyptians say they captured 247 during the October war.

The Israeli military command reported it has sent back more than 7,000 of its 8,221 captured Egyptians.

U.N. spokesman Rudolph Stajduhar told a news conference that 36 Americans and 36 Russians will be placed on observer teams. He did not say when they would be assigned.

Eight Americans are already with the U.N. truce observer organization, and several Soviet observers are known to be in Egypt in apparent response to President Anwar Sadat's appeal last month for U.S. and Soviet troops to assure Israeli compliance with the U.N. cease-fire.

The three cease-fire violations occurred Sunday, Stajduhar said. One was at Qantara in the northern sector of the Suez Canal front, and another was a Ismailia near the middle of the front, he said.

The third was some 20 miles from Suez City at the south end of the canal, where Israeli forces fired machine guns and caused Egyptian casualties, the spokesman said.

The United Nations reported the highway from Cairo to Suez continued to be open for non-military supply vehicles. The spokesman said 31 trucks carrying food and medical supplies reached Suez on Monday and 21 others took relief supplies to the Egyptian 3rd Army in the Sinai Desert.

In Cairo, U.S. Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, talked with Economic Minister Abdel Aziz Hegazy and other officials about American private investment in postwar Egypt.

Asian Nations Cut Back In Wake Of Arab Embargo

By PHIL BROWN
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) - Japan and other Asian nations are trying to cut back on fuel consumption because of the Arab oil squeeze.

The Japanese government began supervision Tuesday of a 10 per cent reduction in fuel use by the giant Japanese industrial machine, the largest in Asia.

It has already asked steel, auto, heavy electrical and other key industries to voluntarily reduce the amount of oil and electricy they use. The shortage has raised fears that the booming Japanese economy might be braked to zero growth.

In Vienna, the Saudi Arabian oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani, said the to te classifieds as friendly, Japan must assist the Arab cause "in a very significant manner." He said this could involve sanctions against Israel including a break in Diplomatic relations.

Japan has been neutral in the Arab-Israel dispute, but is criticized because of its close links with the United States, the main supporter of Israel.

The government was expected to announce a policy leaning more toward the Arabs this week although officials declined to say anything more than that the matter was under study.

In neighboring South Korea, dependent on Persian Gulf oil supplied by American firms also feeling the pinch, the government ordered taxis, trucks, buses, ferries and airliners on domestic flights to reduce their operations 10 to 30 per cent. Hotels were told to turn down their heat and restaurants to reduce their hours.

The emergency measures followed reports that some apartment buildings, hospitals, schools and private homes have been without heat several days in freezing weather.

In wartorn Cambodia, a diplomatic source said the military has been ordered to make a 10 per cent cut in fuel consumption, but this was expected to affect only noncombat vehicles.

Although Taiwan depends on the Persian Gulf states for almost 90 per cent of its oil, its only order has been stopping the night sale of gasoline.

Indonesia, Asia's major oil producing nation, declared its readiness to help its neighbors in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. But it said it could offer them oil only after new wells are productive, since current production already is committed. New oil, if available, would be sold to the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

Moscow Claim Asia Domination Battle Is On

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

Moscow's claim that Peking wants to provoke a Soviet-U.S. military clash, though it has an ominous sound, seems nevertheless a Kremlin gambit in a contest for dominating influence in Asia.

The accusation was published Monday by the government newspaper Izvestia, a fact that in itself suggests there might be less to this seeming escalation of the verbal war then meets the eye.

Also, it comes only a week in advance of a scheduled trip by Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet Communist chief, to India, where he wants to push the idea that Asia should join Moscow in a "collective security" system.

Peking's anti-Soviet posture has become more irksome than ever to Moscow lately. The new Middle East war permitted Peking to portray the Russians as conniving with the Americans to rule the world. This fits in with Peking's own pretensions to lead what it calls the Third World of "poor" nations.

Peking has maneuvered industriously against Soviet attempts to set up a collective security system in Europe. Moscow can have little doubt that China would be even more opposed to a similar Soviet enterprise in Asia.

It seems Moscow has sought to lay down a propaganda barrage in advance of the Breshnev trip, designed primarily to scare Asians by portraying the Chinese as eager for World War III.

Soviet propaganda insists the Chinese opposed a Middle East cease-fire because they wanted the war to go on indefinitely; that this illustrated a Peking urge to profit from global turmoil from which it might gain in terms of big power domination.

A few days ago, a Soviet commentator directly linked such alleged Chinese aims with Peking opposition to an Asian security system.

"What," asked the commentator, "is the true meaning of Peking's call for colossal disturbances if applied to such a region as South Asia? There is no doubt that such an appeal is aimed against the normalization that is under way there. The Peking leaders seem to want to throw the South Asian countries back into the time of confrontation and conflict..."

That was a reference to the India-Pakistan conflicts, the latest of which was in 1971 over the Bangladesh secession from Pakistan.

Insurance Increase Is Recommended

BOSTON (AP) - An $8.7 million increase in auto insurance rates for 1974 was the official recommendation of the state's own insurance department.

The figure recommended by deputy commissioner Milton G. McDonald is about one-third the $23 million requested by the insurance industry. McDonald's figures would give the companies a 3.5 per cent rate hike instead of their requested 10 per cent increase.

McDonald made his recommendation Tuesday at the last hearing on the proposed new rates held by Insurance Commissioner John Ryan. Ryan is expected to make his decision on the rates in about two weeks.

Referring to the errors made by the insurance companies in reporting their 1972 statistics, McDonald said "In 30 years in this department I've never seen such a poor presentation by the insurance industry."

He suggested using the 1973 rates and adjusting them for inflation. He also suggested legislation this year to permit rebates to drivers if gas rationing and lower speeds reduce accidents.

Just What We Need

VANCOUVER, B.C. (AP)-A 28-year-old Vancouver woman, professing concern for men who "live alone and unloved," has applied for a $33,729 government grant to finance a mobile bordello.

"I've run houses from the red shores of the Bay of Fundy to the green slopes of the Kootenays," Dominique Danielle wrote in her application for the "bordellomobile." It would serve isolated British Columbia areas.

Wages for the staff would total $24,000-$100 a week for the proposed 242 weeks the vehicle would operate, the application said.

"The application doesn't even deserve a response," an official asserted at a Canadian government office.

Birth Control TV Shown In Hospital

By JON HALVORSEN
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - Women on the obstetrics ward at Albany Medical Center Hospital passed up the mid-morning television game shows this week to watch a new program on birth control.

Some of the women were recovering from childbirth. They watch anyway as the film, piped into their rooms via closed-circuit TV, told about the rhythm method, the condom, the pill and the intrauterine device.

The information may have appeared redundant to some of the mothers. But Dr. Donald P. Swartz, chairman of the Albany Medical College Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, didn't see it that way.

"We've come to believe that a woman's understanding of birth control methods has much to do with what method she uses," said the doctor, who started the series of "health care broadcasts" Monday with the aid of a Rockefeller Foundation grant.

Two other films being shown on closed-circuit TV deal with self-examination for breast cancer and the Pap test for uterine cancer.

The broadcasts are among the first of their kind in the nation, hospital officials said. Maureen McGuire, producer-director of the film series, wrote to many medical centers and found just one hospital - in Honolulu - which broadcasts educational films daily to its patients.

They give patients-including women awaiting or recovering from legal abortions - "information we think they should have relating to their own lives and reproduction," Dr. Swartz said.

Men can watch the birth control film, too - in the waiting room for expectant fathers. Then they're invited to answer questions by pushing a button below the TV screen.

"Mrs. Perry," a character in the film, has forgotten to take her pill three days in a row. "Should Mrs. Perry double up for the next three days or forget about it" the narrator asks.

A wrong answer produces a sad-faced cartoon figure-in one sequence a pregnant woman.

Miss McGuire, who is working on a new film about post-delivery care, conceded it may be difficult to persuade men to watch such a film. Dr. Swartz agreed, noting that women are a more or less captive audience.

"We'll take the husband whenever we can catch him, but he's less available to us. We have the women her in bed for four or five days," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The special Watergate prosecutor's office yesterday delayed a Senate Watergate committee effort to gain limited immunity for John H. Meier, a former employe of billionaire Howard Hughes and long-time associate of President Nixon's brother, F. Donald Nixon.

The Senate panel had asked Chief U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica to grant Meier immunity from prosecution based on any evidence he might furnish the committee.

But Sirica granted the prosecutors' request yesterday that he block the immunity order until Dec. 5, the maximum delay permitted by law. The prosecutors gave no reason for their request.

Meier, according to several sources, has information relating to Hughes's $100,000 cash gift to C.G. "Bebe" Rebozo, the President's close friend and Key Biscayne, Fla., neighbor.

The White House has said the money was intended as a campaign contribution, Rebozo kept it for three years, and he returned it to a Hughes lawyer earlier this year.

Meier currently is under federal indictment on charges of evading income taxes on more than $250,000 he earned in 1968 and 1969 while overseeing purchase of several thousand Western mining claims for Hughes.

Hughes is suing Meier and several associates claiming they acquired marginal mining properties and sold them to Hughes at inflated prices.

Meier has denied the charges, saying they grew out of White House ire at his refusal to break off his association with the President's brother and his nephew, Donald A. Nixon.

He also has filed a motion in one of the court cases seeking to learn if any of his conversations were overheard while the Secret Service was tapping the telephone of the President's brother.

Watergate committee sources said Meier was involved in the first of two unsuccessful attempts to deliver the Hughes money in 1968.

In August 1968, the sources said, Rebozo and an old friend and Nixon campaign worker, Richard G. Danner, met Hughes lawyer Edward P. Morgan in New York.

Morgan told them Meier and F. Donald Nixon were in New York at the time and "ready to make the drop," the sources said, but when Rebozo heard the Nixon brother's name mentioned, he broke off the discussion.

Lochness Monster Hunt

A Pile Of Bones And Weird Noises

By PETER MUCCINI
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - A Japanese expedition hunting the Loch Ness monster suspended the chase yesterday after a two-month search. Net results so far: a pile of bones and some weird noises.

"We are very disappointed," a spokesman for the 16-man expedition said. "But we shall be back early next spring to try again."

The expedition arrived in Britain on Sept. 7 with the aim of somehow driving the elusive "Nessie" to the surface with miniature submarines and photographing it.

Reports of the monster's periodic appearances in the Scottish lake have baffled scientists for years and amused skeptical area residents for just as long.

Dozens of persons claim to have sited the monster over the past 40 years. Several photographs have been produced but have proved tantalizingly inconclusive. A popular idea of the animal pictures it as a long-necked, small-headed reptile with a large hump on its back.

The second phase of the Japanese operation will use a specially built unmanned computer-operated capsule, the spokesman said. This device, now being built in Japan, will grope around Loch Ness's murky depths sending out electronic bleeps in a bid to locate the bewildering behemoth.

Environment Head Stresses Zero Population Growth

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's nominee to head the Council on Environmental Quality said yesterday the United States should lead a worldwide drive to reach zero population growth as quickly as possible.

Russell W. Peterson, former governor of Delaware, also urged a national effort for full employment, terming "ridiculous" the economic view that some unemployment is necessary.

Peterson recommended increased emphasis on service jobs rather than material production; a requirement for business to recover and recycle or dispose of used products; and global regulation of ocean fishing.

But Peterson told a conference sponsored by the National Science Foundation that population growth is "the greatest threat" to humanity.

At the same time, he said, the world faces a food shortage for most of its still-growing population.

"The protein shortage is of crisis proportions and ranks well ahead of the oil crisis in many countries," he said.

He urged that developed nations, which have filled most of their basic material needs, emphasize a new form of productivity — service occupation — which can help already affluent people satisfy their higher needs for self-fulfillment.

Economists Warn Against Yielding To Oil Blackmail

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Arab oil is not important enough for the United States to give in to oil blackmail, four Nobel Prize-winning economists said yesterday.

Even if the United States presses the Israelis to withdraw from occupied lands, as the Arabs are demanding, the policy change will only lead to new Arab requirements, the economists said.

The statement was issued by Nobel laureates Paul A. Samuelson of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Kenneth Arrow, Simon Kuznets and Wassily Leontief, all of Harvard.

"Our foreign policy should not be deflected in the slightest by the illusion that giving in to oil blackmail will in fact gain us anything," they said.

However, they suggested that nations affected by the Arab oil embargo should consider starting a similar embargo themselves.

Nixon Awaits Verdict

By MARK VOGLER

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Nixon is awaiting the verdict. While his innocence or guilt will be determined by constitutional procedures, the people are ultimately the final judge — and the judgement they make will stand trial in the history book of future generations.

The status of Richard Nixon in the days to come will be dictated by public opinion. Unfortunately many Americans have become frustrated by the Tragedy of Watergate and have compromised the nation's fate with "whatever happens."

If public opinion favoring the President's removal from office dies — as it has since his release of the tapes — then the President would undoubtedly remain in office for the remainder of his three years.

The credibility of a President whose administration has exemplified such corruption and public betrayal as Mr. Nixon's is questionable. His ability to govern this country and to shape foreign policy with leaders of rivaling world powers has declined sharply — and the image of the American Presidency has been severely tarnished.

President Nixon — given an electoral mandate of 49 states a year ago and having brought the Vietnam War to and end — can not undue Watergate.

In recent weeks the President has made an earnest attempt to restore his credibility and to regain the trust of the American people. His strategy has been clever and seems effective — on a short term basis.

His unexpected release of the tapes has relinquished a substantial amount of the public clamor. He purposely exploited the Energy Crisis Address to sway the mass in his favor — putting the blame on Congress for not acting fast enough while justifying his own unconcern by declaring Watergate as a handicap. It seems that many have bought this — or feel "What's the use."

President Nixon has expressed a "sincere" desire to tell the public all the facts and resolve any questions of his integrity. he has met with congressional leaders in "frank" discussions of how to cope with the "breach of confidence" in the nation.

And most recently he has engaged in public appearances before influential groups in an attempt to win their support. It is all very clever — but much too late.

To many, allowing the President to remain in office and to leave Watergate behind seems to be the easiest remedy to the country's crisis. Afterall, the lengthy process of impeachment would prove painful — leaving a scar in American history. The successor to the President might also travel on a bridge over troubled waters and could find himself wound into the country's crisis.

Yet, to leave a wounded President in office would leave an equivalent scar in American history. Three years of political turmoil and public apathy could critically hamper the stability of this country and lower its image in the eyes of the world.

Unless American people pressure Congress for the President's removal, unless the people make it understood to Mr. Nixon that his mandate is no longer valid, the country's highest office will be occupied by a lame duck for three years.

If American forgive and forget, their verdict — a vote of confidence in behalf of Mr. Nixon — will be judged in later years as a reluctance to admit they made an electoral mistake, a reluctance to cleanse an administration infested with corruption. Such a verdict would be judged as America's darkest hour.

Inept Counseling

By THOMAS G. BRINE

Probably one of the most unpublicized problems in college life is the ineptness of guidance counseling. This problem starts at the high school level in which the student prepares for his college program through the eyes of a guidance counselor. Quite often what happens is the student is either unsure of what he or she is interested in as a field or does not understand what program he should enroll in. As a result, the student is left in the hands of the counselor, which means the counselor becomes very much an important factor in the student's future.

Specifically speaking, the student becomes dependent on the counselor for making the decision as to what program he should enroll in. Although the counselor is supposedly very knowledgeable about the different aspects of counseling, he does not really know what is the best advice for you. He can only give you a general feeling of what you might take as a program. You must in reality make the decision. The problem arises when the student is in a situation of not knowing what he really wants and how he should obtain it. Often what couples with this is that the counselor puts the student in the wrong program. Obviously the student is not going to question the counselor.

It isn't until the student uses this advice from the counselor that he finds he has been crossed. From this point, the casualties of the inept counseling become inumerable. One painful casualty is time. Students end up spending from one semester to up to two years taking courses they should have taken previously. In some cases, the student cannot go into the correct program because he does not have enough pre-requisites. Another casualty is that of money. The tuition, books, clothes, etc; are enough without having to spend from $100 to $3000 extra because there was a misguided decision.

Believe it or not, many students today are affected by this problem. The thing is the problem is hidden so well until it affects the student directly. Unfortunately in many cases it is too late. The only alternative in solving this problem is to cram extra courses during the semester. Believe me! No one likes taking more than 15 credits in a semester. In some cases like physics courses, it is impossible to take more than one physics course until the junior year. With the increase in tuition, books, clothes, food, and many other necessities, it is advised that something be done for the students otherwise the decline and dropout rates will undoubtedly reach newer limits.

Spirit Of '76

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

I can easily dig the postulates of George Washington, Patrick Henry, Benjamin Franklin and Jefferson and other Patriots that create the bases of this country. I can feel in myself what is called The Spirit of '76. Yes, folks, I would like to pay taxes, (that means have a nice job), and have representation (and that means more opportunities to success being a 'minority group' member).

I think that the "minority groups" in this country are more close to the postulates of the American Revolution than other Americans. Right now, we are trying to get the rights that most of the Americans got a long time ago. And we understand that our role is to create the bases of equality in order that we could compete in even conditions with the rest of society. The fathers of the Country did the same in relationship with the British.

If we look at the United States of '73, we must agree that in order to resolve the national problems that we are facing the maximum participation of the people is needed. But how you can do that if some of their citizens have not the opportunity to develop themselves and if they have a lack of educational and economical opportunities? The opportunity of the so-called minority groups to achieve a successful development will help find solutions to the country's problems, besides the assurance of a better understanding of other countries because these 'minorities' represent the 'majority groups' in the world.

For centuries we have been looked at as people with nothing of value, except our work. We accepted that technology is needed, that it helps humanity. Why then are our values not recognized? Black Americans, for example, have an amazing psychological resistance. Besides the centuries of slavery, racism and lack of opportunities to study, or get good jobs, or achieve a better standard of living they resisted and they feel proud of what they are. They succeeded in getting more rights and opportunities to enable them to overcome the underdevelopment and have more active participation in the country's life.

The Puerto Ricans achieved a level of integration that probably is going to take centuries for the United States to get to the same level. A Puerto Rican can be comfortable in a Mexican-American group, or in a White or Black American Group without losing cultural identity and accepting other culture values. They took centuries to achieve a level of consciousness and synchronize all the different cultural values into a sense of one nationality.

Why in the America of '73, can't we accept other culture's values and people's ways of life without putting to them educational, economical and racial barriers? In the long run, the achievement of a higher development of the citizens of one country is demonstrative of the country's strength.

So folks, think in the Spirit of '76 and let's make a reality of living in a society in which every man and woman will have the right of freedom and the search for happiness.

Meeting Girls

To The Editor:

I am writing in regard to the article written by Tom Brine, "Singles Parties".

It is obvious that his problem is to meet girls, but the manner in which he chooses to execute the problem is very contradictory and childlike.

I do agree to the fact that girls, as do guys, seem to be together in groups, but I fail to realize why there is anything wrong with this, or even that it can make one frustrated.

Tom Brine states that one must be experienced to ask a girl to dance, and also that it is embarrasing. Who needs to be experienced to ask the simple question "Would you like to dance?" It can be embarrasing to a guy to be shot down, but take it in stride and ask another girl.

In his statement "What it really amounts to is that the ability to meet different girls is not very good", I wholly disagree with him. How could this be possible at such a large university as ours? Just look at the great concentration of people around and in one's everyday presence, especially if one lives on campus. this is the perfect place to meet people.

Must a party be the only place on can meet someone? I don't think so. Get involved in dorm activities instead of going home on weekends, make it a point to say hello and get acquainted with your classmates. You'll probably find yourself better off and meeting more people than at a "Singles Party" where everyone will probably be in groups anyway. As I sign this letter, Tom, you still probably don't recognize my name. I'm the girl that lives next door!

Help Greek Students

To The Editor:

The students of Greece are standing alone against the tanks of George Papadopoulos. In their courageous efforts to throw off the sham democracy offered by their government, they need help. Let us as students disassociate ourselves from our government's support of Greece's authoritarian regime and declare our support of the students fighting for freedom. As students in Czechoslovakia led the struggle against abrogation of their liberties, Greek students fight the same enemy in different guise today. In the last week they have courageously taken to the streets to be heard. It is now more important than ever that they be aware of the support they have among their fellow students in America. We strongly urge the Student Government of UMass to issue a declaration of support for and solidarity with these brave people. And we urge that UMass lead a campaign to elicit similar declaration of support from students across the U.S.A. Let's not let our government be the only American voice heard in Greece.

Who Benefits?

To The Editor:

Hey, what's going on around here? Are we just going to sit around and watch our friends at Amherst Towing with the help of our lovable security officers tow each and every car one by one, often damaging a cars steering or brakes. That's the way to get the cars off campus, break them all.

It pisses me off to see them towing cars from a half empty lot (49) at 8:00 in the morning, yet when one attempts to get a sticker for that lot the parking office claims it's full. Three cheers for the great computer!!!

I can't see who benefits by towing, except Amherst Towing. Stiffer fines would surely accomplish the same goals. One can't help wondering what stake the Administration has in Amherst Towing.

I call on the Student Senate and ask students to demand freedom from this parasite, Amherst Towing.

By the way, I have never been towed and have no personal gripe against Amherst Towing. It's just the idea of them getting rich on student money involuntarily paid.

Remove U.N. Flag

To The Editor:

It is probably known to many of the students at UMass that a United Nations flag flies on the Amherst Common. Due to political ignorance, most students would probably support this. No one in his right mind would oppose the ideals the U.N. is supposed to represent. That flag, however, does not represent peace, justice, and freedom, goals to which I am unalterably committed, but the opposite. The U.N. has betrayed the shining promise that gave it birth. Since shortly after its inception, it has worked to promote Communist "wars of national liberation" in the underdeveloped countries (Its bloody destruction of the independent Republic of Katanga is a case in point.) and to foil the legitimate rights of truly peace-loving countries everywhere. The anti-Jewish record of the United Nations, marked by her many condemnations of Israel for exercising her sacred right of self-defense, is also something to ponder. Finally, where was the U.N. when our nation asked it in the 1960's to help bring peace to Vietnam? This organization, led by its pro-Communist majority, was laughing itself sick over the shedding of American blood! Is this a peacekeeping body? I am therefore calling for the removal of the U.N. flag from Amherst Common, until such time as the U.N. begins living up to its own ideals. All who agree with me are asked to write to the Amherst City Council.

Heating With Wood

By EDWIN B. CADY, JR.

Are you thinking about using wood as a heat source? Do you own any land with trees? If the answer to either question is "yes" this article may be of interest to you.

Ecology:

Trees are one way nature stores the sun's energy. Because trees are a renewable resource the energy may be harvested on a sustained yield basis without permanent damage. Properly conducted harvests may actually increase the value of the remaining trees while encouraging wildlife.

How can cutting trees improve wildlife? Wildlife need food and cover which are often unavailable in the forest. Cutting creates slash piles in which rabbits and other small game may hide. The openings created by cutting allow the sun to reach the ground encouraging the growth of brush which provides both food and cover. In addition, if hardwoods are cut the stumpt will sprout providing buds and tender shoots for small mammals and deer to feed on.

How can cutting trees improve the forest? Trees must fight for water, nutrients and sunlight; the losers die. If you picture in your mind a young stand of trees one and two inches in diameter and an old stand where the trees are one to two feet in diameter you will quickly realize that most of the trees in a young stand will die. A forester can select for removal the trees that will die in the next 10 years. This will allow the remaining trees to grow faster, while becoming stronger and more vigorous, resulting in healthier trees better able to fight off attacks by diseases and insects.

What does all this mean? If you own woodland it is possible to harvest firewood and improve the forest's health and wildlife habitat.

Economics For The Landowner:

A woodlot may be thought of as a garden. Just as a garden may be thought of as containing crops and weeds, a woodlot contains valuable trees and weed trees. Just as a farmer must weed his garden to get a good crop so must a woodland owner remove the poor quality, sick and diseased trees, if he wishes to have a productive woodlot. For example, a tree with rot in it may be worthless so is a tree which will soon die. They should be removed to allow healthy trees to fully utilize the sunlight, water and nutrients. Moreover, not all species have the same value. A red oak tree 12" in diameter is worth $4, but the exact same tree would only be worth $1.50 if it were a red maple.

For many years dollar conscious woodland owners have paid to have their woodlot weeded knowing, just as a farmer knows, that his future revenues will far surpass current costs. With the current high demand for firewood a landowner may be able to sell those trees that were formerly killed and left in the woods.

Practicality Of Wood As A Fuel:

Wood ignities readily and gives a quick hot flame. Modern wood stoves create very little air pollution as all combustible elements are utilized and wood contains only trace amounts of sulfur. Wood burns cleanly, and the small amounts of ash generated may be used as fertilizer in the garden.

On the other hand wood is bulky to handle and expensive to transport. It has low heat efficiency for its weight and bulk. High moisture content greatly reduces wood's heat value, so it must be seasoned and preferably stored under cover. Unless a modern stove is used wood burns quickly requiring frequent stoking.

Economics Of Wood As Fuel:

As a rough rule of thumb a seasoned (20% moisture content) cord of hardwood is equal to about 150 gallons of home heating oil while a cord of white pine equals somewhat less than 100 gallons. Drying the wood to 5% moisture content would increase its heat value about 20%. The price to pay for a cord of seasoned hardwood, based only on heat values ignoring combustion efficiency and the convenience of oil, would be to multiply the cost per gallon of oil times 150. If home heating oil costs 30¢ per gallon, a cord of seasoned hardwood is worth $45 (.30 x 150). A word of caution, a fireplaces uses 10 times more wood than an efficient stove to produce the same amount of heat.

If you are willing to do your own cutting and hauling there are many sources of firewood. Most sawmills are anxious to have slabs and edgings removed. Their price in the past has been between $4 and $8 per cord (higher priced if they deliver). Loggers or landowners whose land has been recently logged might give or sell the logging residue (branches, small logs and cull material). For the landowner this reduces the fire hazard while improving the appearance of the area. The wood user has the pleasure of outside exercise, an inexpensive source of fuel and the knowing that what he is doing is in the best interest of the nation, the landowner and himself.

Assistance is Available:

If you need assistance in locating sources of wood residue the forester for your county will suplly the names of loggers, sawmills and consulting foresters. He will also assist the landowner is selecting trees for removal. Address your inquiry to your county forester, Massachusetts Department of Natural Resources, P.O. Box 484, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Private consulting foresters will, for a fee, select trees for removal and assist the landowner in finding a reputable firewood operator.

Mr. Cady is Eastern Franklin County State Forester.

Freeze To Death?

To The Editor:

I'd like to just take a few words to answer Kenneth J. Stuart's letter which appeared in last Wednesday's Collegian. I do tend to agree with him on the use of recreational vehicles, but not to ban them 100%, but to limit their use to certain hours, or to maybe weekends only. If you watch the traffic headed north on I-91 on a Friday night (evening) and see all the New Jersey and New York cars heading north — you'd never realize that there was any gas shortage. Sure as hell they're not going to work! Ban them, too. That's pleasure.

But, the thing that really isn't even mentioned in all this energy crisis is the fact that we have 30 million more people now than we had 10 years ago. Maybe a population crisis instead of an energy crisis?

Just 10 years ago a Buick (full size) wagon would get 19 miles per gallon on a trip. Detroit could make cars do better mileage wise but then that would hurt the big gas companies who would like to sell less gas, but raise the price so that they will make more profits than they are now. What have the big oil companies been doing with their tax depletion allowances? Of course through environmental reasons they haven't been able to drill as they wish either. Let's face facts — either we're all going together through pollution or by freezing to death. Take your choice — one is quicker than the other!

ESP Course To Be Repeated

The UMass Continuing Education Division's short course in "Explorations in ESP" will be repeated beginning Nov. 28 by popular demand, the division has announced.

The extrasensory perception course was oversubscribed during its first session this past September so the same course is being offered Nov. 28 through Feb. 6. It meets for two hours each Wednesday evening at the Campus Center.

The student will study the experiences of others in the area of psychic phenomena and explore his or her own potential psychic ability. Participants will study the psychical faculty as it operates in their own lives and in their relationships. Through lectures and workshops the instructor will encourage student participation in demonstrations of thought control and concentration techniques.

The instructor, Ms. Claudette L. Kiely, is a lecturer, teacher, writer who has experienced ESP since her teens. She is a member of the American Society of Psychical Research (ASPR), ESP Research Associates Foundation, the Holyoke Speakers Club, and president of the Associated Speakers Clubs of Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Registration ends today; the $75 fee includes text, materials and instruction. Further information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst, 01002, telephone (413) 545-0905.

Scandinavian Lit.

The Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures will offer a unique Scandinavian literature course during the spring semester 1974: Danish 251/551, Dano-Norwegian literature.

The goals of this course are to give the student some familiarity with the literatures of Denmark, Norway (and Sweden) during the last 150 years. Featured in this course will be novels (and excerpts from novels), short stories and plays by, among others, J.P. Jacobsen, Martin Hansen, Hans Christian Andersen, Knut Hamsun, Henrik Ibsen, August Strindberg, and Par Lagerkivist.

A reading knowledge of one of these three Scandinavian languages is desirable, but not necessary. All works will be available in both the original language and in English translation. Class discussion, exams, and papers will be done in English.

SATF Deadline

The deadline for the submission of a Program Statement-Budget Request to receive SATF (Student Activities Tax Funds) monies for the fiscal year 1974-1975 is FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1973, at 5:00 p.m. in the Student Senate Office, Room 420 Student Union.

If there is any organization who believes that their program(s) warrant funding they should pick up a BUDGET INFORMATION PACKAGE, which is available in the Student Senate Office. Organizations who wish to submit a proposal for funding should pick up a package as soon as possible.

Proposals must conform to the specifications stated in the PACKET before they can be considered by the Budgets Committee. Proposals submitted before the deadline date will be given preference in their order of consideration by the Student Senate.

Harvard Ed. Grads To Come

The Harvard Graduate School of Education will be in the Student Development and Career Planning Center in Berkshire House on Wed., Nov. 28 from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. to discuss its program with interested students. Ms. Eunice Fine, Director of Admissions, will conduct two group meetings in the morning from 10-11 and 11-12 to give information and then will have individual interviews in the afternoon. She is interested in seeing Liberal Arts majors and also Master Candidates from our School of Education. Make an appointment in Berkshire House.

Wiesen To Speak

Prof. David Wiesen, chairman of the Classics department at Brandeis University, will speak on "Ancient Classics and the American Slavery Controversy," Thursday, Nov. 29, at UMass. The talk, sponsored by the UMass Classics department, will be at 4 p.m. in room 106 of Thompson Hall.

He is the author of "St. Jerome as a Satirist" and has translated St. Augustine's "City of God," books 8-11, for the Loeb Classical Library, published by Harvard University Press. He is working on a book entitled "Ancient Classics and the American Slavery Controversy."

Wood, Bromery On Unionization Issue

(Statements by UMass President Robert Wood and UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery on the collective bargaining election at UMass-Nov. 15 and 16 in which faculty turned down union representation. The vote was 718 against unionization; 510 for; 174 challenges; total votes cast 1404; faculty eligible about 1450. The union was the Massachusetts Teachers Association, working through a coalition with the local chapter of the AAUP, American Association of University Professors.)

President Wood's Statement:

I am pleased that members of the faculty of the Amherst campus have, by their votes, expressed confidence in established governance procedures.

The new governance policy adopted by the Board of Trustees earlier this year makes explicit the continuing role of faculty in the decision-making processes of the University and insures faculty members primary responsibility for development of policy concerning their status.

The effective management of a University requires that all concerned persons commit themselves. in a spirit of good will, to the preservation of the University as an institution. I believe that the governance process can move strongly to counteract feelings of alienation and apathy that grew as the University was developing into a major multi-campus institution. The governance has already demonstrated that University administration need not be seen as a series of adversary proceedings.

I made it clear that the University administration was committed to a fair and impartially conducted election on this matter, and we have carried out that pledge. I am happy that the faculty has reaffirmed its belief in the spirit of collegiality.

Chancellor Bromery's Statement:

I am extremely pleased by the large turnout of the faculty for the vote on this important issue. The administration considers the election results a vote of confidence in the new governance policy and a Faculty Senate form of faculty representation. We look forward to a continuing and strengthening collegial relationship with the faculty's elected representatives in the Faculty Senate. Effective governance requires participation by all members of the academic community and we welcome full participation by all members of the faculty on both sides of the representation question.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio is the confidential adviser, often showing a fascination for the hidden, the occult, an individual who wants to be involved in secret operations and who has a lusty, creative drive. Scorpio holds lively discussions with Capricorn, has some fear of Libra, makes money with Sagittarius, has differences with Leo. Scorpio can be jealous, possessive and loyal. Scorpio is a formidable foe but once, the competition is decided, becomes gracious, even helpful.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Trying to hold together opposing forces may be too much to ask — do what you can, not the impossible. Specifically, assert needs. Assume a more authoritative role. If this means a temporary split from partner, that will be. But situation is only transitory.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent is on revelation: What was kept under cover is likely to be exposed. This makes for a test. You either finish a relationship or strengthen it. No halfway. Know it and be grown-up about it. Aries, Libra persons are likely to be in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emotional batteries benefit of recharge. You could be recipient of "second chance." Leo, Aquarius persons could play important roles. Accent is on expressing feelings to someone who cares for you. Highlight self-esteem. Don't waste time trying to convert a hopeless case.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Home, marriage, base of operations — these are spotlighted and subject to sudden changes. You may be caught by surprise as one you respect acts in quick, impulsive, somewhat aggressive manner. Ride with tide. Rise to meet challenge. You can do it and succeed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel may not offer a smooth road. Means look for alternatives. Check reservations. Destination may be "moving." Where you think you want to go may not be where you finally do go. Relatives express differences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money and how it gets that way. You will be taking inventory, checking finanical reports and reviewing budget. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could play roles. Be specific and demand the same from others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will be gaining attention. You will be challenged and stimulated. If single, prospect of marriage is paramount. If married, mate makes announcement which could startle. Married or single, you will be involved in whirlwind activity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work within organization. Stick to rules. Utilize available material. Don't feel grass is necessarily greener elsewhere. Job you do now attracts eye of one who can aid. You receive meaningful compliment. Accept assignment in gracious manner. Strive for harmony at home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Many around you express unorthodox views. You may feel somewhat put upon by unusual statements, requests. Key is to heed inner voice without brooding. Improve without insisting on impossible goals. Pisces could figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent is on responsibility and prestige. You are able to display abilities and to illustrate goal. Others understand you to greater extent than in past. Your ambitions are clarified. You have solid idea of where to go and how to arrive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Get rid of unwanted burden. False altruism has no place in your sphere. Don't hang on to losing proposition. Raise eyes to new, wider horizons. Deal with Aries, Libra persons. Put ideas into action.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Much occurs behind the scenes and could involve salary, expenses and other payments and costs. Highlight creative approach. Make intelligent concession without abandoning principles. Leo could play key role.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have a fine sense of humor, an abundance of intellectual curiosity and draw to you many born under Gemini and Sagittarius. You make new start in December. You are fond of travel and you find writing a constructive outlet for creative energies. You are frank, tend to neglect diet and might have somewhat of a weight problem.

Team Handball: A Growing Sport

By MIKE BROPHY

There is a new sport blossoming on the UMass campus that is growing in popularity throughout, not only the United States, but also the world. Invented in Continental Europe neraly one hundred years ago, team handball is a combination of basketball, soccer, and hockey to the American who, for the most part, must compare all new games to those of prominence in the country.

Team handball is played three days a week in a P.E. class that is taught by student trained Bill Sangster. Sangster has high hopes for the growth of the game on campus. "I feel there is great potential in this game for becoming an IM regular and favorite here on campus," said Sangster in an interview last week.

The game can be played either indoors or out but, according to Sangster, appears to be a much faster game within a gymnasium because of the confining spaces in a gym.

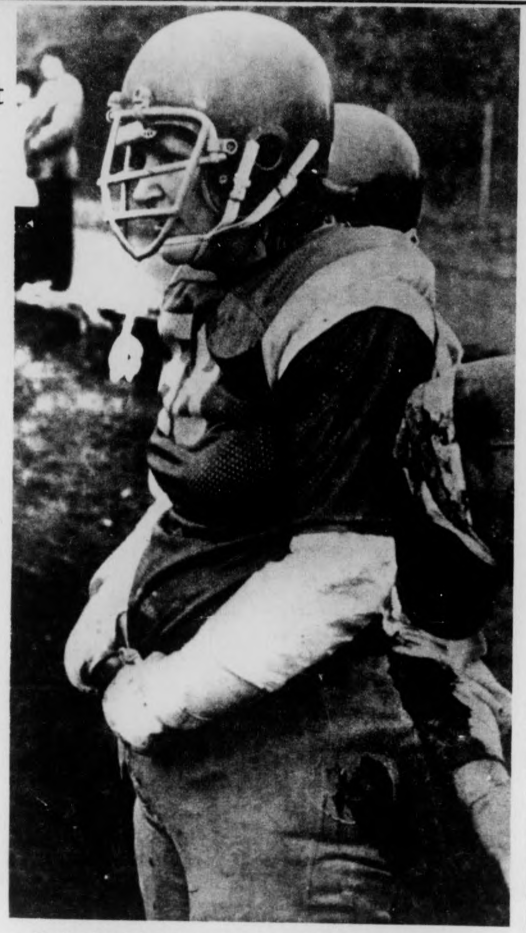
Played on a court about the size of a basketball court the game is played with a ball slightly smaller than a volleyball but weighing quite a bit more. The ball resembles a shrunken medicine ball although it is no where near as heavy.

A player may dribble the ball down the court and may take as many as three steps before passing the ball off. Failure to pass the ball off in three steps constitutes a travelling violation and the opposition is granted posession. "When you watch a real good team play the game," commented Sangster, "there is hardly any dribbling at all. The teams are so well precisioned that they simply zip passes up and down the court as though there were nothing to it."

Here on campus, Sangster recommends the game as a possible alternative to the regular conditioning program most athletes undertake saying, "You use almost every muscle in your body in this sport if you are playing it correctly and what could be better conditioning than that" said Sangster.

There will be three sections of the class being offered this coming semester and it is hoped that there will be a successful turnout.

The game in itself is played by teams of eleven each and is full of fast action from start to finish. "We try to keep things moving during the game to make it more exciting," said Sangster, "but like any game things do bog down once in a while.



Tackle Ann Schragg wasn't home watching somebody else play football Sunday. She was helping her West Seattle Bosomed Buddies to a 6-0 victory in the second annual Panty Bowl over the Greenwood Mod Squad. The league is made up of mothers of Little League Football players. Profits from the game were used to purchase equipment for the league.

Ohio State Holds Top Spot

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Unbeaten Ohio State, which prepped for Saturday's showdown against Big Ten co-leader Michigan with a 55-13 rout of winless Iowa last week, related the top spot in The Associated Press college football ratings, announced Tuesday.

There was no change among the positions of the top 13 teams from last week's poll.

B-Walk Bowl: Dela. & Grambling

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The University of Delaware and Grambling College were named Tuesday as opponents in the Boardwalk Bowl here Dec. 1.

Gorden Quits While Watching Stars Fall

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) - Jack Gordon, the most successful coach in the brief history of the Minnesota North Stars, quit the National Hockey League Tuesday, saying the pressure got the best of him.

Parker MacDonald, who played 15 years as a left winger for four NHL clubs and was a successful minor league manager, got the job.

And, General Manager Wren Blair said that if the North Stars-tied for sixth in the West Division with only three wins in 17 starts-said the North Stars had better start winning or he will start trading.

"The pressure got to my nerves more and more the past few weeks," a grim Gordon told a hastily called news conference. "It's been coming for a while. It was my nerves more than anything else. The response was not there. I was not getting the message to the players. I think the talent was there."

MacDonald, 40, in his second year as coach of New Haven in the American Hockey League, conducted a Tuesday morning practice and prepared for his debut as a major league coach against the Montreal Canadians Wednesday night.

The North Stars, who made the Stanley Cup playoffs under the 46-year-old Gordon each of his previous three years, were rapped by Blair for their play this year: "We have to face the reality that if the guys don't start coming around and we can make some satisfactory trades, we will. Maybe we should have made more trades in the off-season."

Going Down

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins announced Tuesday they are sending two goalies to a minor league affiliate in alternate two-week stints in order to give them more playing time.

Ross Brooks was to report immediately to the Boston Braves of the American Hockey League and see action in Thrusday night's game against the Rhode Island Reds.

When Brooks returns, Ken Broderick will join the Braves for two weeks.

Harriers '73 Season - Most Exciting

Thomas and Gillen running in the top twenty at the IC4A's

NEW ENGLAND CHAMPIONS — Coach O'Brien poses with his co-captains as they hold up the New England championship plaque. UMass placed four runners in the top 20 to win the meet.

YanCon & New England Champs, Third In East, 15th In Nation

By SCOTT HAYES

The 1973 Cross Country season was an exciting one to follow. The team went 8-3 over the dual meet portion of the season, bowing to Harvard and Providence, and then dropping a meet to Springfield as a result of resting the top seven runners.

The team then went on to win both the Yankee Conference meet and the New Englands, bettering Northeastern for the distinction of top team in New England.

Randy Thomas enjoyed a very successful season that included winning the Yankee Conference championship. Thomas did prove his point, as he beat Bruce Clark and then Mike O'Shea in the New Englands to clear up any thoughts about a freshman beating him two straight times. Thomas' season started out with a four-way tie for first in the meet against Boston College and ended up with him running the NCAA's with only one shoe, and finishing 78th.

Bill Gillin had a sort of "hot and cold" season. Gillin finished ahead of Thomas in the Harvard meet and then settled into a spot behind Thomas. Gillin also started the season in tying for first in the BC meet, and ended it with a slightly disappointing 127th in the nationals.

Tom Maguire had a season that won him the distinction of the most consistent UMass runner. Maguire was always there in second or third, no matter what race or who was running ahead of him. He could be counted on to come through when the going got tough.

John McGrail had simply "one hell of a year." The freshman started as a JV runner and broke into the varsity lineup, coming up with a clutch performance in the UConn meet and continued to improve with every meet, right up to Monday's gutsy performance in the nationals with the team for his last meet.

Chris Farmer and Paul Doiron, two more freshmen who broke into the varsity lineup, battled each other all season long for the sixth spot on the team, and took turns in running great races.

The team won two plaques this season, one trophy, and had its picture on the front page of the Collegian twice.

Coach Ken O'Brien's program of hard work paid off for the runners. The team surpassed the goals set by Bill Gillin at the start of the season. Gillin said the team wanted to win the New Englands (which they did) and finish in the top five in the IC4A's. UMass took third in the IC4A's, and went on to take 15th in the nationals. At the start of the season, no one thought that UMass would be going to the NCAA's in November, but the runners ran better with every meet, and proved what dedication and desire can do.

1973--the year that UMass sent its first cross country team to the NCAA's. Among the Oregon's and the Washington State's, UMass may have gone unnoticed, but many teams in the East found out who UMass was, and they had better beware because Thomas and company will be back next year.

..IF...IF...IF...--If Peil Pennington can get this kind of blocking from his offensive line and if Tom Bradshaw (82 - right) and his mates can apply this kind of pressure on Boston College quarterback Gary Marangi...then maybe UMass will have a chance to achieve a respectable 7-4 season. If not, it'll be a mediocre 6-5 year.

Gridders Face Last Chance To Redeem

By BILL BALLOU

The high hopes fostered in September's heat have since left the scene, but chances for a good, yes even excellent, season remain.

And while the Yankee Conference is lost, a win over Boston College can leave a pleasant taste in any UMie's mouth.

6-5. That's what the UMass record will be if they lose. If they win, 7-4. That's a helluva difference.

And there will be a helluva difference between the quality of opposition provided by the Eagles as opposed to New Hampshire.

BC plays a national (more or less) schedule, and it's improving, as witnessed by the addition of Texas next year and Notre Dame the year after. So the fact that UMass will be a heavy underdog is no surprise.

But Boston College has had an up-and-down season. They ripped Temple 45-0, Navy 44-7, and Texas A&M 32-24. They had Miami outplayed and beaten until the final minute, and lost 15-10.

By the same token they lost to Syracuse last week 24-13, a game they had no business losing, they just squeaked by Villa-nova 11-7, and were wracked by Pitt 28-14.

So the inconsistensies of BC make them hard to figure. Certainly they have a more highpwered program but their performances against Syracuse and Villanova make them appear vulnerable.

UMass should be at an emotional peak. There's the factor of playing the "big boys on the block," and they're on an emotional and physical rebound. The loss to Connecticut was the low point of the season for the Minutemen, and while the wins over Vermont and New Hampshire won't send the bowl folks into conniptions, they proved UMass can play winning football.

It's too early to say who'll be fit to play and who won't but it seems certain that being the last game of the season for all, and the last game of a career for some, if a guy shows waves on his encephalogram, he'll play.

There are three teams you can play the comparative score game with.

BC beat Temple 45-0, Temple beat Holy Cross 63-34, and Holy Cross beat UMass 30-28. (BC should be 76 point favorites.)

UMass beat Villanova 21-20 and BC beat them 11-7. Holy Cross lost to Syracuse 5-3 (on the strength of Frank Howard's three-run homer), and BC lost to Syracuse 24-13.

The Eagles, their pride hurt by last year's almost certainly be ridiculous favorites, something like 17 points. A win would assure them of a winning season (they're 5-4 right now). They lose to UMass as often as a total eclipse appears.

But didn't the Patroits beat the Packers last week?

UMass And Goliath

The 11th Hour On - David had an unfortunate scheduling appearance with Goliath. His attitude overshadowed his physical stature. According to notable sources he accepted his assignment and forthcoming bout with fate with unassuming calm. And in the Book of Kings we learn how to confront life. They're saying such about Boston College football games. But you have to be a Minuteman to appreciate that rap....

And so David, the son of Jesse of Bethlehem, soon to be crowned King of all Israel by Samuel, slew that sloppy Philistine. And in a performance viewed not by thousands but read by all mankind, the boy who was to rule over shepard for forty years, had to be questioned. His feat was supernatural, not of human origin. That point will be debated..So will a possible UMass win over BC this Saturday. Like David and his gargantuous feat, it shouldn't happen...I'm afraid it might.

UMass has no business beating the spread with BC this Saturday afternoon. But like an untold depression in seven years, it may happen. Both thoughts frighten me. But we live in an age that is so unpredictably governed by time. And with this thought in mind and with ten weeks of frustration behind, the UMass footballers could bring the historic pages of the Kings right before the very scoreboard at Alumni Stadium in the Heights. It's going to be a Redemption of sorts.

Yes, those ghostly galleons of MacPherson who'll remember the day when they haunted only themselves with their performance short of the Boardwalk Bowl, have one more shot at respectability. And in the past ability was not the answer. Neither was injury nor opportunity. Those darling Minutemen have been given an opportunity to atone for the cardinal sin of sport. This same sin allowed ravage at UConn, mockery with Rhode Island. These two won't be forgotten. And perhaps a win with the Eagles can't wash that indelible mark. The most telling loss of the autumn came with a matchup with emotion...neither time nor BC can repair...

Sport, within the plastic playpen it permeates, not only allows one to create, explore and exhibit knowledge, technique, and personality, it also allows for growth. And for ten weeks through any excuse you may surface, the UMass footballers at times became more progressively disarayed and somewhat ludicrous. And with the many hours of execution already in the well of their 6-4 mark, the teaching has not hit home. Ten straight games and not a complete team effort. Someone has to pick up the tab. And it ain't gonna be MacPherson or the press..Don't look beyond the bridge of your helmet.

But Saturday will say much for their portfolio of '73, the year of Pennington, Berra and nothing else. But I think if for once this prostrate fall more than two can collaborate, more than two can be remembered.

Sport has given the footballers one more chance, the precious chance of a lifetime. Redemption. It's a battle the must wage with themselves, not BC. Not Pennington, not Berra, will win this one. Only that psychological confrontation with emotion, that peripheral element, will this one be decided. Asking BC admist the bruises of Miami, Tulane, Texas A & M, and the like to get ready for the Yancon's is like putting a suit on a hobo and asking him to have social graces..Just can't be done.

And so the world of sport allows for failure; allows for the completion of work undone; allows for revenge; the reparation of disaster. And in the case of the Boston College football game, sport has given a selective few one more chance...perhaps one they don't deserve.

And as so in the Book of Kings, an opportunity becomes history...

Bloodless Coup In Greece: Papadopoulos Ousted, "Friend" Of King Installed

By PHILIP DOPOULOS
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP) - Lt. Gen. Phaedon Gizikis, described as a rightist and friend of ex-King Constantine, overthrew President Geroge Papadopoulos in a bloodless coup Sunday, eight days after antigovernment student uprisings in which 13 persons were killed.

A communique said Papadopoulos was ousted because he was pushing Greece toward parliamentary rule too fast and straying from the goals of the 1967 coup that put the former colonel in power.

Andreas Papandreou, son of former Greek Premier George Papandreou and a frequent critic of the Papadopoulos regime, said in Stockholm that the new military regime was "entirely the work of the United States," and "just a change of facade" founded on American initiatives.

Gizikis was immediately sworn in as president in a nationally televised ceremony. He said in a subsequent nationwide address that he accepted the job "through duty to the motherland and the voice of national conscience."

Gizikis promised to exercise his duties "with a spirit of moderation, modesty and impartiality" and said his sole ambition was to "contribute to the smooth operation of the political system."

As dusk settled over the country, units of the Greek navy sailed into Phaleron Bay, within sight of the capital. Most of them were destroyers and submarine chasers. They dropped anchor near the U.S. 6th Fleet carrier Independence, which uses Athens as its home port.

Later, Greek air force jets buzzed the outskirts of the city. Their intentions were not immediately known.

Diplomatic sources said Gizikis, about 55, was a conservative and a friend of Constantine, who is residing temporarily in Britain. There was no immediate comment from the king but a source in his London entourage professed surprise.

Papadopoulos abolished the constitutional monarchy June 1 and declared Greece a republic. There was no indication whether the new military government wanted the exiled king back.

But a possible indication of the officers' sentiments was seen in the fact that the title "royal" was attached to an air force communique issued after the coup.

Papadopoulos, 54, was reported under arrest at his suburban seaside villa. Athens, the capital, and Salonica, the country's second largest city, were described as calm.

But most communications were cut off within Greece and at times between Greece and the rest of the world. Troops, tanks and armored personnel carriers ringed Athens and guarded state buildings.

Communiques broadcast by the Greek armed forces radio network indicated that the parliamentary elections Papadopoulos promised to hold sometime next year will be postponed.

With Muldaur, Tonight

Mayall, Springsteen Rock The Cage

By STEVE FELD

It was an evening of the old: the distinguished presence of John Mayall, father and forefather to countless contemporary musicians; and the new: the exciting, dynamic Bruce Springsteen, at the Cage last night. Two-thirds of the gym was filled to see the first of what will be two shows. Tomorrow, Mayall will be featured again with Cambridge's own Maria Muldaur replacing Springsteen at the opening spot.

For Bruce Springsteen, the concert marked his second appearance at UMass. Opening for Cold Blood and It's a Beautiful Day at last May's Spring Concert, he proceeded to impress virtually everybody who ventured into Alumni Stadium that day. Backed by his five-man entourage, he played a stunning set of good, solid material.

He has gone on to release a new lp, The Wild, The Innocent, and The E. Street Shuffle, some of which he played at last night's show.

What the people got to see last night was not Bob Dylan, not Van Morrison, but Bruce Springsteen, a polished, convincing performer in his own right. Bruce was energetic and overflowing with stage charisma. Onstage, in between mumblings introducing the songs, he displayed his best modified-Mick Jagger rooster walk and spasmodic Joe Cocker grimaces. He has adopted a slick streetfighter pose that's just this side of Sha Na Na, sans the theatrics and Fifties hokum-pokum, which has added a new dimension to his act since last spring.

Clarence, the alto sax player, was back with Bruce. He was the dude Bruce credited with supplementing "that R&B feeling" which is so much the magic of Springsteen's music. "He once played with James Brown, y'know."

And Clarence looked dapper! Sporting a white suit, paisley shirt, and gold-rimmed straw-brimmed fedora hat, he and Springsteen led the band in another impressive performance. Encore!

And there was one. They all came back, including the bass player that looked like Leon Russell. The band rocked on and, amidst wild applause which almost drowned out one of Springsteen's high decibel leads, they made a graceful exit.

Mayall took the stage with his five-member group, after a half-hour break, and promptly thanked everybody who allowed him to play at "Amherst College". Amherst College? That's UMass, John. He sported a Panama hat and a new shaven appearance which made him look gaunt and rather much like a pilgrim.

Sitting down at his electric piano he introduced his band, to remind us we were in very good company. Guitarist Freddie Robinson was a favorite with the crowd. Prior to his slow blooze solo, he asked the audience for some herbacial substance, got none, and satisfied himself with a hand-rolled cigarette which prompted him to shy away from the spotlight when was being introduced. "Help the Kid", he mock-pleaded to the crowd's enjoyment.

Mayall stressed the improvisational aspect of his music and how no two concerts of his are the same. "Some time we sound like shit, but some time we are something else...", he told a staid, obedient crowd that, for all but the first row, stayed in their seats and were content with either tapping their toe or shaking a foot to Mayall's 12-bar blues. "Everything we do is new", he added.

The high point came when, with people yelling for his classic "Room To Move", he introduced just that..."Room To Move". They played it magnificently. Drummer Keef Hatley looked quite colorful. He resembled a character out of the Eagles' "Desperado" and the New Riders's "Gypsy Cowboy". Very western he was, but his Cockney accent gave him away. He read "Melody Maker" in between songs.

Red Holloway, Blue Mitchell, and Victor Gaskin, Mayall's remaining members, lent the evening a high-brow authenticity.

If it's what you want, there should be some fine music with Mayall and Muldaur tonight at the Cage.

Students React To Nixon's Speech

By MIKE KNEELAND

Most students interviewed in the Campus Center after President Nixon's energy crisis speech last night said they believe he is acting too late and has "gone easy" on business.

Senior Joann Simpson echoed many students' reactions saying she has no confidence in Nixon's decisions. "He should have detected the problem a long time ago," she said. Ms. Simpson said it is obvious Nixon's measures to deal with the crisis are favoring business.

Nick Apostola, President of the Student Government Association, agrees with Ms. Simpson. "What makes me mad is that he didn't make businesses like McDonald's shut off their big signs."

Apostola pointed out that Arab nations have only supplied 6% of the nation's oil in the past but that Nixon is predicting a 17% shortage this winter.

Sophomore Jeff Carlson supports Nixon's apparent laxness towards business. He says it is essential to the economy that business are "kept going."

Steve Tripoli, Collegian Editor-In-Chief, said he thought Nixon's speech basically sound. He added however that the energy problem should have been "seen before now."

Most students said they do not think closing gas stations from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday, as the President proposed, will serve a purpose.

Alumnus Terry Gender said she believes people will simply stock up on gas during the week.

Few people interviewed believe Mr. Nixon is fabricating a problem to take the Watergate pressures away.

Many students said they did not see the President's speech due to its untimely airing, 7 p.m.

Further Action Necessary

Nixon Starts Rationing Of Home Fuel

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon Sunday night announced the rationing of home heating oil starting Jan. 1 and asked for a voluntary halt to Sunday sales of gasoline beginning Dec. 1, pending authorization of a mandatory ban.

Nixon said gasoline will be brought under a mandatory allocation program cutting deliveries to wholesale and retail dealers 15 per cent.

And he said petroleum production must be adjusted, reducing gasoline output and increasing production of heating oil.

The President said in a television and radio address to the nation, "We have now developed final plans for allocating reduced quantities of heating oil this winter."

"These plans, to be published Tuesday, will call for an average reduction of 10 percent of heating oil for industrial use, 15 per cent for home use, and 25 per cent for commercial use."

Nixon did not spell it out but his top energy adviser, John A. Love told newsmen at a White House briefing that dealers would be legally required to impose those percentage reductions upon the home heating oil delivered to their customers.

Nixon said householders must lower their thermostats by six degrees and "those who fail to adopt such a cutback risk running out of fuel before the winter is over."

Once Congress gives him the authority, Nixon said, "gas stations will be required to close" on weekends between 9 p.m. Saturdays and midnight Sunday night.

Meanwhile, he asked all service stations to stop selling gasoline between those hours beginning Dec. 1 on a voluntary basis.

Nixon also announced "a phased reduction of an additional 15 per cent in the consumption of jet fuel for airplane passenger flights, bringing the total reduction to approximately 25 per cent."

And he said he would establish, when Congress permits, nationwide speed limits of 50 miles per hour for automobiles and 55 miles per hour for long distance buses and trucks.

Upon receiving authorization, he said, "I shall order the curtailment of ornamental outdoor lighting for homes and the elimination of all commercial lighting except that which indentifies places of business.

"In the meantime," he said, "we are already planning to curtail such lighting at the White House this Christmas, and I am asking that all of you act now on a voluntary basis to reduce or eliminate unnecessary lighting."

The President said additional actions will be necessary.

Arts Workshops Look To Student Input

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Community arts workshops will be held in the Campus Center at various dates between November 27 and January 29.

The workshops, open to all and geared toward the establishment of 100 arts councils in surrounding neighborhoods and communities, are a presentation of the Arts Extension Service of the Division of Continuing Education.

Stan Rosenberg, director of the Extension Service, told the Collegian that those attending the workshops will be taught the organizational techniques necessary to set up independent, self-supporting councils of the arts.

The initial project of each new council will be to plan and carry out an arts festival.

A Community Arts Development Advisor from the University Extension Service will serve as a consultant to the newly established councils.

Rosenberg said that he hopes enough students will be interested in setting up a council on campus which would be concerned with orchestras, choruses, dance groups and all arts groups within the University.

Interested persons should contact Rosenberg at 545-2013. Those attending must make a commitment to attend all nine of the workshops which will be held from 7-10 on consecutive Tuesday nights.

The following is a list of workshops. Names of leaders for all of the workshops and locations for each workshop are not known at this time.

The first workshop was held on November 20. Subsequent workshops to be held are:

Workshop II-Nov. 27; Getting Started; Room 113 C.C.

Workshop III-Dec. 4; Publicity and Public Relations, led by Marian Freeman, Executive Director Middletown, N.Y., Arts Council.

Workshop IV-Dec. 11; Working With Business and Civic Organizations; Room 101 C.C.

Workshop V-Dec. 18; The Arts and Local Government; Room 113 C.C.

Workshop VI-Jan. 8; Arts in School, led by Ross Headley, Superintendent of Schools, School Union 42 Mass. and Diane Perkins, Mass. Council on Arts and Humanities; Room 113 C.C.

Workshop VII-Jan 15; Arts and Community Service Institution.

Workshop VIII-Jan. 22; Helping the Creative Artist.

Workshop IX-Jan. 29; Ideas Galore.

Four additional workshops will be presented on consecutive Saturdays from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. to help in setting up arts festivals.

Minority Report Sights Faults, Blasts Proposed Rhet Program

By CHRIS WALTER

"It is my conviction that the proposed Rhetoric program would be educationally disastrous for both students and faculty..." stated Howard Gadlin in a recently released Minority Report of the Campus Committee on Communication Skills, (CCCS).

Gadlin, who is the only dissenting member of CCCS, centers his criticisms upon recommendation of the CCCS that a competency exam be instituted. This exam would be used both as a filtering device to allow students not needing Rhetoric to avoid it, and as an exit device which students would have to pass in order to fulfill the Rhetoric requirement.

Gadlin faults the competency exam as being reductionist and punitive. "The committee's guiding principle has been a reductionist conception - "to teach people to explain simple things clearly" - that seems condescending and inappropriate for college education," he states in the minority report. By forcing students to pass an exam in order to fulfill a requirement, Gadlin sees the CCCS as "misunderstanding our educational task and then settling on requiring a minimum level of competence...The committee inadvertently sets the minimum as the maximum."

Gadlin further states that "within its stated goal of achieving minimum competence, the committee has created a program that would be punitive at its best and blatantly discriminatory at its worst." Gadlin feels that an attempt to define "competence in terms of 'common devices' and 'accepted standards' reflects the class and racial biases inherent in the standardization process." Gadlin feels that by "separating communication skills from substantive topics of concern, familiarity, interest or relevance to non-white, non-middle class students," these students would be discriminated against. Gadlin goes on to state that since the CCCS program requires all students to pass the exam "no matter how satisfactory their performance, no matter how often they passed...courses...In this feature the program is punitive."

Gadlin also states that "the teaching situation created by this proposal is equally unattractive for graduate students and ill-suited to their teacher training." Gadlin goes on to say that "the final Committee proposal - that the Rhetoric handbook printed for each student is to be the 'contract between the student and the Rhetoric program' - ignores the primary relation between an individual teacher and his or her class." Gadlin feels that a lack of trust by the committee in graduate instructors has caused them to make an unnecessarily restrictive program which denies both teachers and students courses which are "challenging."

Gadlin concludes his report by questioning the great amount of authority given to Director of Rhetoric and the Rhetoric board which CCCS proposed. According to Gadlin, "The various dilemmas created by this program are further confounded by the inordinate power given to the director of Rhetoric, and the board with minimal provisions for checks and controls of that power."

Gadlin includes in his report the following recommendations: first, that the committee proposal be rejected with the exception of the Communication Skills Center; second, that the Rhetoric requirement be reconsidered by the Faculty Senate; third, that if the Rhetoric requirement be retained, the competency exam should be used only as a screening device, and not as a requirement for graduation, and that a variety of different courses be offered matching student interests.

This report will be presented to the Academic Matters Council in response to the CCCS report.

UFW; Local Progress Slow But Sure

By BILL BROWN

Last Wednesday while most people were making last minute preparations to enjoy their Thanksgiving holiday, a small band of United Farm Worker supporters held a celebration of their own outside a Springfield supermarket; a Workers Festival. A festival to celebrate the gains made on behalf of the farm workers, and to reaffirm the promise to continue with all that still needs to be done in their uphill struggle.

Twenty or so people gathered in the parking lot of the Food Mart store on Cooley Street, Springfield, culminating a week of picketing in the Western Mass area that saw the U.F.W. gain renewed commitments from some of the major area chain stores. According to Charles March, the U.F.W. coordinator for the Holyoke-Springfield area, the Big Y stores had agreed to remove their non-union lettuce by the end of last week; the management of the Finast stores had refused to talk to anyone from the union, but had cleaned their shelves of non-union lettuce and grapes; and the Food Mart stores were carrying union lettuce, but were being picketed for continuing to have scab grapes in the stores.

When he was asked just how successful the entire campaign has been to boycott the use of non-union produce, March said, "With all the commitments we have, it still represents only 25% of the sales of lettuce. But, once we have the large chain stores committed, the smaller independent stores should be easier to sign, since they're much more susceptible to public reaction to their policies. That is where we're heading next. We hope to begin to talk to the smaller stores and some of the institutions, such as hospitals and nursing homes that also buy much of the California produce."

The particular Food Mart store that was being picketed was still a very busy store on that final day before the holiday, but the U.F.W.'s press spokesman, Susan Garvey felt that their work there had been successful nonetheless.

She said, "Last night (Tuesday) we were here for an hour and a half, and we turned away 20 cars. At the price they're selling the grapes we figure they'll have to sell over 1,000 pounds to make up for just that lost business. Also, many other people have said that they wouldn't buy any grapes in the store."

Talking to some of the shoppers leaving the store did seem to show that most were not buying any grapes and seemed somewhat sympathetic to the U.F.W. supporters who were passing out literature in front of the store. One comment that was also mentioned often by the shoppers was the feeling that while they did favor the sale of union produce they should be entitled to make a choice on buying non-union produce if the alternative was stocking none of that item at all.

Of the group of people standing in the cold of the evening in the far end of the parking lot, many planned to travel to Boston later that evening to take part in a 24 hour fast and vigil in front of the A & P headquarters.

A & P was being singled out for their refusal to do anything at all in the way of making any commitments with the Farmworkers.

Standing off to one side, the festival gathering seemed small when compared with the numbers of people swirling around them looking for parking spaces and marching in and out of the store, and it is also true that the struggle to gain widespread support for their boycott has been slow and hard to obtain. But, the fact remains that many of the major chains are now dealing in union produce in Western Mass. So, where the Big Y goes, can Louis be far behind.

Learning To Survive

GSP Making The Grade

By DAVE LETTERS

Participants in the newly-formed UMass Global Survival Program (GSP) are reportedly surviving very well, as they tune up for finals and the end of a very interesting and unique semester.

The Global Survival Program is designed to introduce freshmen to college life and to prepare them to deal with the problems which confront men in today's world. The Program began this semester with a freshmen class of 82 students. Only one student has dropped out. Faculty and students in the program have attributed the low drop-out rate to the "relevancy of the program".

G.S.P. is offered to freshmen as a special, innovative method of college life. Members of the group live and eat together, and attend the same small classes together. The classes are usually short blocks of instruction which cover aspects of the total environment. Some topics covered include: computers and their implications for man; and pollution and its problems and possible solutions. Overpopulation and its related problems, of famine, poverty, and poor housing are also discussed.

The Global Survival Program has a core faculty of five professors, with additional instructors for special topics. Lectures, films, open discussions, and small classes are also integral parts of the program.

Because the participants in the program live and work together so closely, a strong, cohesive, group feeling exists among the members.

The group recently went on a weekend camping trip to Conway, New Hampshire. Students and faculty together prepared the camp site, cut wood, cooked meals, and lived together. The students voiced their approval of such activities, saying that communication between themselves and faculty members greatly increased.

Student reaction to the program ranges from "good" to "great" with little dissent. Their biggest gripe is that the group is expected to cover much more work than the average freshman work load.

Some of the students disapprove of the extra work, while others feel they are receiving a bonus in terms of additional learning and a variety of living experiences.

Members of the Program deal with such modern-day problems as cancer, computers, communism, class struggle, and corruption. The purpose of the group is to try to understand these problems and offer rational solutions to them. In dealing with such topics, students study outside material in preparation to class discussion.

Intensive counseling and academic planning are extra bonuses for those enrolled in the program. All students have individual counselors.

Although the program lasts for an entire academic year (two semesters), some students may be admitted to the program for only the second semester. This decision rests with the students already enrolled in the program. If an increased enrollment is decided upon, present members will determine who and why a prospective student will be admitted. Students caution any prospective participants that the work load is more than the average freshman experiences at UMass. Any second-semester freshman who is interested in joining the program should contact the Global Survival Program Office, located in Hills North.

President Nixon addressed the nation last night on the energy crisis. In his usual verbal flamboyance, Mr. Nixon asked for increased voluntary energy cutbacks. Dick also announced a plan (Project Independence), which would make the United States independent of the other energy producing nations, in that we would produce all the energy we need. Unimpressed by pie-in-the-sky promises, some Amherst residents have taken matters into their own hands.

Bomb Scare Closes Mall

By MDC STAFF

A bomb scare last Friday delayed the grand opening of Mountain Farms Mall on Route 9 for an hour and a half.

Police ordered the multi-million dollar complex closed shortly before 6 p.m. after an unidentified young woman phoned in the bomb threat to Northampton radio station WHMP.

A station spokesman said the young woman was "probably in her late teens." He said the woman told the station that a bomb was set to explode at the mall "because of the energy crisis". The spokesman also speculated that she might have been objecting to the large amount of electricity used in lighting the mall.

About 2000 people were evacuated from 35 stores and 4 theaters in the mall. Hadley and state police arrived on the scene, along with two Hadley fire trucks and 25 policemen.

The mall reopened at 7:30 that same night.

SW Assembly Issues Rocked By Debate

Unanticipated debate occurred at the last Southwest Assembly meeting when a bill was brought forth asking for $320.00 for a project sponsored by the Resouce Center of Hampden Commons. The project involved the making of Christmas cards by any SW resident.

"It would provide a service for students to utilize," said Maureen Mitchell, a member of the Social and Cultural Programming Committee which is in charge of activities in Hampden.

But, Larry Sinewitz felt that the term "Christmas cards" did not adhere to the separation of state and church policy. Because of his objection, the first of a series of amendments was passed - that of changing the words to "any cards."

A serious complaint to the bill was brought up by Steven Dropkin. He proposed that the Social and Cultural Programming Committee retain the $3000 given to them at the beginning of the year, but with the stipulation that the Assembly approve their spending. This stemmed from the fact that the committee could give the money without permission of the Assembly.

The rational behind this motion dealt with the fact that the SCP Committee was a subsidary of the Assembly and the money originated in the Assembly and, therefore, the Assembly should have control over its money.

Ms. Mitchell, although she disapproved of the "immediate emotional response" by the Assembly to the craft service, did agree to this amendment. She felt that it was a "compromised solution and acceptable to the Committee."

The motion did pass which means that the Assembly now has control over all of its money. It also means that the SCP Committee, which had approved giving the $320 themselves at a meeting held yesterday afternoon, could no longer give that money.

It also means that the $50 given to the dorms who are sponsoring the party in Hampden this weekend for SW will not be able to have that money. How the Assembly can get the money back is being discussed.

The $320 for the project will return next week for approval by the Assembly. But this time, Ms. Mitchell plans to present it as a craft shop rather than the making of Christmas cards.

The other major issue discussed at the meeting was the allocation of $850 to Patterson House for intersession courses and colloquia. The idea is the same as MacKimmie Humanity House's intersession program.

The question did arise as to whether the two Houses could join programs because of housing of students and the energy problem but MacKimmie representatives said that they would not have the room to house Patterson people.

Also, the Patterson people were opposed to the idea because they felt their program offered different things than MacKimmie. The two major courses that are different are a course in Human Relations and one in Theater. Helen Fellows, presenter of the proposal did not comment on any other major differences.

Dot Burke, Head of Resident for Patterson did say that as far as the housing was concerned, the money asked for had no effect on dorm payments. The money would go only to the instructors.

The motion was passed 14-0-4.

Defeated at the meeting was a bill asking for $144 for the Christian Children's Fund Inc. The money would have sponsored one child for the period of one year. It was defeated primarily because the Assembly is running low on funds and choose to work in SW first.

MUA Airs Impeachment Talk Tonight

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (University of Massachusetts radio, 91.1 FM) will air a discussion on local efforts to bring about the impeachemnt of President Richard M. Nixon.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guests for the live, 60-minute forum will be members of the regional Committee to Impeach Nixon and the Five College Ad Hoc Committee to Impeach Nixon.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during tonight's live broadcast.

Women, Speak Up

Many women who are University students have felt for a long time that their special needs are not being met through the existing counseling and career planning centers. Too often, they are encouraged to give up aspirations in favor of becoming wives and mothers. Or if they insist on some guidance in planning a career, they are channeled into the nursing or teaching professions.

In an attempt to address these and other grievances, the Student Development Task Force is currently holding hearings. These hearings are open to everyone. Out of them, the task force hopes to come up with some concrete recommendations for the future development of the now merged counseling and career planning offices. Your input could be critical as to how this new Student Development Center will operate.

It is hoped that all women, will stop in at the hearings listed below and express your opinions and experiences about the counseling and career planning services at the University and also offer suggestions and criticisms as to how to revise them. We need to hear from you all! The hearings are: Nov. 27, Campus Center 903, 7:00-9:00, Nov. 29, Campus Center 162, 12:00-2:00, Dec. 1, Campus Center 105, 3:00-5:00, Dec. 5, Campus Center 105, 12:00-5:00.

All COLLEGIAN Staff members interested in attending the Christmas Wayzgoose must see Gib for tickets soon. It is in the Campus Center December 7th. Tickets are $5.

In The Nation And The World

Nixon Takes Next Step

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon prepared Sunday to divert the flow of shortage-stricken petroleum away from the family car and into the furnaces of households and industries.

Nixon scheduled a 7 p.m. EST national broadcast to announce steps to alter the fuel pattern and head off an economic crisis now threatened by the energy crisis.

Administration sources said Nixon planned:

—To close all gasoline stations from 9 p.m. Saturday night to midnight Sunday night.

—To urge refineries to make less gasoline and more home heating oil, diesel and jet fuel, and residual oil, which is burned by power plants and industries.

—To direct a speed limit of 50 miles an hour for passenger cars and 55 miles an hour for trucks and buses on interstate highways.

—To ask the states to adopt similar speed limits.

—To reduce the wholesale allocation of home heating oil by 15 per cent for residences, by 25 per cent for commercial buildings, and by 10 per cent for industries.

The President was not expected to adopt direct consumer rationing of fuel, or to seek new fuel taxes or price increases.

Holding a fuel rationing in reserve as a last resort, the administration was following a two-part strategy to narrow the growing gap between supply and demand.

The Interior Department's Office of Energy Data and Analysis reported on Nov. 19 that the petroleum shortage would reach almost 3.5 million barrels a day in the first quarter of 1974, almost 18 per cent of the potential demand.

Unless corrective action was taken quickly, the report warned, shortages of residual oil would begin developing as early as Dec. 3 and would increase by early next year to more than 29 per cent.

Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton warned that such a shortage could result in electrical brownouts or blackouts, particularly in New England and the Middle Atlantic states.

The strategy outlined by the report and now being followed by the White House calls for reduction of gasoline production from the current 47 per cent of refinery output to about 41.3 per cent.

As a result, the report said an expected 11 per cent gasoline shortage would jump to 21 per cent.

The missing gasoline must come out of the tank of the family car; the report said private driving must be reduced 50 per cent, permitting emergency and business vehicles to keep moving.

But the refineries then could make more residual oil to keep power plants and industry running and save jobs. They could also produce more home heating oil and diesel and jet fuel.

Gallop Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts is the leading choice of Democrats for their party's presidential nomination, according to the latest Gallup Poll.

The poll also shows that if Kennedy decided not to seek the nomination, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and Sens. Edmund Muskie of Maine and George McGovern of South Dakota would be the leading contenders.

TRYING TO KEEP UP WITH DEMAND--Floyd Colby of Henniker, a wood cutter, busy at work cutting hard wood, as the demand increases from the energy crisis. A cord of wood--a pile eight feet long, four feet high, and four feet wide--has risen from $15-40 early this fall to $60-80 in some cases, said Paul Bofinger of the Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests.

Energy Crisis

Here Are The Options

By NICK TATRO
Associated Press Writer

Hydrogen-fueled cars, flower-powered utilities and peat-driven generators are being suggested as alternatives to petroleum power.

With oil and gas in short supply and the cost of petroleum products steadily rising, even some of the more unusual proposals can no longer be brushed aside as science fiction.

One substitute explored by Stanford Research Institute would be to tap plants as a fuel.

Dr. Robert E. Inman, manager of the institute's plant biology department, explained:

"We're talking about growing and harvesting plants and using plant tissue in dry form to be burned as coal to generate steam to generate electricity, or to chemically convert the dry plant material to natural gas."

Cost of this method would be competitive with other fuels and plants such as sunflowers or sugar cane could yield up to 500 times as much energy as would be required to harvest them, he said.

The hitch: it would take a lot of land.

About 70 million acres, roughly as much as that devoted to corn production in the United States, would be needed to satisfy 95 per cent of the nation's current natural gas needs, they said.

John A. Duffie, head of the University of Wisconsin Solar Energy Laboratory, says solar heating systems for the home could be available commercially in about a year.

"Rising energy costs have made solar heat competitive with conventional fuels and it is now an economical alternative in new buildings in many parts of the United States," he said.

Such systems, preferably built in the roof, would have a number of flat solar panels to collect sun rays.

The hitch: They would cost between $2,000 and $3,000 for an average three-bedroom home in a northern state and a conventional furnace would be needed for heat during severe cold spells and long periods of overcast skies.

Douglas Fraser, a United Auto Workers union vice president, recently suggested peat as a source of fuel.

The problem: "It's not a question of how you're going to run an engine off hydrogen but how you're going to bring enough of it with you. Gasoline is a nice condensed fuel. Hydrogen is not," said one researcher.

A 50-gallon tank of hydrogen would be required to produce as much energy as a 20-gallon tank of gasoline.

Truman Called Nixon "...Goddamn Liar"

The late President Harry S. Truman once said Richard Nixon was a "shifty-eyed, goddamn liar," whom he detested, according to a new book.

Writer Merle Miller's latest book, "Plain Speaking" included a series of interviews with Truman at Independence, Mo., in which Truman said Nixon could be defeated easily in any presidential election.

Asked why, Truman replied:

"Because Nixon is a shiftyeyed, goddamn liar, and people know it." Truman replied.

"I can't figure out how he came so close to getting elected President in 1960. They say young Kennedy deserves a lot of credit for licking him, but I just can't see it. I can't see how the son of a bitch even carried one state."

Truman, who was 77 years old at the time of the interviews, some of which were tape-recorded, said Nixon and former Gov. Lloyd C. Stark of Missouri were the "only two men the whole history of the country that I can't stand."

In the book, Truman was quoted as calling former Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark a "damn fool from Texas" whose appointment was "my biggest mistake" as President.

He said Eisenhower, his successor as President, was a weak field commander in the Army and was "nothing but a damn coward" during the early 1950s when the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., was charging widespread Communist infiltration in the government.

As for MacArthur, whom he dismissed from command for insubordination during the Korean war., Truman said. "There were times when he...well. I'm afraid when he wasn't right in the head."

Truman said he fired MacArthur "because he wouldn't respect the authority of the President. I didn't fire him because he was a dumb son of a bitch, although he was....."

Germany Joins Sun. Driving Ban

By OTTO DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) - West Germany, Europe's largest industrial nation, joined five of its neighbors in enforcing a ban on Sunday pleasure driving. The atmosphere in some areas was like a carnival.

Throngs of hikers, including small children, trekked along the edges of autobahns, a 2,000-plus mile network of superhighways.

On the transit routes to West Berlin, 125 miles inside East Germany, traffic was practically at a standstill since the divided city was included in the Sunday driving ban.

It marked the first time since the 1948-49 blockade that Communist harassment was not responsible for the sharp cutdown on traffic.

Inside West Berlin, a carnival atmosphere reigned with bicyclists and even horseback riders claiming their right to the Kurfuerstendamm, the main street. Some revellers lit a bonfire in the middle of the roadway.

Angered by government and oil company energy policies, 200 Communists took to the streets of Essen in the industrial heartland of the Ruhr. They tugged small cars behind them after authorities had banned a motorized procession.

Demonstrating for nationalization of private oil companies, the Communists broke the unaccustomed Sunday silence with such chants as: "The big shots can drive. The little people are told to save."

Crime Commission Makes Final Report

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government corruption skims millions from the public treasury and nourishes the growth of street crime, says a federal crime commission in a summons for citizen action.

"Without deliberate, courageous citizen participation, the criminal justice system will be unable to deal with the serious crimes committed by those who hold positions of public trust," said the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals.

In its sixth and final report, the commission said the givernment battle against crime is doomed without citizen participation in efforts ranging from youth recreation to enlightened scrutiny of politicians.

Much of the report was drafted before the Watergate scandal developed. It is the result of a two-year study financed by a $1.75 million grant from the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

The report said "most people in public service are honest and dedicated," but showing that the public believes government corruption is widespread.

Official wrongdoing "results in a staggering cost to the American taxpayer, and the existence of corruption breeds further crime by providing for the citizen a model of official lawlessness that undermines any acceptable rule of law," the report stated.

"The direct costs are incalculable, but they are believed to be astronomical," the commission continued.

As remedies, the commission proposed these steps:

—States should adopt an ethics code and create an ethics board of private citizens. The board should have subpoena powers and should be required to conduct public hearings when there is evidence of official wrongdoing.

—Public officials should be required to disclose their financial and professional interests.

—States should adopt campaign finance laws "at least as stringent" as the 1971 Federal Election Campaign Act, which requires regular public reports of campaign committees and all funds received and spent by the committees and candidates.

—States should set ceilings on campaign spending and should ban political contributions by individuals who regularly do business with the state.

Final Okay Next Month

Israel Coy With Conference

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Premier Golda Meir's government announced Sunday that Israel is willing in principle to attend a history-making conference opening Dec. 18 aimed at working out a long-term peace settlement with the Arabs.

An Egyptian official in Algiers, where Arab leaders were gathering for summit talks, said the timing of the Israeli acceptance was an obvious attempt to sow discord among the Arabs and prevent them from fashioning a unified strategy.

A communique issued after a Cabinet meeting in Jerusalem said Mrs. Meir would give her final decision on next month's Geneva peace parley after Israel receives a formal invitation to attend.

The Israelis had been pushing for delay because of national elections scheduled Dec. 31. Officials in Jerusalem said Mrs. Meir had agreed "in principle" to the Dec. 18 opening date because Israel expected substantive negotiations to begin only after the Israeli elections.

The Geneva conference will mark the first time Arabs and Israelis formally attend a high-level international conference designed to settle their 25-year-old dispute peacefully.

The Arab kings and presidents in Algiers for the summit opening Monday were trying to forge a unified Arab position for the negotiations.

Egypt and Syria, the main Arab combatants in the October war, already have expressed their willingness to participate and are eager to get solid backing from their Arab bretheren.

But the Egyptian official in Algiers said President Anwar Sadat is reluctant to have Egypt attend the Geneva talks unless there has been some withdrawal of Israeli forces along the Suez Canal.

He said Egypt has come under fire from some Arab quarters for signing the cease-fire and charged the Israelis with trying to capitalize on this.

"They know that some Arab states do not understand our position and our acceptance of the cease-fire," he said, "and the Israelis are trying to create further misunderstandings."

A high Iraqi oil official called for nationalization of American oil interests in the Arab world and withdrawal of Arab money from U.S. banks to force the United States to temper its support of Israel.

An Israeli-Egyptian negotiating session on practical steps to reinforce the Suez cease-fire was canceled, meanwhile, and reset for Monday.

The two weeks of military talks at Kilometer 101, 60 miles east of Cairo, have bogged down in disagreement over troop withdrawals.

Mrs. Meir's cabinet session in Jerusalem was reported to have possible compromises on the agenda.

The chief Israeli negotiator, Maj. Gen. Aharon Yariv, was summoned to Tel Aviv presumably to report on his two weeks of talks with Egyptian Maj. Gen. Mohamed Abdel Ghany el-Gamasy.

Unofficial reports said the two sides have agreed to an Israeli withdrawal from Egyptian territory captured in the October war to a line several miles from the Suez Canal, but that the talks bogged down over what kind of Egyptian force should remain on the canal's east bank, held by the Israelis since 1967.

The Egyptians, these reports said, demand a full military force, but Israel was prepared to allow only a lightly armed police force.

Yariv and Gamasy have met six times since they signed a six-point cease-fire agreement Nov. 11, worked out with the aid of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Quick Profile

New Greek Head "Hard-Core Military"

By PAUL ANASTASSIADES
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP) — Most Greeks had never heard of Lt. Gen. Phaedon Gizikis until he took over the Greek presidency after a military coup.

Gizikis, about 55, was the commander of the powerful Greek 1st Army. He is described as a rightist and a strong supporter of the Atlantic Alliance.

An exiled Greek newspaper publisher said in London that Gizikis was unmarried and a classmate of former President George Papadopoulos — "the same age, the same school."

"He seems to be hardcore military," the anti-Papadopoulos publisher, Helen Vlachos, said.

As Gizikis was sworn in on a nationwide television broadcast, the graying Gizikis appeared overcome by the swiftness of events.

Smorgasbord Again

Last year's gastronomic success, the International Smorgasbord, is being repeated this year December 1 (Saturday) from 6:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m. in the large Worcester Dining Commons. Tickets will cost $2.00 each, and $1.00 for children under 12.

The event is being co-sponsored this year by the Central Area and the International Student Association. Central has made a substantial commitment to the smorgasbord budget, in the interest of supporting the International Student Association and the Foreign Student Emergency Fund, and as a result will be favored with the sale of tickets in the Central Area from 4-6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The menu will include an exciting variety of dishes from many parts of the world, including the United States. Such offerings as "moin-moin," fried plantain, Chinese egg roll, "akara balls," fish-with-tomato, chicken, salads, bread and more will be ready on the Worcester Dining Common steam tables.

"We will avoid some of the problems we had last year, of long waiting lines and tasty but cold food," said Sridhar Ramadas, President of the International Student Association. "The Worcester Dining Common will hold all ticketholders at once, and steam tables will assure that the food is piping hot. We will have two serving lines compared to last year's one, and to avoid jam-ups, no tickets will be negotiated at the door."

In addition to offering food, the co-sponsors have arranged for a folk1dance presentation by the Five College Area folk-dance group, starting at 8:00 p.m.

Help The Vet

Here are some "official policies" concerning Vietnam veterans you may not be fully familiar with.

"Official policy has been established that while waiting for work they will receive the same salary they got in service....suitable jobs are to be reserved (I repeat) reserved for Vietnam veterans...state agencies must reserve places for wounded veterans..and log jams must be cleared by opening new classes to teach special skills...enterprises set up by veterans are to get extra state aid--and loans at the lowest interest rate (living conditions of families of veterans are to be at least as good as the rest of the population)--dependents are entitled to direct financial aid--and children of dead or wounded veterans are to receive educational privileges and special attention throughout their schooling." ....These are the official policies of the North Vietnamese toward their returning veterans!

Senator Alan Cranston (D-Calif) recently summarized the plight of U.S. Vietnam veterans: "I have been most concerned about these men who have lost years in education, job training, and work experience. In addition to the basic difficulties of readjustment, they have returned to an inflated economy where jobs are scarce and educational costs keep rising, as well as an administration that continues to attempt to cut-back on veterans' assistance programs."

The House Veterans' Affairs Committee is presently considering a number of proposals that will help bring into line current benefits with thoe provided for World War II veterans. If you wish to help; write, phone or telegram you Congressional Representative.

Orchard Hill Offers More

Applications for students wanting to move to Orchard Hill next semester are available at the Orchard Hill Student Affairs Office, 103 Grayson House.

Orchard Hill is in the process of becoming a Residential College and offers a unique academic and educational experience. The "Hill" offers a wide variety of courses and activities consistent with the philosophy that the process of education pervades the residence halls as much, if not more, than it does the actual classroom setting.

Special Interest Corridors, such as Third World Corridors and a Liberation Corridor, are also a part of the Orchard Hill residence halls. Additional Special Interest Corridors may be established where sufficient interest exists.

Applications must be in by Saturday, December 1. If you want to move to the Hill and have not submitted an application subsequent to September 1, 1973 you must submit one to the Orchard Hill Student Affairs office by the December 1st deadline. It is then the applicants responsibility to personally sign up for a room in the Orchard Hill residence hall of his/her choice on Wednesday, December 5, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Let Me Know

Now that the turkey is digested and most of you are well rested, it's time to think about the place we eat our "turkey" everyday — The Dining Commons. The food is often poor; the portions too small; the atmosphere harried; and most students in the Commons are dissatisfied. In recent weeks it has become so poor that after one very "tough" steak, a group of students announced that if the Commons ever put on such a repeat performance they would make boots out of the meat and march on the various Administration buildings.

What is wrong with the food services on this campus? The administration points at rising food costs as reasons for "cuts" in size and the quality of the meals. The workers say that they're not in control of policy, yet very often their unions block (at least indirectly) moves that could improve things in the D.C. In most cases we students get a deal as raw as the steak served is tough. What can we do to make the Dining Commons better places to eat?

While the Student Government is not totally inactive, its power is limited. Unions can call for a walkout of workers if the leadership thinks that they're getting screwed; the Administration can fire someone yet we students are limited to the fine art of "rational appeals" to make things better; write angry letters; and when frustration overcomes rationality foolishly dump bad food on the floor of the dining halls. While I think that such acts are a bit "sick", looking over the things that have happened this year I can see how a student can get so frustrated!

A few months ago we were given a referendum concerning the future Food Service policy! We were told that we could chose between having "second" portions of a single main dish; or only a "single" portion, with a choice of variable main dishes. The implication was clear — it would cost more to expand the choice of foods, and provide diversity. The students chose the first option, and so far the entire thing has been a sham! As recently as last week a representative from Food Services said that concerning breakfast it cost no more to have various portions than just eggs served alone. I asked, "then why were seconds cut at breakfast?" The answer: "Because we wanted to make the cutting of seconds a standard thing to avoid confusion."

Clearly there was a choice between making things "simple" (cut seconds outright) or making a "fair policy". At that time those in Food Services had to make a choice (sort of their own referendum) they chose the former, and stopped all seconds — even when it was not financially necessary. Because of the deceptive referendum, seconds during breakfast should be returned as soon as possible. Food Services should also look into the possibility of reinstating "seconds" for as many other meals as feasible.

There are other policy decisions that are equally irrational and unjust. If you have to pay for seconds because of rising food cost, then why do you have to pay for the cost of labor as well as food when you "buy" seconds? Yet at this time the price of seconds is estimated to cover all such costs as well as food costs. The price of "seconds" (if such a policy remains) should be restricted to the food costs only, since that was the reason that it was initiated in the first place.

Another change that would help everyone involved would be to start a few workers fifteen minutes late every meal; then have them remain on duty fifteen minutes after the lines close down to keep items such as tea, desert, and other "secondary" foods (salads and soups) available for students coming near the end of the meal to go back for at their leisure. At this time when the lines close, everything is taken away; and even those sitting at the tables aren't spared the "evil eye" of the workers, wash rages in hand, who want to finish cleaning and go home. "Staggered" schedules could help solve the problem.

There are other problems, in this column I just wanted to state a few that particularly irked me. You students must let Food Services know what irks you. Either write them a letter, or get in touch with me, and I'll be glad to relay your feelings on to them. Many things are going on within Food Services these days. Many officials involved have said that they are more than willing to listen and consider eventual reforms bases on a review of present policy. Let us test their sincerity for change. Together with their cooperation and that of the unions, perhaps we can create reforms to make things better. It is easy to just get disgusted and throw food on the floor. The challenge is to work to change things; it's a challenge worth taking on!.

Prayer For What??!!

By KAREN A. MONACO

Please, when I am wrong,
Make me willing to change;
When I am right,
Make me easy to live with.
So strengthen me that the power of my example will far exceed the authority of my rank.
—Pauline H. Peters

No, the preceding was not a directive sent out by the Girl Scouts of America. Would you believe it appeared in a book called Effective Secretarial Practices by the same Pauline H. Peters that was published in 1962? Ms. Peters calls it the "Supervisor's and Employee's Prayer." For maximum effect, I think you are supposed to recite it immediately upon waking up in the morning. But if for some reason you forget (That's no excuse. Try putting your shoes under your bed at night. When you kneel down to get them in the morning, you'll remember. Ah, the lasting effects of parochial school...) there's always the coffee break, a time when you can all gather around the water bubbler and say it aloud. I haven't figured out yet who it is supposed to be directed at though, but I guess the great supervisor in the sky is someone who would listen to the secretarial pool's prayers. If we already have politics, economics, etc. in the office, why not a little religion too?

Pauline Peter's prayer also appears on page two of the Secretarial Reference Manual of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a manual which is currently being sent out to all state-controlled offices and which was compiled by the Bureau of Personnel and Standardization. It's a rather large manual (157 pages) and it is divided into about 15 or 20 sections. But before I go into those, back to religion for a moment. Not only is there a prayer on the second page of the manual, there is also a new rendition of Moses' Ten Commandments. Bear in mind that these Commandments as well as the manual as a whole is to be followed by office workers, the outstanding majority of whom are women.

1. Thou shalt make every effort to arrive at the office ON TIME. (their capitals, incidentally. Woman as idiot.)

6. Thou shalt not spread false rumors about thy fellow workers, nor shalt thou spread encouragement for such or engage in gossip. (Woman as the supreme yenta.)

7. Thou shalt not abuse thy privilege of morning and afternoon breaks by overstaying thy alloted time. (whilst thy bosses can taketh as much time as they liketh.)

8. Thou shalt always bear in mind that phones are for business purposes, and shalt limit thy personal calls to those which are necessary. (Thou shalt also bear in mind that thy bosses' phone calls are never unnecessary or personal.)

9. Thou shalt not plan thy evening meal, polish thy fingernails, nor otherwise entertain thyself when thou are not busy, but shalt make thyself available for those who need thy help. (Taketh for example, thy boss who may needeth a back rub.)

10. Thou shalt give eight hours work for eight hours pay, thus remaining on the job until quitting time. (Thou shalt not considereth the fact that thy boss is getting thrice times thy pay even wheneth he feels he must take leaveth after only four hours of work to goeth to playeth golfeth.)

And now for the remainder of the manual...The first section is called "Thou, ug...or rather, You and Your Career" and contains such things as everything you always wanted to know but were afraid to ask about what emotional maturity is (There are 12 rules for that which is odd because if anyone had ever asked me, I would have said there were only 11.), and what to wear (called the "ABC's of Fashion", A. Action Skirts. They have to be as short as the designer makes them...B. Belts...If your waistline is not what it should be, how about a little bit of exercise? D. Dresses. The shirtwaist is back. Yippie. E. Elegant suits. Always feminine. G. Gimmicks. Feathers at the hemline? —For the office, forget it! I. Interesting Details. Flower pins are exciting this year. P. Petite sizes. This is the SLIM season. Need we say more? X. Xtras. Scarves, pins, panels that float, capes that glide, and the little girl looks. Y and Z. Another year of ZESTY fashion. Plan to be part of it.

BOSSES LIKE WELL-DRESSED WOMEN IN THEIR OFFICES. (I wonder what happened to the little girl looks.) There are also a host of other things that are always "nice to know", like how to take criticism from the boss who incidentally is always right.

"Efficient Desk Arrangement" follows the "You and Your Career" section and is pregnant with all sorts of little gems of information for the secretary to utilize. There is a small area that concerns the office workers' (They seldom use the word "secretary".) "office do's". But before they even consider how she is supposed to arrange her own work area, they inform her of what she must do for the executive's office. First, she is supposed to dust his desk for him. (Maybe the Newman Center is still in need of dusters and could use her services too.) You would have to read it to get the full appreciation so 1.) Dust the executives' desk — even though a janitorial staff may take care of it, they may have done it early in the evening and dust can accumulate. (Could ya puke?) After this temporary (?) change in roles she is supposed to change his calendar and sharpen his pencils.

A section called "Folding Outgoing Mail" follows later and consists of just what you'd expect unfortunately complete with diagrams. (Woman as Idiot again.) The picture that opens up the section portrays a woman in an absolute flurry trying to fold a letter. Or at least I think that's what she is doing. It's hard to tell because there are so many added lines around her hands to show action and, more importantly, designed to show utter confusion. As a matter of fact, nearly every picture that introduces a section shows a woman with these same lines and they usually have placed few question marks above her head (brain). Another delightful section is titled "Confusing Words".

In the introduction, the author says, "This manual has been compiled in keeping with the most common business practices of correspondence to allow you to standardize" your office procedures. Use it and feel free to make suggestions for its improvement and revision." Well, considering it's content can only be improved on at this point makes me feel a little better.

Charles Camelopard

On Leaving D.C.

By CHARLES CAMELOPARD

It is with great regret that I announce this to be my last column for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. A series of unfortunate experiences has befallen me here in Washington that make my departure necessary.

The most recent horror of my life here was the eviction notice I received from my landlord at the Watergate Apartment Complex. He has instituted action against me for bringing down his property value by helping to expose some of the corrupt ex-government officials that lived there. He told me that he worked hard to get where he is and if an occasion thief should rent from him it is nothing for me to make an issue over. "I haven't had any trouble renting since this whole burglary affair was aired, now you're trying to destroy all that good PR Senator Ervin and his boys have given me, so you'll have to leave."

But that was nothing. I could have stayed at Shennanigan House, which isn't as prestigious, but quite nice.

The big scare I had was last week when I was at an Impeach the President Rally held on the mall of the Washington Monument. It was a routine assignment as far as reportage is concerned so I thought I could take some time to scream and yell at the rally like I had done during the anti-war era. So off I went in raggy dungarees, a few joints in my lungs and a sign saying "Hang the Bum" to wave during the effigy hanging that was scheduled.

As political rallies go this was as I had predicted, the usual fare. I took part in the shouting and became particularly involved when the effigy hanging began.

I waved my sign. I sang songs and did the chant, "Hang the dummy, hang the dummy, hang the dummy..." The crowd became intense. I was their leader I thought until suddenly I felt a rope go around my neck and my feet come off the ground.

"What's going on," I gasped as I rose higher and higher.

"You fool Camelopard said one of my fellow marchers. We're all from the CIA, FBI, and the Secret Service. This whole deal was just a plot to get rid of you. We wanted to hang a dummy too just like you did. WE GOT OUR DUMMY.

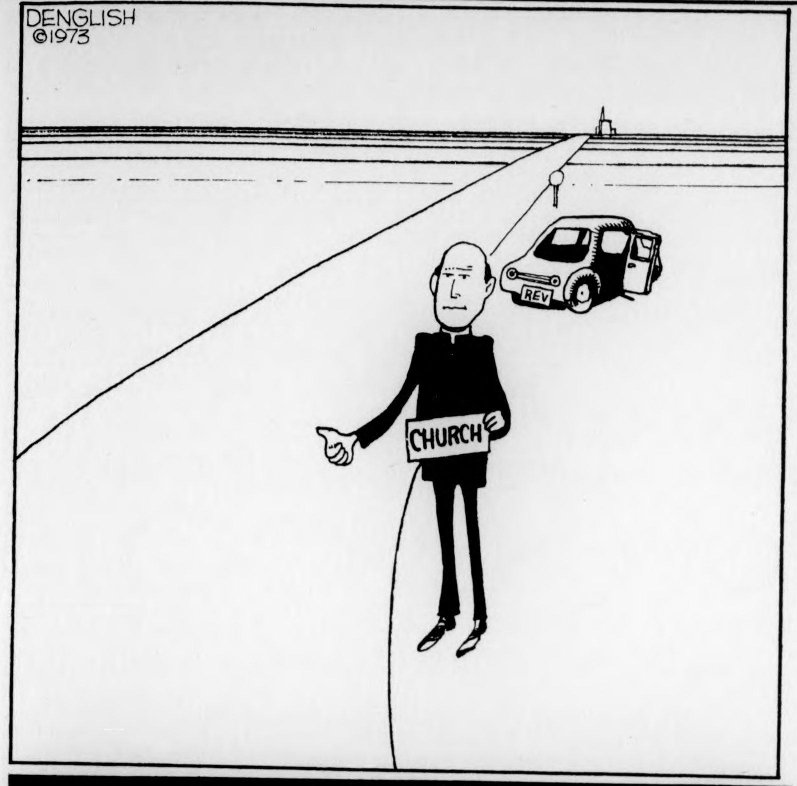
"Help," I screamed, "Reston, Baker, Mollenhoff, McGrory, Cronkite, Tripoli, Gorenstein, Where are you, they're hanging the wrong dummy, they're hanging the wrong dummy, it's Nixon we want. They're hanging the wrong dummy!!!!

I looked into the crowd for a friendly face, and finally I saw Howard Ziff my main man on the UMass campus.

"Howard they're hanging the wrong dummy," I screamed.

Ziff just looked back, silent, pipe hanging out of his teeth. Finally he spoke, but to me not the government men, "no there not," he said. Not at all."

Charles Camelopard has gone to ponder giraffes. He was the MDC Washington Correspondent.



Letters To The Editor

Poli. Sci. Union Formed

To The Editor:

The political science department isn't bad; it's mediocore. Most of the professors are likeable; so is Gerald Ford. A variety of courses is offerred; quantity, not quality, seem to be the motto.

The political science department is a very snug and secure institution. Two-thirds of the faculty is tenured. An excecutive committee, composed entirely of faculty members, is responsible for making all personnel decisions: new faculty appointments, promotions, and tenure. An undergraduate subcommittee is composed of six faculty members, one graduate student, and two undergraduates — both undergraduates are arbitrarily choosen from the senior honors seminar by the faculty. Faculty members claim that there is little undergraduate input because undergraduates have not organized and asked for it. They're right.

But no longer! Students have organized and demands are going to be made. A political science student union has been formed. The crayon carricitures and toy soldiers have to to. The ridiculous number of requirements has to go. The whole stifling atmosphere of a stagnant system has to go. Student representation in all personnel decisions must be made a reality. Truly represenative student voice in curriculum decisions must be made a reality. Expanded intership programs in off-campus practicality must be made a reality.

And the faculty is right to be smug. We, the students, are the ones who have allowed the stagnant atmosphere to pervade. And we, the students, are the ones who must demand change. We have organized and we intend to make demands.

Teamsters Trick UFW

To The Editor:

On Sept. 28th, AFL-CIO President George Meany announced he had reached an agreement "in principle" with International Brotherhood of Teamsters president Frank Fitzsimmons to settle the dispute in the farm fields. This was another of the Teamster tricks to try and make "the general public think the problems of the farm workers have been settled," according to United Farmworkers AFL-CIO President Caesar Chavez. At a press conference on Nov. 7th Caesar promised "more strikes next spring, summer, and fall" after Teamster President Fitzsimmons statement that the peace pact was off.

The Teamsters Union is clearly not the union to represent farmworkers. The Teamsters show open racism with regard to non-white workers. Einar Mohn, the Western Conference head of the Teamsters has said, "farmworkers will not be permitted to have union meetings for at least two years under the contracts the Teamsters Union has signed with the growers. Maybe, as agriculture becomes more sophisticated and more mechanized, with fewer transients, fewer carders, and as jobs become more attractive to white, then we can build a union that can have strucure and that can negotiate from strength and have membership participation." He says it will take some years before the farm workers are "ready" to have such rights.

This racism must be fought. The Teamster-grower alliance would like to keep the poor workers of California split apart with the tool of racism. But the poor workers have joined together in one union, the United Farmworkers, encompassing Filipinos, Arabs, Chicanos, Blacks, Native Americans and Anglos. Support of all peoples that are fighting racism should go to the United Farmworkers.

The Teamster-grower alliance has millions of dollars available on its side. The growers of California are supported by the Farm Bureau with $4 billion assets. This tax-exempt group sponsored bills in several states to ban consumer boycotts, the most powerful non-violent tool used by the farmworkers to win union contracts. The farmworkers have no million dollar backers. They rely on small donations from people all over the country. Farmworkers organizing for the union receive only five dollars a week, and room-and-board. The union is nearly always in need of money. If you can donate money please send it to:

Chisholm: Attend Meetings

To The Editor:

This is a response to John Chisholm's letter concerning the decision of McNamara's House Council to conduct a search for missing furniture. Now really John, we think that if you had attended the meeting concerning this matter or any of the others, you would realize that you are focusing on the wrong point. It is not a question of effectiveness. I'm sure you must have noticed several signs which gave a 24 hour notice to put back the stolen furniture, then a search would take place

Why bother with signs? Because we don't care who took the furniture or how it got there. It is a matter of the furniture belonging to the dorm as a whole and not to just an individual-and we want it back. By the way John, we don't mean to "criticize", but if there is any further comment on this issue, bring it to the House Council and see what it's all about.

What Is TPCC?

To The Editor:

Recently, I received a TPPC Survey from the School of Education at UMass. I am sending you my comments given at the end of the survey because I feel they are pertinent to undergraduates who are in a situation I was once in, myself.

"The only valuable part of the program, for me, was my student teaching experience. This was conducted through the English Dept. I have no knowledge of who runs TPPC, or of what part it played in my undergraduate teaching experience. To me this is indicative of the confusion and lack of communication that exists between the School of Ed. at UMass and other academic departments.

I can truly say that my supervisor, or supervising teacher, and the English Ed. staff were extremely helpful to me with my program. One goal of the School of Ed. at UMass should be to establish effective channels of communication to other departments: not literature, not computer forms, but persons who represent TPPC, (whatever it is) and will meet with and assist students on a group and one to one basis.

Every undergraduate in the English Secondary Ed. program, and those who aspire to be accepted into it, knows the frustration of running around the School of Ed. during his/her freshman and sophomore years trying to get information.

Furthermore, courses in foundations, educational research, educational measurement, test design, administration, epistemology, etc., should all be made available to students from other departments when they are offered. To my own chagrin, I never realized that such courses existed or were important when I was an undergraduate English major.

You are the people who know the value of these courses. Why not promote them; sell them; publicize them to students of other departments? My own opinion is that a course in education for the inner-city child should be required. Whether or not the teacher ever uses the content, the sensitivity and insight gained in the course will be beneficial in any situation.

Finally, let me say, it is up to you people to provide the students in other departments with an awareness of the courses in the School of Education that can broaden a teacher's perceptions and abilities. I never would have known how deficient I was in these skills, perceptions, and abilities had I not decided to attend graduate school in Education. Both you and I have the responsibility not to let other students graduate with the same ignorance about education that I had when I graduated.

Shoot Leaders

To The Editors:

I am writing in regards to Glen Mahoney's letter of Nov. 13. In his letter he argues that the killing of the Hill Reservoir beavers is justified because the beavers are polluting the water and it's too expensive and time consuming to trap and move them. If this is a just reason to kill, then lets shoot the industry leaders who pollute our rivers and air! Certainly Mr. Mahoney cannot object, for it was he who said, "That question (killing) must be left up to the individual and should not be dictated by anyone else." To think that people, such as Mr. Mahoney, feel that money is more important than life is sickening.

I'm sure that many people, game officials included, will agree with Mr. Mahoney when he said that beavers are not an endangered species so it is therefore alright to kill them. Well sir, we had plenty of buffalo, we had plenty of mountain lions, and we had plenty of every animal that is now extinct or near extinction!

It's strange, I thought that our generation was supposed to be aimed at PEACE and LOVE. Aren't we the ones that are going to save the environment for future generations?

KILLING ANIMALS IS A HELL OF A WAY TO DO IT!!!!

V-Lot Ripoff

To The Editor:

May the person who stole my car battery rot in hell!

And may the University of Massachusetts wise-up!

V-Lot, the parking lot way out yonder in the sticks, was all I could afford to purchase this semester. If the University can charge outrageous parking fees, then the least they can do is tighten the security in these distant forgotten lots.

It is unfortunate that so many hours must be spent ticketing and towing cars that belong to the criminals who commit the unforgivable sins of "illegal parking", while others are ripping-off bikes and car batteries and other such 'trivial objects' and getting away with it.

Chalk one more up for UMass.

And to the person who stole my car battery, I hope it doesn't work!!!!

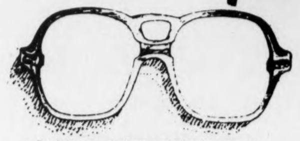
Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

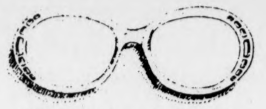
Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

If you can't find the frame you want at Bottomley, you'd better have your eyes checked.

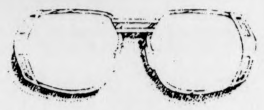


1. Back in 1948, the house of Dior introduced the New Look. Now they've designed these frames: the New Look-Through.



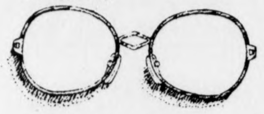
2. Very space-age grey metal frame from Germany. Make you look like an astronaut. Or a space ship.

3. Shell-rims that may be described as mucho Costa Brava, very Easthampton, ultra-Davis Park, too Jones Beach, or roof top specials.

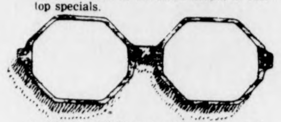


4. Another arresting metallic frame from Germany. A giant leap forward from lederhosen and those funny little hats.

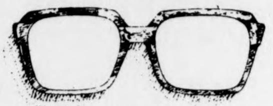
5. Mottled horn rims in the currently popular pilot shape. Nice for executives with Piper Cubs.



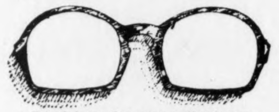
6. From England, metal rims covered in maroon plastic. They have a very Scrooge or Bob Cratchit look depending on your state of ego.



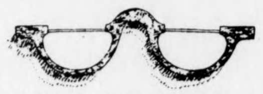
7. These slightly-squeezed octagon shell rims give you a narrower, but many-sided point of view.



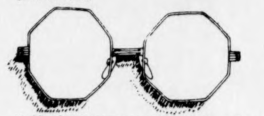
8. Classic horn rims for 1950's Liberal intellectuals. You may not look hip, but you won't look dumb.



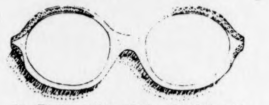
9. French frame that squares off at bottom after a voluptuous start. The French are full of surprises.



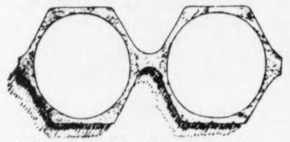
10. Peer over the rim and look piercingly at people in these half glasses. It scares everybody.



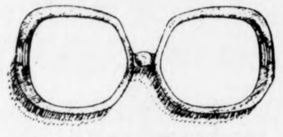
11. Metal octagons especially popular with those who are anti-plastic and anti-round.



12. Frosty white plastic studded with rhinestones. Wear with teased, lacquered hairdo 2 feet high.

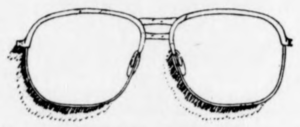


13. Octagons, this time in shell rims and with round glass shape. Very subtle combination that nobody will notice.

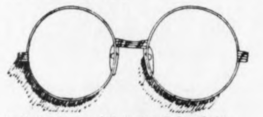


14. Another in our new group of Dior designs. They certainly haven't lost their sense of couture. Or have they?

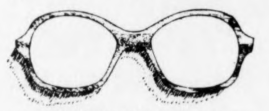
15. A neat, golden metal frame that is quite modest in appearance. Lets you get away with a lot of things.



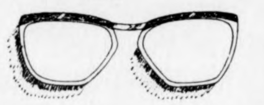
16. Our Easy Riders with polished chrome tops for riding 20 cc machines to Bear Mountain. Or rented Raleighs to Bethesda Fountain.



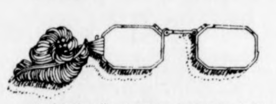
17. Perfectly round Grannies. Beloved rims of rock musicians and Flushing school teachers alike. Not to mention Merrill Lynch trainees.



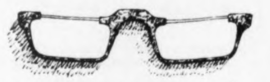
18. Middle-of-the-road shells for daily wear on Wall Street or 7th Avenue. Change them at 5 o'clock.



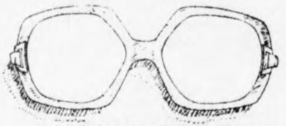
19. Metal Martians for a very outer-space but let's get-down-to-business look.



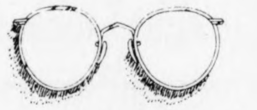
20. Irrationally expensive lorgnettes. Solid gold, they fold up into that diamond clasp. (The very rich are different from you and me.)



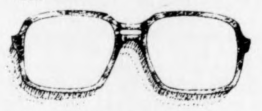
21. More half-glasses to make you look lke you've just finished reading Das Kapital or the Old Testament in Aramaic.



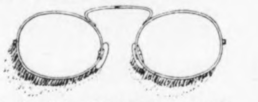
22. A tricky horn rim with metal stems. Part of a group of new frames we call our Tricky Collection.



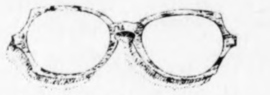
23. Classic metal rims a lot like the ones they issued in the Army. Who's to account for people's tastes?



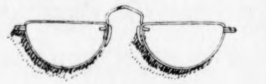
24. Immense rectangles with double joiners. Preferred 3 to 1 by clientele at leading singles bars.



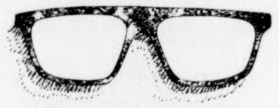
25. We call these Una Merkels or Edward Arnolds. Old Movie Buffs will know why.



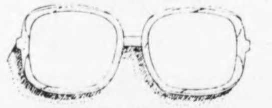
26. Another French frame full of subtleties that may hardly be worth describing.



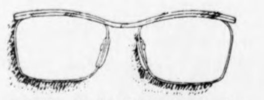
27. Half Grannies for rock musicians who have to read music.



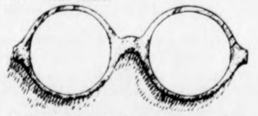
28. This year's frame at Cozumel, Ibiza, Corfu, Tampico and Grossinger's.



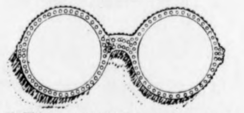
29. Polished golden rims for mountain climbing. The sun glinting of them will signal your rescue party.



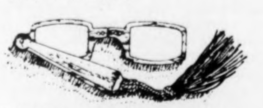
30. Hard-to-classify metal rims that we sell a lot of for reasons we can't determine.



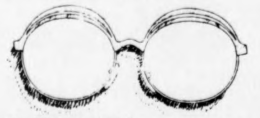
31. Big round shells for the people who like #17 but don't like metal.



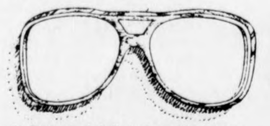
32. Rhinestone studded plastic grannies for wear to Bette Midler concerts.



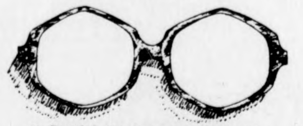
33. Lorgnettes. Holier-than-thou but functional.



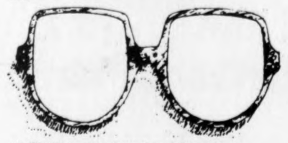
34. Elliptical metal frames with unusual polished moon-silver tops. They look better than they sound.



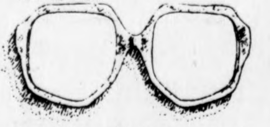
35. Super-sized shells in the military shape. Wear with tinted lenses and high-heeled combat boots.



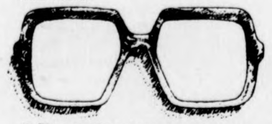
36. Rounded edge hexagons for whoever's tired of octagons and Pentagons.



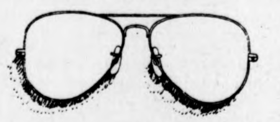
37. What's to say about these? Wear them because they're there.



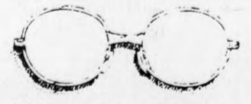
38. Horn rims. Reddish in color and good conversation starters — but have a comeback ready.



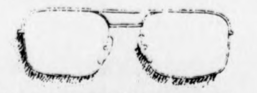
39. Big squarish horn rims that will work at Maxwell's Plum (the back, not the front), or La Grenouille (the front, not the back).



40. The classic military sunglass frame. Popularized by war heroes like Marlon Brando in the Young Lions and Douglas MacArthur.



41. Egg-shaped metal frame that reeks of precision, forthrightness, intelligence and other characteristics we all wish we had.



42. Neat sunglass rims for accountants, with Hell's Angel fantasies.

Great looking medicine for your eyes.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces persons work well within groups, organizations and are often found in hospitals, especially in connection with X rays. The Pisces individual can be active in films, television and radio. These persons seem also to have the secret of functioning alone, of creating and of turning the stuff of dreams into reality. Writers, such as Lawrence Durrell and Anais Nin, are but two examples. The Piscean is somewhat of a hypnotist, often psychic and almost always sensitive enough to detect character, trends and cycles.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on providing material necessary to shake off obstacles, to change pace. You have solid opportunity to present your case. Submit concepts, formats. Show that you have a "better way." Many will be listening and in a receptive mood.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Questions are answered. What you do with information received is what counts. Means this is not the time to procrastinate. Confront one who may be "acting funny" with money. Get an accounting; take inventory.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on conditions at home, legal settlements, partnership or marriage proposals. Maintain low profile. Do plenty of listening. Concern is shown with Taurus, Libra individuals. Obtain valid financial hint from Taurus message.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pace should be slow, steady. Avoid skipping details. See in light of reality. Pisces individual may be romanticizing. Key is to be receptive without being gullible. Avoid extremes, especially where diet is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on achievement through individual style. Creative forces are accented. You make significant changes. Personal magnetism is a factor. Members of opposite sex are drawn to you. You could sell anything!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasis is on putting an end to what has been a losing proposition. Could apply to both professional and personal life. Aries, Libra persons play prominent roles. You could make settlement involving home, property.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New start indicated and could feature travel, dealings with relatives. Leo, Aquarius might be involved. Original concepts will be encouraged. Don't be afraid of what is new, untried. Take pioneering stance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis is on money. Protect assets. Stick with the familiar. Avoid unnecessary financial risks. One who advocates unorthodox course is willing to take a chance with your valuables. Draw back and observe. Be conservative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent is on independence, timing. Study Libra message. Highlight personality, appearance. Come out of shell. Lunar position coincides with chance to try new ideas. Some key views are vindicated. You gain popularity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Activity may be confined. You may find that details have multiplied. Take slow, sure steps. Cooperate with group, club, organization. You may be appointed spokesman. Throw off groundless fears.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pleasure principle is magnified. You get reward for doing what comes naturally. Socialize. Make new contacts. Exchange ideas. Show that you can win friends and influence people. Spark a public relations program.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Obtain hint from Aquarius message. Ingratiate yourself with professional superior. Remember special anniversary. Family member pays meaningful compliment. You are due for surprise--of pleasant variety.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an organizer, capable of handling responsibility--and money. You attract Cancer, Capricorn persons. Your social life will accelerate in December. You are a dynamic person, a natural executive. Your interests are wide ranging; you seldom do things in halfway manner. Project begun in 1971 is beginning to bear fruit.

Streaking Patriots Drain Oilers, 32-0

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — The New England Patriots didn't need a second-half comeback to wipe out the Houston Oilers 32-0 Sunday. They did it all in the first half this time.

Last Sunday, Jim Plunkett whipped the Patriots from a 24-9 halftime deficit to a 33-24 upset of the Green Bay Packers.

The third-year quarterback from Stanford rifled touchdown passes of five yards to Bob Windsor and eight yards to Reggie Rucker Sunday, sending the Oilers to their first shutout defeat of the season and a 1-10 record.

It was a pleasing second-week effort for Pats' Coach Chuck Fairbanks.

"It's particularly good for us to have played so good today in view of our good game against Green Bay a week ago. We are young and inexperienced and putting two games together like this is extremely important in raising our level of confidence."

While Oiler fans wondered if it was Houston's worst performance of the year, Oiler general manager-coach Sid Gilman cleared any doubt.

"This was by far the worst game we ever played," Gilman said. "They beat us in every aspect of the game. I didn't see a single good thing happen today. We've just got a lot of work ahead of us..."

Plunkett staked New England to a 24-0 halftime lead over the inept Oilers by picking apart Houston's secondary with his passing.

The Patriots, now 4-7 with two consecutive victories, sat on their lead in the second half as Jeff White kicked field goals of 36 and 46 yards to go with a 48 yarder in the first quarter. Patriots linebacker Steve Kiner tackled Dan Pastorini in the end zone for a safety with 4:08 left of play.

Plunkett hit four of five passes in New England's first touchdown drive, including the five-yard touchdown to Windsor. A short punt by Houston's Skip Butler and pass receptions of 18 and 14 yards by Randy Vataha keyed the drive.

White booted a 48-yard field goal in a first quarter that was set up when Houston's Bob Gresham fumbled at the Oiler 46.

Five-foot-five running back Mack Herron of New England rammed across a one-yard touchdown in the second quarter.

Weekend Results Cloud Race For Nation's No. 1

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

Similar to 1966, a 10-10 tie is going to have quite a bearing on college football's national championship. And once again a team from Michigan in involved.

Seven years ago, Notre Dame won the title following its infamous 10-10 deadlock with Michigan State. Saturday, it was top-rated Ohio State and fourth-ranked Michigan who tied 10-10 and failed to settle the Big Ten Conference race.

While the two teams will be co-champions, the Big Ten athletic directors voted Sunday to have Ohio State represent the conference in the Rose Bowl.

The Buckeyes will face Southern California's defending national champions, ranked eighth this year, who nailed down the host berth and the Pacific-8 crown Saturday with a 23-13 triumph over ninth-ranked UCLA.

It remains to be seen, however, what bearing the weekend holiday results will have on the national championship.

No. 2 Alabama beat seventh-ranked Louisiana State 21-7 Thursday night, and it remains for the voters in The Associated Press poll to decide who's No. 1, and whether Ohio State and Michigan still are in the title picture.

"I don't know about us being No. 1," Alabama's Bear Bryant said Saturday. "That is for other people to decide."

Also on Thursday, fifth-ranked Notre Dame shelled the Air Force 48-15 and No. 11 Texas won its sixth consecutive Southwest Conference crown, whipping Texas A&M 42-13. Friday, third-rated Oklahoma blanked Nebraska 27-0.

Penn State, the other member of last week's group of seven contenders, wiped out a 13-3 halftime deficit Saturday and trounced Pitt 35-13. The resurgent Panthers were tied for 20th.

In other Saturday action, No. 12 Texas Tech shaded Arkansas 24-17, and No. 13 Arizona routed Arizona 55-19, winning its fifth straight Western Athletic Conference title and a spot in the Fiesta Bowl as Danny White threw four touchdown passes to give him a major college career record of 73 scoring passes.

Houston, rated 14th, blanked Wyoming 35-0, No. 16 North Carolina State crushed Wake Forest 52-13, Maryland trimmed No. 17 Tulane 42-9, Iowa State upset No. 18 Oklahoma State 21-12 and Kansas, tied with Pitt for 20th, nipped Missouri 14-13. Miami of Ohio, No. 15, completed a 10-0 regular season earlier.

Dartmouth, unheralded at the start of the season and loser of its first three games, took the Ivy League title for the fifth year in a row. The Big Green downed Princeton 42-24 while co-leader Harvard lost to Yale 35-0.

Ohio State Rose Bowl Bound

By JOE MOOSHIL

CHICAGO (AP) — Ohio State's top-ranked Buckeyes, who let a 10-point lead slip from their grasp Saturday and were tied by Michigan 10-10, were selected Sunday to represent the Big Ten Conference in the Rose Bowl.

The decision was announced by Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke following a special balloting of conference athletic directors.

Originally, the athletic directors had voted that the winner of the game between Ohio State and fourth-ranked Michigan would make the trip but that in a case of a tie a special vote would be taken.

Ohio State, with a 9-0-1 record and a title share with Michigan, goes up against Southern California, which has a 9-1-1 mark.

Ohio State will be entrusted with breaking a four-game Big Ten losing streak in the Rose Bowl. The game will match up last season's foes. Last year Southern Cal rolled over the Buckeyes 42-17 to nail down the national championship.

The last Big Ten team to win in the Rose Bowl was Ohio State by a 27-16 score over Southern Cal in the 1969 contest.

Ohio State's selection came somewhat as a surprise but could very well have hinged on the fact Michigan lost quarterback Dennis Franklin in the closing minutes of Saturday's game with a broken collarbone.

Hungry for a victory, the athletic directors apparently decided to go with the team which they figure has the best chance of winning.

Without Franklin, Michigan would be at a disadvantage.

Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler, his voice quivering with anger, blasted Big Ten officials for selecting Ohio State instead of Michigan to represent the conference.

"I'm very bitter. I regret it. It's a tragic thing for Big Ten football," Schembechler said in an interview following a television show in Detroit.

"Big Ten administration hasn't been very tough and it hasn't been very good," he said.

Hodge, Esposito Pace Bruins To 8th Straight

BOSTON (AP) — Ken Hodge collected his 15th and 16th goals, both on power plays, and Phil Esposito ran his National Hockey League scoring point total to 49 with three assists as the Boston Bruins romped to their eighth straight win, 3-1 over Los Angeles.

The Bruins spotted the Kings a goal at 1:54 of the first period, by Frank St. Marseilles, a freaky score that hit the far post and bounced in behind Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert.

Hodge evened it up at 1-1 late in the period flipping in the remains of an Esposito shot as the puck trickled between the pads of Kings' goalie Gary Edwards.

Bobby Orr made it 2-1 at 55 seconds into the second session, firing a 50-footer under Edwards while Boston's Don Marcotte and Los Angeles' Mike Corrigan were sitting out slashing penalties.

Hodge's second goal was a tipin of Carl Vadnais's backhander as the Kings' Bob Verry was in the penalty box for holding.

Gilbert, playing his eighth straight game, had only 22 saves in the Boston nets. Edwards stopped 25 Boston shots.

First Period-1, Los Angeles, St. Marseille 4 Nevin, 1:54. 2, Boston, Hodge 15 Esposito, 18:07. Penalties-Marcotte, LA, 3:16; Orr, Bost., 3:49; Rota, LA, 17:32; Marcotte, Bos., 19:41; Corrigan, LA, 19:41.

Celts Can Cavs For 12th Win In A Row

CLEVELAND (AP) — Boston's John Havlicek went on a third quarter shooting spree and led the Celtics to a 107-101 National Basketball Association victory, their twelfth win in a row, over the Cleveland Cavaliers Sunday night.

Boston had taken a 57-52 half-time lead, but Cleveland battled back to tie the score 70-70 on a 10-foot jumper by Dwight Davis with a 4:51 to go in the third period.

The game was tied three more times, the last at 76-76 with 2:42 to go in the third period.

Havlicek, who finished with 25 points, broke the tie with three straight baskets to give the Celtics an 82-76 lead.

Cleveland rallied again in the fourth quarter, pulling to 92-91 with 5:08 to play, and to 96-93 a minute later.

But JoJo White and Dave Cowens scored successive baskets to put the game out of reach.

High scorer was Cleveland's Austin Carr, who totaled 26 points. His back court mate, Lenny Wilkens finished with 23.

Cowens' 21 points and White's 20 backed up Havlicek for Boston.

Packers - 49ers Play Tonight In Boredom Bowl

By ERIC PREWITT

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Green Bay Packers and San Francisco 49ers will try to salvage something from disappointing seasons in Monday night's nationally televised meeting of deposed National Football Conference division champions.

The Green Bay offense, one of the best in the National Football League last season, now is last in the NFC. San Francisco's defensive unit has collapsed to a 10th-place conference ranking, and the offense has relied mostly on Bruce Gossett's field goals for points lately.

The Packers, 3-5-2, at least have a chance for a winning season. They won the NFC Central crown with a 10-4 record last year.

The 49ers, after three straight NFC West titles, are out of contention now with a 3-7 mark. They have lost four straight games for the first time under Coach Dick Nolan, who has been on the job since 1968.

Jerry Tagge of the Packers and Joe Reed of the 49ers, two young quarterbacks, each will be making a third straight start Monday night.

Tagge led the Packers to a victory over St. Louis in his first NFL start and completed 17 of 23 passes for 268 yards in a Nov. 18 loss to New England.

Reed has passed for 361 yards in his two starts-losses to NFC East leader Washington and NFC West leader Los Angeles.

The former Mississippi State signal-caller has been handicapped by the sub-par condition of Gene Washington, one of the best receivers in the NFL.

San Francisco quarterback John Brodie, who will retire at the end of the season, hasn't played since throwing six interceptions in a loss to Detroit three weeks ago.

Despite John Brockington's 715 yards, the Packers rank only ninth in the NFC in rushing. Brockington gained only 35 yards on 16 carries last week, damaging his hopes for a third season.

Miller, USA Win World Cup Golf Tourney

MARBELLA, Spain (AP) — Johnny Miller regained his birdie touch Sunday, shooting a five-under-par 67 to capture the individual championship at the World Cup Golf Tournament and lead the United States to its 12th team title in the 21-year-old competition.

Miller, the U.S. Open champion, birdied the first hole of the 6,905-yard Nueva Andalucia course and kept charging right up to the end.

He finished with a 72-hole total of 277, 11 under par, for a three-stroke margin over Gary Player of South Africa and individual honors.

Jack Nicklaus, Miller's U.S. teammate, struggled against an unruly hook throughout the round and needed a six-foot birdie putt at the 18th hole to finish one under par at 71.

That tied him with Taiwan's Lu Liang-Huan for third place in the individual standings at 281. Liang-Huan also took a final round 71.

The U.S. team total was 558, six strokes ahead of South Africa. Taiwan, the defending champion, was third at 568, Argentina and Spain tied for fourth at 582 and Japan was sixth at 583.

Hugh Baiocchi of South African, with a final-round 72, and Randall Wines of Australia, with a 69, tied for fifth place among the individuals from 49 nations at 284.

A crowd of about 10,000 watched the final round on this course, which is dotted with water hazards, olive groves and palm trees.

After a first-round 73, Miller came back to shoot a course record 65 in the second round. He slipped to 72 in Saturday's third round, missing a number of short putts.

The B.C. Game - "Just Awful"

By BILL BALLOU

59-14.

It was the worst disaster to befall New England since the death of Calvin Coolidge, the worst defensive collapse since the days of Dick Stuart, the biggest sporting mismatch since Bobby Orr broke in alone on Helen Keller.

59-14. For those of you who haven't heard (ignorance is bliss), Boston College won.

How?

Who cares?

It's enough to note that the Eagles picked 603 total offensive yards, ran the ball 73 times for 518 yards, and averaged 7.1 yards per carry. And for almost half the game they were playing second and third-stringers.

The nasty bullies never gave the Minutemen a chance to play as they ran 88 offensive plays to UMass' 55. In the first period UMass ran just four plays from scrimmage (one a punt) and the Eagles, playing keep away, threw just one pass.

It wasn't as though the Minutemen didn't have any offensive punch of their own. They passed extraordinarily well, picking up 380 yards through the air. Peil Pennington was 17-34 for 299 yards and two touchdowns, while Fred Keliiher was 6-9 for 81 yards. Unfortunately the running game stayed back in Amherst, netting 19 yards in 12 attempts.

In fact, defense was treated like the 20th century equivalent of leprosy by both teams. Together they racked up 964 yards in total offense, which, for Humanities majors, comes out to more than a half-mile.

Among the few bright spots for the Minutemen were record-breaking final performances by Tim Berra and Peil Pennington (see related story, this page). Between them they broke seven and tied two New England university division records.

A disgusted, dejected, and dissappointed Dick MacPherson couldn't hide his anger after the game.

"Just awful, just awful," he repeated, shaking his head. "After we beat them last year they played Holy Cross and just stuffed it down their throats running. We figured they'd try to do the same to us - but we didn't expect they'd be able to do it."

"We can't run and we can't stop the run. What can we do? Our option defense was rediculous."

And MacPherson couldn't help but remember last time he visited Boston College, when the Eagles shut out UMass 35-0. "This is two years in a row that we've come down here and ended up looking like jerks."

Even the mention of the fine UMass passing attack couldn't make him smile. "Sure our passing and receiving were excellent," he said, "but they would have been a lot more effective if we had a running game to go with them. Hell, that isn't football. You can't win just by throwing."

One play just after the start of the second half demonstrated the kind of day it was for UMass. With the score 28-7 Bill Wolfe got behind the BC secondary and Pennington lead him perfectly for what appeared to be a 62-yard touchdown. Then Wolfe, on the BC 20, dropped the ball in full stride. The Eagles recovered the fumble on their 11 and in three running plays made it 35-7.

It was that kind of day. 59-14. And for MacPherson "the worst thing I've ever been associated with."

INCIDENTALLY: UMass finishes at 6-5; BC stands at 6-4 with Holy Cross left.....-MacPherson's three-year record now is 19-11-1..Leading BC rusher was Phil Bennett with 199 yards and four TD's. Mike Esposito had 135 yards and two TD's.....Leading UMass rusher was Rich Jessamy with two yards.....Game was attended by 19,227 sado-masochists..........

UMass Places 6 On All-YC

By MDC STAFF

Led by offensive standouts Tim Berra and Peil Pennington, UMass placed six men on the 1973 All Yankee Conference football team.

Named along with the two record breakers were defensive linemen Ed McAleney and Tom Bradshaw, linebacker Dennis Kiernan, and cornerback Bob Parrott.

Two other Minutemen, tight end Gary Mika and safety Paul Hansen, were named to the second team.

Connecticut led all teams in players named by placing seven Huskies on the mythical all-star team.

McAleney was the top vote-getter on defense, while Berra and two UConn stars, center Rich Foye and running back Eric Torkelson were the top offensive choices.

Pennington, Parrott, and McAleney were also named to last year's YanCon dream team. The only other repeaters on the 1973 squad were Foye and Bruce Thompson, a cornerback from Connecticut.

Rhode Island placed three players on the first team while BU and New Hampshire had two and Maine and Vermont one apiece.

Out Of Our League

Period by period. Make that minute by minute the score mounted and there was really nothing Boston College coach Joe Yukica could do about it. He went to his bench, all of it. He didn't go for the two-point conversion when his team had reached 58. He could have looked to the stands for the B.C. intramural champs and even that wouldn't have made much of a difference on this particular Saturday.

"I had no one else to substitute," he said after the preceeding three hours had left UMass a ravaged and spent 59-14 loser. "I had already used 17 freshmen and even on Bennett's (Phil) touchdown run (25 yarder -- 59-14) I was using an offensive tackle who hadn't even practiced in two weeks."

In a word it spells depth. In a word it spells out-of-our-league. This was a Boston College team that was coming back home a maligned victim to Syracuse the week before. It was likewise a team that had had the longest bus ride of its life last year after a football game in Amherst.

"This is the type of football we can play," Yukica said. "When you fumble as much as we did last week at Syracuse you can't expect to win. Today we played our game --- run. That's us."

It's also B.C. that's playing Texas next year at home, Notre Dame in two years and perhaps some more biggies in three, four and five. Yukica doesn't fool himself and believe that his team is on a par with the Longhorns and Irish.

"We'll be competitive," he said. "Not commensurate yet. We showed that we could play with national teams this year. We lost by five points. twice down South to Tulane and Miami." Still, you have to play the Notre Dames, the Penn States and Longhorns to justify your apparent quest for out of New England.

That means recruiting. "We've got to recruit," Yukica emphasized. "We have our problems when we recruit. Of course we expect to get the best football players in New England. But it gets a bit difficult when you go to Pennsylvania and try to get those athletes away from Penn State and Pitt."

You scan the B.C. game program and find that indeed only a hand full are out of the New England and New York area. But they are the best in the region. Yukica loses only five seniors from his starting 22. And there doesn't appear to be too many problems looking ahead in filling the voids next year after witnessing what second and third string youngsters did to the Minutemen.

"Our young kids have come a long way this year," Yukica said. "Last year when we played UMass we were very young and hurting defensively." Does it make such a difference in one year?

"When you look at UMass last year, it does" he said. When I told him that it appeared that only a hand full of Minutemen this year could play on B.C. he said, "Last year there were quite a few who could have played for us." And yes, when looking at B.C. this year it's apparent that everyone on that squad could play and possibly start for UMass.

In another lockerroom under the Stadium the losing coach was holding his own forum. And while Yukica's team had the luxury of a broadloomed lockerroom, the granite environs that surrounded MacPherson and his men only accented the already greyish afternoon.

"I expected B.C. to try to put it to us on the ground," a worn MacPherson told the tilted and sympathetic heads of the press. "But I didn't expect them to do it like they did." Some awesome 518 yards worth.

"As high as I was last year at this time," he said, "I'm just as low this year." With this the final drag on his cigarette. "The biggest problem now," he concluded, "is having to wait an entire year to put the pieces together."

Ken Dean, acting Food Services Director

Dean, Stoneham —Then And Now

By ROBERTA McCANN

Ken Dean was appointed Acting Director of Food Services last week by Thomas B. Campion, vice-chancellor for Administrative Affairs. The appointment will go into effect December 3.

Joel Stoneham, who has been Director of Food Services since 1966, will assume a position in Administrative Affairs.

Dean was hired by Campion last May as an internal consultant in Administrative Services. Dean was Acting Director of the Campus Center from late June to Sept. 14 this year.

Stoneham was notified Nov. 9 by Campion that his contract as Director of Food Services would not be renewed when it expires Sept. 14, 1974.

Campion said in an MDC interview yesterday that Stoneham will assume a "variety of special assignments" within the Administrative Affairs office. The "special assignments" would not necessarily deal with food services.

A search committee for a new director has not been considered yet according to Campion. Campion anticipates student involvement in the search committee.

The Student Senate Rents and Fees committee passed a motion several weeks ago for an all student search committee in the form of the new Food Services Advisory Board.

Concerning the Food Services Department, Dean said, "It's a tough situation. I'm going to do the best job I can."

Dean has been working with food services on budgeting and cost control for the last month.

Dean intends to increase student input in food service decisions. He believes the Food Services Advisory Board will represent student interest.

The Food Services Department has been confronted with financial problems this semester due to the high cost of food.

A proposed board plan price increase for Spring semester was unanimously rejected by the Student Senate Rents and Fees committee on Nov. 5. Vice-chancellor Campion withdrew the proposed increase on Nov. 7.

In explaining the withdrawal of the proposed increase, Campion said, "We decided it was better to embark on a program of economy than it was to raise cost."

Campion also announced yesterday that a food service firm will do a consulting survey of the UMass board program starting Dec. 3.

The A-R-A Food Service Company of White Plains, New York has been contracted to do an "operational study" to suggest possible improvements in management and service.

According to Dean, the A-R-A has not been contracted to present a proposal to take over the UMass food service operation.

"All we want is a consulting report to see ways to improve the operation of the Food Services," Dean aid.

Dean said one of the major problems facing Food Services is the high cost of food. The Food Services have begun to use a computer to pre-cost meals.

Dean said the pre-cost system is a "bright spot in trying to control food cost."

Dean has a B.S. in industrial management from Flordia State University and received an MBA at the University of Connecticut.

Nixon Seeks Support To Insure Energy Lifeline

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Monday that America's energy crisis is "a temporary problem" that can be overcome by making the nation self-sufficient and "in a position where nobody can cut our lifeline."

Addressing the Seafarers International Union, the President sought to enlist he support of the 400 delegates for the program he announced in a broadcast Sunday night.

In other developments on the energy front:

—Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana told reporters that Nixon's energy program was "a small step forward" but inadequate. "I fear a recession if we don't take the steps we must," Mansfield said. Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott said the program should be given a fair chance to work.

—The American Petroleum Institute said it agreed with Nixon on efforts to reduce demand for petroleum products.

In his talk to the union convention, Nixon discussed ways he wants to cope with what he called "a temporary problem, a problem that is going to exist for this year, perhaps somewhat longer. We trust not much longer, depending upon what happens in the international scene."

After referring to the mideast war and oil imports from Arab countries, Nixon said, "The United States should never have a situation where we are dependent on any other country for our lifeline."

He said this does not mean the country will become isolationist.

"The United States will always continue to play its part in the world, but the United States will never be dependent on any other part of the world whenever there's a crisis," he said.

"That is all there is to it...but we want to be in a position so that nobody can cut our lifeline."

After Nixon returned to the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren was asked whether the President would follow up his suggestion that Americans spend "a little more time at home" by changing his pattern of spending most weekends away from the White House.

"I think the President will and has spent considerable time at home," Warren responded. "The President has taken steps to reduce the fuel consumption on Air Force One when travel is necessary..." referring to reduced cruising speed of his jetliner. Warren added, "I think he will be spending more time around here...Just as all people will be conserving, the President will."

Nixon's Energy Plans May Be Anti-Anti-Trust

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's plan to draft 250 oil industry executives to help run his emergency energy programs is running afoul of antitrust and conflict-of-interest laws.

But the administration is moving to try to get Congress to exempt the executives from the laws so that they can come to work for the government as soon as possible.

President Nixon announced Sunday he will activate 250 of the more than 400 oil executives who signed up long ago to take on government posts in case of a national emergency.

At the Interior Department, officials were uncertain how soon the executives would be coming to work and in precisely what capacity.

"We expect some difficulty in getting them on board," said Ben Tafoya, an official in the Oil and Gas Division who is in charge of keeping the executive list up to date.

"You have to make sure the conflict-of-interest and antitrust problems are resolved to the individuals' satisfaction," he said. "Most people in the oil industry are very sensitive to that."

Under the government's emergency planning programs, the executives were supposed to be made the key officials in the Emergency Petroleum and Gas Administration, an agency that would regulate the industry from top to bottom in case of a national emergency.

Up to now, that agency existed only on paper. But the White House said it will be "partially activated" to help run Nixon's new oil-allocation programs.

The oil industry is pressing for a general exemption from antitrust laws for any executives who take a government post, either to help with rationing, allocation or other program.

White House energy adviser John A. Love said he supports the exemption.

Rawleigh Warner Jr., chairman of the American Petroleum Institute and chief executive of Mobil Oil Corp., said, "This is a highly specialized industry on the supply side and a rationing program without people with basic knowledge could be in real trouble."

Enroll For SW Intercession

Intercession programs will be offered again this year in Patterson House and McKimmie House in Southwest.

People take intercession programs for a variety of reasons, according to Helen Fellows, chief organizer of Patterson's project. Some enroll because the courses are interesting, others because they can use the credits. "A lot of people can't get jobs over the semester break, so they come back to school instead of staying home and vegetating," she said.

Patterson will offer courses in White Racism, Theatre, Human Relations, and Sexism, among others.

McKimmie's intercession program is a bit more elaborate, according to Steve Ryan, one of McKimmie's student organizers. He said, "The approach this year will be somewhat similar to what happened last year. Last year, we offered five 3-credit courses and five colloqs." Ryan said that these courses dealt with the problems of the Third World.

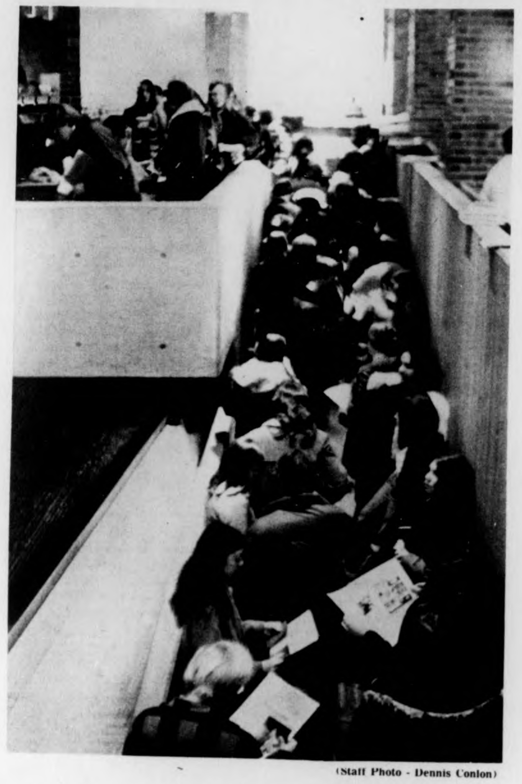
Both houses are still not absolutely certain as to the exact details of their programs. For one thing, both are still in search of operating funds. Petterson's program, according to Ms. Fellows, has received money from the dorm, from Southwest, and is hoping for help from the Southwest Assembly. McKimmie's program has received money from the Center For Racial Understanding, from Southwest January Session Funds, and from Southwest Course Fees. Ryan is hoping for help from the Women's Center and possibly from Whitmore.

There were also rumors circulating for a while that all houses would be closed over the semester break in order to conserve energy. However, it is almost certain at this point that Patterson and McKimmie will remain open.

Both Helen Fellows and Steve Ryan dislike charging students for the program, but admit that the possibility could be likely this year. If forced to, Patterson would probably charge a $10 per credit fee. McKimmie might also require a $5-$10 fee from participants.

Ryan expects about one hundred students to enroll in the program; a majority will be McKimmie residents. Patterson already has forty residents tentatively enrolled. According to Ms. Fellows, preregistration for the program has been tentatively set for the first week in December. All Southwest students are eligible, and those wishing information can go to the Southwest Academic Affairs office in John Adams.

Those !&?! Dining Commons Lines



(Staff Photo - Dennis Conlon)

Worth the wait??? Many students would think not, but waiting isn't so bad if you can read the local rag.

By SUE ADLEY

Those frustrating long lines!!! As all meal ticket holders know, they're just one more unpopular aspect of the dining commons. What's the story behind the long lines?

Michael Netto, manager of the Worcester dining commons said, "Long lines are not primarily caused by any aspect of student help, as some people have heard. Occasionally, however, the lines might be slowed down and eventually lengthened by a slight shortage of help when students don't notify us when they aren't reporting for work. If they tell us, I can arrange for substitute workers."

Netto spoke of the problem existing at certain times. "Breakfast lines may be long due to a late student rush, and also, breakfast is four hours long. What this means is that part of the morning crew, at the end of the four hours, must get some things ready for lunch," he said. "At lunch, the women often have a double amount of work when, for example, they have to make two sandwiches for everyone instead of one. This may be a cause."

Special meals seemed to be a factor, too, according to Netto. "Turkey is a hard meal to get out. There are so many things to serve," he said. "We open the five lines on days like that as early as possible, and close as late as possible, but the lines tend to still be long at times."

Netto continued, and said that the students could remedy the situation. "Often students refuse to move to another line when we ask them," he said. "Also, the kids hold up the lines by dilly-dallying. They take a long time deciding what to take, or just taking it."

A former UMass graduate, Netto said that lines years ago were even longer than now. "If the students think that these lines are long, they should have stood in them when I was here in '65," he said. "At that time, the only dining commons were Franklin and Worcester, and each served 3,500 students. The lines at Franklin used to go out the door and across parking lot No. 65, and on the other side, up between the dorms."

Arthur Warren is the assistant director of dining hall operations at Worcester. About the lines he said, "There are many reasons for the long lines, and we just have to keep working on it. We don't like it any more than the students do. We're working on solutions for it now," he said.

Your Head
What's Wrong?

By DRS. ANDREW W. McCASHIN and STEPHEN M. KLEIN

Q. I am the wife of a second year graduate student who has become increasingly withdrawn since September. The intense interest for his studies and the consequent hard work he gave them has generally come to a complete standstill. Since I work to support both of us I don't have the time or energy to quiz him for answers, when all this does is provoke him into leaving our apartment as soon as we've had dinner. I don't know where he goes or what friends he has now because he takes our one car and won't discuss anything when he comes home near midnight. I think I genuinely still love my husband but he's turning into a surly stranger. What should I do?

A. The unfortunate situation you describe is an all too familiar one. A marriage where one partner works (often an unrewarding job) to support the other's higher intellectual pursuits is fraught with danger. The working partner, who is usually the wife, often experiences what we might define as "primary" resentment. She, realizing the importance of her sacrifice which allows her husband to climb the educational and socio-economic ladder, expects gratitude for her selflessness. Her graduate student husband, on the other hand, feels pressured by his program and begins to remind his spouse that on his success rides "both of their futures". His wife's job is seen as "non-anxious" work and he develops "secondary" resentment, based on envy of her position. Marital discord for couples like this is frequent. Of course your husband could be lazy, selfish, and unappreciative, using you to sustain his needs, while unwilling to respect your needs. If this is so than the problem is that you made a bad choice and should see a lawyer. Usually, however, there are no clear villains in a relationship. If the situation is ambiguous there are some frequently encountered possibilities:

1) Your husband is in academic difficulty of some sort, real or imagined, which for some reason he fears sharing with you.

2) Your husband is reacting to some deeper personal problem which he is unable to share with you.

3) Your resentment and lack of "time and energy" have led, (rightly or wrongly) your husband to seek companionship elsewhere. He probably wouldn't want to talk about this.

It is likely that difficulties in your relationship such as fear, anger and resentment have eroded the lines of communication. Tell him directly that now is the time for both of you to take the time and energy to seriously discuss your marriage (with help if necessary).

Walkers—Pay Up

Those who participated in the Belchertown Walkathon on Saturday November 27 are requested to turn in their monetary pledges as soon as possible. In Amherst, hikers may turn their money and sponsor sheets to the Hampshire National Bank which is located on 25 East Pleasant Street in Amherst (next to the Pub). Checks are to be made out to "The First Step Inc.".

The first Step, the organizers of the Walkathon are listed as a charitable organization for tax purposes and contributions are tax deductible. Please try to turn in all pledges NO LATER THAN DECEMBER 1, 1973.

Other banks which have volunteered their services to act as collection points for money raised from the Walkathon are the Hadley Branch of the First National Bank of Amherst located at 140 Russell Street, Hadley; the main office of The First National Bank located at 1 King Street in Northampton, and the South Hadley branch of the Hampshire National Bank. Any questions concerning procedures of turning in money raised during the Walkathon may be answered by calling Jay at 253-5897 or Ken at 253-7461.

There will be a meeting tonight at 8:30 of the Political Science Student Association in room 917 Campus Center. The agenda for tonight's meeting includes: (1) election of officers; (2) ratification of the Political Science Student Association Constitution; (3) major requirements reform. Come! We need your help.

Maria Muldaur wooed the crowd (and almost stole the show) last night at the Cage.

(Staff Photo - Rich Harding)

Maria Was "Enchanting"
"Never Trust A John Mayall Concert"

By STEVE FELD

Towards the end of John Mayall's second, and final, performance at the Cage last night, he told the audience what they already found out from witnessing the band in action: "You should never trust a John Mayall concert. It's like a circus or a carnival, y'know. Anything can happen!"

What did happen was a lot of foolin' around in the form of Collegian readings, Freddie "The Kid" Robinson album plugs, Keef "The Lancashire Hustler" Hartley horseplay, and general mayhem. The result was a lighter, looser show than the previous night, but still a dynamite exposition of his patented jazz-blues fusion.

Maria Muldaur was enchanting. She walked on-stage carrying a bouquet of roses, one of which she placed in her gloriously frizzed ebony hair. Her material borrowed from a variety of sources ranging from Billie Holliday to the Staple Singers, and took the form of blues, rock, and even Tennessee mountain shindigging. Unlike many of her contemporaries, Maria sings; she doesn't screech, wail, or yell. What transpired was an alluring hour with an accomplished, multi-faceted songstress.

Overall, both Sunday's and last night's concerts provided for lots of good times, happy people and great music.

World's Tallest Library Is Not Quite Perfect

By DAVID PAQUETTE

The new library is already taking its toll in damage and rip-offs. Some of the damage is a direct reaction to poor elevator operation, but there are other reasons according to Wright, deputy associate director for public relations. He explained the reasons something like this:

"The elevators are a prime source for abuse because of their frequency of use and their need by everyone. The damage that can be incurred to the elevators is minimal because of their design, but some people can find someway to destroy anything. The damage done to the elevators are as follow: writing on the signs, tearing down the signs, breaking lights, calling in fake alarms and scratching the doors. The two most important are the tearing down of the signs and calling in fake alarms. The signs direct you in the use of the elevators and the library, which we all need. The calling of fake alarms (which runs up to two or three times a day on weekends) is just creating a hassle and wasting someone's time in the library and the physical plant. The alarms register at the physical plant and then they call the library. The emergency alarms have been dealt with by quick response and he also assured me that even though many are fake they will always be promptly acted on."

Maybe knowing more about the elevators will help ease your frustrations, so listen to Wright. You can travel to every floor by elevator, but not every elevator goes to every floor. This resulted from a lack of equipment. All floors in the future will be able to call elevators, but not until the equipment is installed. These elevators also won't stop to pick up more people if it is overloaded. So if you hear an elevator pass by your floor don't get upset because there probably wasn't room for you anyway thus making the elevator more efficient by not making a needless stop. Also if you're the only one standing in the elevator and the door is open and you're waiting for it to close, hit the door close button and you'll be on your way faster than waiting for the normal time cycle of the elevator. So you see, the elevators are pretty efficient and if there is a problem, call in the emergency and there will be plenty of people to help you almost instantly.

"Besides the elevators," I asked, "are there any other damages?"

Wright replied, "Right now, there are a lot of annoyances, but big things haven't hit us."

The annoyances cover a wide range; the coin operated copiers are being broken for the hell of it (they are being moved to areas where there is better supervision), pencil sharpeners and exit signs are being ripped-off, the phones used for reference help are being taken apart, and finally on the study floors, the furniture is being moved into the halls (which are very narrow) causing a problem in case of an emergency according to Wright.

Wright ended by saying, "Wish nothing happened, but things are better than expected."

The point is though, none of the above is needed. There are enough shortcomings in the world and the destruction of a perfectly useful and peaceful building such as the library is not needed.

Town Election Date Still Debated

By MIKE ALLAIN

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night called a special public conference for 4:15 p.m. this Thursday afternoon in Town Hall to discuss election dates for the 1974 elections.

The conference was prompted by an alternate election date schedule offered by Eric Walgren at last night's meeting.

Two weeks ago the Board tentatively approved a revised election schedule and left it open to citizen review. Walgren, objecting to the Selectmen's calendar, presented a schedule which proposes to move the primary election back to March fifth, as opposed to the Selectmen's February 12 date.

Walgren's schedule also calls for a February 13 deadline for voters to register for the primary. The Selectmen's schedule designates January 25 as the last day of voter registration.

"My set of priorities is to have the election so as to maximize participation," said Walgren in reference to the new dates, which are designed to encourage student voting.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy objected to the increased "administrative work" involved in Walgren's proposal, since it calls for the town election to be held on April 9 instead of March 19 as proposed by Selectmen.

Town Clerk Estelle M. Matusko offered a memorandum in agreement with Eddy, citing the administrative difficulties, voter confusion, and the limitations of voting machines as complications that would result from Walgren's later dates. These problems would arise particularly in Presidential Election years.

Walgren also presented a detailed proposal for "Universal Franchise" on behalf of the Tea Party New Law Fund, a radical Amherst political group. This proposal calls for complete election reform, says Walgren.

The proposal calls for a new Election Board, "representative of the broad cross-section of all residents", to administer all enfranchisement procedures.

It further calls for thirteen areas of reform, dealing with both voters and candidates, including a plan for reapportionment which would give all residents, including children, equal representation in Town Meeting.

It also stipulates that public notice of all "electoral process dates shall be clear and broad, employing posters, newspaper ads in all newspapers circulating within the town, and a Voter's Calendar mailed to each household."

Equal campaign spending, central voting places, and universal registration, in which each neighborhood would have a Deputy Registrar actively seeking the registration of every resident over 16 years old, are also included in the plan.

Walgren and the Selectmen discussed the proposal point by point, but took no action, other than specify the Thursday meeting in Town Hall.

Leaders of Student Governments at local colleges and the chairperson of the Town Meeting Study Committee will be invited to the conference, which is open to the public.

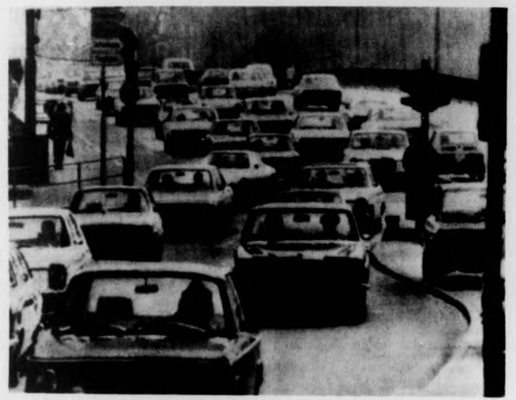
The energy crisis



Before and after in Frankfort.

Locking Up On Sundays?

(SeeRelatedStories,Page1)

By DUDLEY LEHEW
Associated Press Writer

Most service station operators are expected to lock up their gas pumps on Sundays, although some say such a move will mean 10 to 30 per cent less in their cash registers.

An Associated Press survey Monday showed many dealers undecided about ending Sunday gasoline sales voluntarily, but willing to close if competitors do.

With few exceptions, most of the owners and operators also predicted there would be little, if any, savings in gasoline supplies by following President Nixon's call for a halt of gas sales from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday.

In Georgia, where many dealers said they expected losses up to 30 per cent, Atlanta Gulf operator John Wall said, "Sunday is one of our biggest days, but if President Nixon directs us not to sell gas, we won't."

Like Leonard Drake of Nashville, who operates a Texaco station, many dealers noted that they already suffered from an economic pinch created by reduced allocations and price controls.

"I might as well shut down if they reduce my gas allocation any more," he said. "My supplier cut my allocation 20 per cent not more than 10 days ago. If they cut any more I'll be in real trouble."

"That's our bread and butter you're talking about," said Michael A. Roberti, manager of a Gulf station near an interstate highway in Montgomery, Ala., adding he expects a 20 per cent drop in business.

One of Roberti's competitors, Fred Wilkerson, said he expects a 10 per cent cut in sales, but will close up "if it will help the country."

Tom Washer, an Indianapolis Marathon dealer said "The government should release the price freeze on station owners so they could raise the cost per gallon a cent or two in order to keep up with the rising cost of living. If things keep going the way they are, it looks like I might have to get out of the business."

"I don't think anyone should make a profit from the crisis, but it would help if we could at least break even," said John Cave, a Richmond, Va., Hess operator. Cave said he expected a 17 per cent drop in business by closing on Sunday and a one-third cut because of his new hours.

Sweeps Are Cleaning Up

HARTFORD (AP) — The fuel shortage, a source of gloom and frustration to the average American, is bringing prosperity to chimney sweeps.

Chimney-cleaning firms in Connecticut report a huge increase in jobs from home-owners who are relying more on their fireplaces because of the fuel oil shortage.

"We're getting calls to clean chimneys that haven't been cleaned since the Civil War," said Mrs. Marcel Gelinas, wife of the proprietor of an East Granby company. She estimated their business has about doubled since last year.

Pushed Button Accidentally

Nixon's Secretary Testifies To Tape Erasure

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's personal secretary testified Monday she accidentally pushed a recording button while listening to a White House tape. A prosecutor said the erased portion covered all discussion of the Watergate scandal during a presidential conversation.

The disclosures were made in federal court after Nixon's lawyers turned over seven subpoenaed White House tape recordings and asked that all or portions of three of them be withheld from the Watergate grand jury.

Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's secretary of 23 years, was questioned at a hearing called to determine what had happened to the tape of a conversation between the President and H. R. Haldeman on June 20, 1972. The White House says there is an 18-minute gap in the recording.

Miss Woods told the court she believes she inadvertently pushed the recording button when she turned to answer her telephone while working on the June 20 tape last Oct. 1.

She testified that she immediately told Nixon about pushing the button and he replied, "No problem, that is not a subpoenaed tape."

But Miss Woods stopped short of saying she erased part of the tape.

"I'll call it a gap; you call it an erasure," she said to Jill Volner of the Watergate prosecutor's staff.

"I don't know there ever was anything on that portion...I didn't edit or change what was on the tape...I might have. I'm not sure I caused that gap and I'm not sure now," she said.

Miss Woods said she was certain she did not talk on the telephone for 18 minutes, the amount of time of the gap on the June 20 tape.

When she hung up the phone and saw that the record button rather than the stop button had been depressed, she said she nearly panicked.

Mrs. Volner, referring to Haldeman's notes of the June 20 meeting, said they indicated that the missing portion was a discussion of the Watergate affair.

White House counsel Leonard Garment objected, saying the prosecutor "can't make such a categorical statement."

"I object very strenuously to summaries of testimony of witnesses who are not here at the moment," Garment said, referring to the Haldeman notes.

Miss Woods' attorney, Charles S. Rhyne, also objected, saying that the whole matter could better be resolved by listening to the tapes now in the possession of the judge.

Sirica indicated he would resolve it that way before Miss Woods finishes her testimony, which could last several days. She was due in court again Tuesday.

The White House says the 18-minute gap in the tape was discovered Nov. 14.

The White House claims that only part of the June 20 tape-that of a conversation between the President and aide John D. Ehrlichman-was subpoenaed, and that the Haldeman coversation was not sought by Watergate prosecutors.

In a summary and analysis submitted with the tapes to U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, White House lawyers said the President was claiming executive privilege for two tapes and portions of a third which they contended were unrelated to the Watergate investigation.

The tapes and summary were delivered during a recess of a hearing at which Miss Woods was being questioned about the 18-minute segment.

Handing over of the tapes climaxed a battle that began when Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox subpoenaed them in July. Monday, the White House accused Cox's successor, Leon Jaworski, of responsibility for what it termed two recent news leaks.

DeSalvo Slain In Cell

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)-Albert DeSalvo, who confessed to the Boston strangler sex murders a decade ago, was found dead in his prison cell Monday. He had been stabbed 16 times, officials said.

DeSalvo, 42, said he killed 13 women in the Boston area between 1962 and 1964 but later retracted the statement and was never convicted of any of the slayings.

The former handman was serving a life term at maximum security Walpole State Prison on convictions of burglary, robbery and molestation involving four women.

A medical examiner said DeSalvo was stabbed 16 times-six times in the heart-and it appeared from the size of the wounds that a surgical instrument was used.

A janitor found DeSalvo's pajama-clad body on the bed of his cell in the prison hospital, where DeSalvo worked as a maintenance man.

Authorities said they had no immediate suspects.

"The only problem we had with Albert DeSalvo was his trafficking in drugs," said Dist. Atty. George Burke. "We don't know if this murder is drug-connected. It's possible...anyone who deals in drugs has enemies, because it's competitive."

Burke said investigators believed DeSalvo was stabbed about 9:30 p.m. Sunday, just before prisoners were locked in their cells for the night.

The 18-month rampage of strangler killings in the early 1960s triggered near hysteria in the Boston area.

Victims, ranging in age from 19 to 75, were sexually mauled and left sprawled in grotesque positions. Some were decorated with carefully knotted bows tied from their underwear.

Although DeSalvo said he was the strangler, former Massachusetts authorities were not convinced. DeSalvo was never charged.

Bailey has said he believed DeSalvo was the Boston strangler: "In something like 50 hours of taped confessions to the attorney general, he had details that he couldn't have known if he hadn't been there."

DeSalvo once told Bailey he feared for his life in Walpole.

But Bailey said Monday:

"I wouldn't have been surprised if this happened when he first got into the general prison population about five years ago. At that time, someone might have taken it upon himself to carry out the death penalty, but it seems unlikely now."

Greek Junta Relaxes Muscles, Rolls Up Sleeves

By PHILIP DOPOULOS
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP)-Greece's new military junta relaxed its stringent takeover measures Monday and began tackling pressing social and economic problems.

With no opposition to the lightning coup apparent, the generals abolished the curfew in Athens and freed three former politicians under house arrest for supporting the student demonstrations of 10 days ago.

Tanks, armored personnel carriers and troops pulled out of the capital's streets and returned to their bases in the suburbs.

The coup was welcomed by the entire Greek press. One paper praised the army for toppling President George Papadopoulos and ending "six years, seven months and four days" of one-man rule.

The new president, Lt. Gen. Phaedon Gizikis, presided over a three-hour cabinet session. The fate of 304 persons jailed in the wake of the violent anti-Papadopoulos disturbances was one of the subjects discussed.

The plans for attention to Greece's social and economic ailments were underscored by the appointment of Adamantios Androutsopoulos as premier. A lawyer trained in the United States, he is the former finance minister and is known as an economist.

Papadopoulos, arrested at his seaside villa when the army moved against him early Sunday, remained a prisoner. Armored personnel carriers and troops in full battle dress ringed his villa 20 miles from Athens.

The ruling junta gave no indication what it planned to do with him.

In an apparent move to emphasize the junta's relaxed approach, Gizikis arrived for the cabinet session without guards. It was in sharp contrast to Papadopoulos, who never moved in public without his personal guards.

Tlhe coup appeared generally accepted by many Greeks with an air of relief and hopes of better days ahead. Many others however, expressed pessimism over the newest military takeover because some of the army officers reported backing Gizikis were ultrarightists.

Most prominently mentioned as the leading power behind the 57-year-old Gizikis was Brig. Dimitrios Ioannides, chief of the 2,000-man army police in the Athens area.

Israeli, Arab Leaders Stalemate

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli and Egyptian generals meeting in a sandswept tent studied detailed maps of the Suez Canal zone Monday in stalemated efforts to separate their forces along the October battle lines.

Explosions boomed in the distance as they talked, underscoring the urgency of their discussions on a desert highway about 60 miles east of Cairo.

Arab kings and presidents assembled in Algiers for a summit-level effort to forge a unified Arab strategy for the Arab-Israeli peace negotiations scheduled to begin Dec. 18 in Geneva.

Palestinian Hijackers State Terms

By FRED BARRY
Associated Press Writer

VALLETTA, Malta (AP)-Palestinian guerrillas promised to release 247 passengers on a hijacked Dutch jumbo jet Monday evening if Maltese officials refueled the plane, airline spokesmen said.

Sharpshooters surrounded the plane while the hijackers negotiated with Egyptian authorities on undisclosed demands.

It was not known whether the hijackers had agreed to release the 17 crew members.

The passengers included 159 Japanese, a few Americans and others of a dozen nationalities.

Actor Laurence Harvey Dead At 45

By PETER MUCCINI
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Laurence Harvey, the British movie star who brought a touch of elegant menace to many of his roles, is dead at the age of 45 after an 18-month fight against cancer.

Harvey, who died Sunday night at his London home, began his career as a drama student living on $16 a week. He became a movie star noted for style, a sense of fun and versatility.

"I've never played myself in films and I've never used my own voice," he said. "I've played a New Yorker, a Southerner, a Virginian, a sort of Bostonian, a Cockney and a North Country Englishman."

Harvey was noted for his antics. He once spent $5,000 lining the complete interior of a diminutive minicar in black leather and embossing his initials on the doors in gold. The refurbishing came to more than three times the cost of the car.

During gasoline rationing here in 1956, Harvey rode around London on a chauffer-driven motor scooter.

Born in Lithuania and brought up in South Africa, Harvey came to Britain in 1946. He began in stock companies and later played Shakespearean roles with the Old Vic theater in London.

Major stardom came to him with "Room at the Top," a 1959 film in which he played a ruthlessley ambitious young man who clawed his way to wealth and power at the expense of his friends and the woman he loved.

His first Hollywood movie was "King Richard and the Crusaders." He played opposite Elizabeth Taylor in "Butterfield 8" and appeared with her again in the recent "Night Watch."

Miss Taylor was one of the many stars who visited him toward the end of his illness.

His first two marriages — to British actress Margaret Leighton and Joan Cohn ended in divorce.

His third wife, model Paulene Stone, was with him when he died. His bride of less than a year, she was the mother of his 3-year-old daughter Domino.

Harvey was born Larushka Mischa Skikne. He acquired his English surname from the fashionable Harvey Nichols department store in London.

Judge Rules Automakers Can Not Be Forced To Solve Polution Problem

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A federal judge ruled in a decision released Monday that U.S. automakers can't be forced under antitrust laws to provide "equitable relief" for air pollution damages.

U. S. District Court Judge Manuel Real dismissed 34 of 38 cases against the nation's major auto manufacturers. He said that although smog has become a serious problem, anti-trust laws do not give him the power to force auto manufacturers to find a solution for it.

The suits were brought by 28 states, as well as numerous cities and counties.

The plaintiffs asked that the auto companies be ordered to take several steps to eliminate smog, including making large contributions toward the establishment of mass transit systems.

The suits asked that the firms be required to place proper smog devices in cars sold without them add to provide free emission tests.

Judge Real's decision was made last week but disclosed Monday.

"Certainly, in the battle against smog, the hour is late," he said, but added the requests of the plaintiffs "go beyond the power of this court to grant."

Camelopard's Demise

Those of you out there in Reader Land are by now no doubt well aware of that tragic demise of a great man. Death is no easy subject at a time like this, especially when death claims one with so much potential if little else. Yes, Charles Camelopard, the late great Collegian Washington D.C. Correspondent, was a man noted for the ambiguity of his life. No one knew whether he truly existed, or whether he was merely a figment of Martha Mitchell's fertile imagination. But yet, some of us knew Charles Camelopard. We knew him for what he was. The somberness of the occasion dictates that we omit what he was and concentrate on what he might have been. CC (known as such to his intimates) could have been a reporter. He could have sought the truth out, and reported it, letting neither rain, snow or even sleet get in his way. In truth, God Help Me, any corner bar prevented this. CC's best friend was the bottle and he constantly sought its truth. Last Thursday was a sad day for the Ripple Wine Company as they lost half of their UMass sales. But in fact, the bottle was an integral part of Camelopard's reporting without which it was garbage. It lent a distinctive flavor to his objectivity. It clouded the facts with such a fine bravado. It turned one's mind from the grim tragedy of the world's gruesome reality, and instead of vomiting from the utter heart-rendering horridness of it all, the reader would vomit from the stink of Camelopard's muckracking.

As it has been reported, Camelopard's death was a tragedy. There we were standing in front of the White House holding our weekly Impeach Dick rally, a thousand people strong, when the cry went out — STRING THE BUM UP IN EFFIGY!!! For twenty minutes, the crowd chanted HANG THE DUMMY!! HANG THE DUMMY!! HANG THE DUMMY!! whilst several of us prepared the actual dummy for the hanging, over to one side. Unfortunately Camelopard, being enthusiastic in these affairs, was one of those preparing the dummy. Then things happened so fast no one really knows what happened. We picked up the dummy and hung him. Twenty minutes later, when the dummy had just stopped twitching, I turned to congratulate Camelopard for a job well done. Well I couldn't find him and then I noticed the utter travesty of the situation. FOR THERE WAS CAMELOPARD HANGING FROM THE TREE!! Someone had switched him for the dummy!! People seemed unconcerned. They didn't care. Southwest revisited. "One dummy for another — Big Shit!" was all I heard. I was hysterical and I had to be carried off. Who killed Camelopard?? I'll not rest til I find the culprit.

Next week: an interview with the spirit of Charles Camelopard, straight from his grave in a McDonald's back lot in northern Swaziland.

50 M.P.H. Ain't Good Enough

By BOB ROSSMAN

I tried. I really tried. But I just can't buy it. This 50 miles per hour speed limit seems like a good idea, but it has too many bad points for me to accept it. The idea that it saves fuel is possible, but it seems to me that it would only do so in the case where you do a lot of long distance driving. There aren't that many people that do, and for those people who must, it would be much more feasable to take some form of mass transportation because if you have to go fifty the whole way, you can drive forever.

I took mileage readings for my trip to and from Boston this past weekend. I usually go on the Mass. Pike at about 75 m.p.h. This weekend I observed the new limit of 50. One way it took me just barely less gas than usual, but the other way it actually took more. Granted, my car is a tank, but little cars develop their own problems. For the past couple of years, little cars have been advertising what great gas mileage they get, and how they operate at peak efficiency at a speed of 60 m.p.h. I don't claim to know an awful lot about cars, but talking to people who do, it seems that if these cars consistantly go fifty, it hurts their performance, and in the long run actually causes them to burn up more fuel. This isn't so unlikely when you consider that buses were exempted and allowed to go 60 because they burn up less fuel at that speed than 50.

Worse than all that, I think it's really dangerous when almost everybody is suddenly forced to go 50, from going at a normal highway speed. Traffic seems to bunch up, and it gets a bit hairy driving in a crowd at a fairly fast speed. For example, you're going 50 and the guy in front of you is going 45. So you have to suddenly drop to 45 and there's a guy coming up fast behind you (you may have noticed that some people evidentally never heard of the new law or something like that) and the cars in the lane to your left are going 50, so there's nowhere to go. I drive a cab in Boston, and driving very rarely scares me, but I do get nervous in a situation like this when there's nothing I can do except rely on the driving ability of others. So, by law, you can't drive aggressively and speed up to avoid the situation, and you also can't drive defensively because there's nowhere to go to avoid trouble. This scares me.

I have been given a new fear. Trucks will be allowed to go faster than cars. Theoretically they can only go five miles an hour faster, but they will be going a lot faster than that. After all, have you ever seen a cop pull over a truck for speeding? I sympathize with the trucking industry, but I've driven trucks and I know that there is a lot of danger in this situation. On a road like the Mass Pike you struggle to get your truck uphill, and then you let 'er roll going downhill. This often amounts to speeds in excess of eighty. Now, if you are halfway down that hill and you want to pass a few cars that are going 45, you zap into the left lane doing 50-55, and my truck is coming up behind you doing 85, I can't stop and you can't get over in time, and.....

The signs on the road say, "Your highway taxes at work," and you know there's something wrong with going 50 on a road that was designed (and paid for with our money) for going safely at speeds far in excess of that. It is my contention, and I don't see much wrong with this logic, that it is much safer to be going 70 m.p.h. on these roads than 50.

I said before that I tried to like this new law, even with all these arguments, but Sunday finally convinced me that my current position is the right one. Before then I had never seen a traffic jam on the Mass. Pike, but when it takes four hours to get from Boston to Amherst via a great superhighway because of this dumb speed limit, forget it. I guess they figure that if you can get great gas mileage going 50 on the highway, imagine the mileage you can get going 11 m.p.h.

A more realistic approach to the problem would be to strictly enforce all the previously existing speed limits. 60 or 65 is not that much faster than the speed most people are now going, and a lot safer. I know that when I see somebody get bagged, I slow down. And if I knew there was a good chance I would see a cop every few miles, I could easily live with the system.

"Wuh?"

"You support women keeping their maiden names, don't you?"

"Yes."

"Even when they're not MAIDENS?!"

"Uh...well, I didn't think it had anything to do with being a maiden...I've never advocated being a maiden, myself. "I mean, if a maiden name is attached to the state of maidenhood, the issue tends to get somewhat lost, doesn't it?"

"You know what the issue really is, you can't avoid it, it's YOUR CHILDREN!"

"But I don't have any children."

"That's beside the point!"

"It is?"

"What about your husband's children?"

"He doesn't have any children, either."

"I mean, what are you going to call your children?"

"I DON'T HAVE ANY CHILDREN!"

"What are you going to call YOUR FUTURE CHILDREN?!"

"BILLY OR JANE, ANYTHING BUT SUE!"

"Alright, Owen, you're just trying to obscure the issues. If all women keep their maiden names, how will we insure that our progeny will know who they are?"

"Isn't it customary in this country to give children their fathers' names? and how many people know their grandmothers' original names?"

"I don't see where—"

"Children don't take their mothers' names now, so by having my own name, who am I going to affect besides ME?"

16 Stabs At A Time

By MARGIE COMBS

My first encounter with the mysteries of acupuncture was about five years ago in a Life magazine. After observing the photos of faces and skulls jabbed with countless silver needles, I thanked myself for being an American under the safety of the AMA and away from all that oriental voodoo. I quickly decided that all the pricks and pierces I'd received from blood tests, vaccinations, and anesthetics weren't so bad. At least they meant only one stab at a time.

In the years following, I diligently pursued gymnastics, graduated from high school, flew off to college, and contracted tendonitis in both shoulders.

For every persistent athlete, a chronic injury or malfunction can become a dreaded enemy, and tendonitis is one of the most stubborn. It's not the least bit selective about its victims, as it strikes baseball players in the pitching arm, tennis players in the elbow, runners in the ankles, and gymnasts in the hip joints and shoulders. It's also not predictable, as it proves curable in some people, treatable in others, and hopeless in all the rest.

I figure I'm good for the last category. The last two years have consisted of battling these tendons with just about every weapon known to medicine; progressing from simply ignoring the pain, to ultra-sound treatments, to ice, heat packs, and whirlpools, to butazolidin treatments, and finally to cortizone. Thanks to the last addition, I blew up like a helium balloon, and experienced a nasty sensation of zero adrenalin for an entire season, having to practically slap myself to stay awake during competition. The last choice was surgery with perhaps a 50 percent chance of maintaining full motion and strength, which I decided were lousy odds, especially considering my luck with medicine.

So, about the time I was throwing eight years of gymnastics out the window, and dusting off my place on the bench, I bumped into acupuncture again. Before I could think it over I found myself stretched out in a small room, smelling smokey herbs and listening to Chinese dialogue with 16 needles in my shoulders, elbows, and hands. I can't say that I honestly expected it to work, but after three treatments I could lift both arms painlessly, after five I could stretch them over my head, and after seven I began working out for the first time since stopping the cortizone. No drugs, no side affects, and plenty of adrenalin.

Sounds too good to be true? Well, don't be disappointed, because, true to the University's habits, there is a catch. The Infirmary Insurance does not recognize acupuncture, and likewise won't pay for any treatments. Good luck paying for it!

Letters To The Editor

Grin And Bear It No Longer

To The Editor:

Should I grin and bear it? Should I try to convince myself that life is like that? No! Not anymore! I would like to share with others, especially other women a recent experience I had that made me not grin and bear it anymore.

At the beginning of the semester, I needed a job very badly and came up early to get one. After much searching I did obtain one as a waitress at Campus Pizza. My first impression was what nice people they were to help me. I appreciated it very much. At first they seemed very friendly and we used to joke and have what I thought was a good time. After a while, however I realized that the jokes and the comments were not so funny afterall...you see the jokes were about me. I couldn't understand them all the time because they spoke in Greek. Fortunately, I had a Greek girlfriend who translated some of the jokes and comments that had been said. I found out that the jokes and the comments were often about me, my body, and sex. It all seemed to fall into perspective when I realized that what I thought were their friendly looks were rather stares at certain parts of my body...staring at me as if I were an object.

I continued working there telling myself that it was probably my imagination and that perhaps I was blowing everything out of proportion. One night however I was finally convinced. One Friday night from 5-2:30 I experienced nothing but degradation. I was called into the back room of the restaurant to wash pans that did not have to be done. I was really needed to wait on tables, however since I was told to wash the pans I went back and began to do them. It just so happened that one of the owners and some of his friends were sitting there. They proceeded to make comments about me, look at me, laugh, look at me, laugh until I was ready to scream. I turned toward them with a look on my face that begged them to stop their comments but they continued totally disregarding my feelings and my embarrassment. I should have thrown the pans at them all and walked out. I didn't however because I didn't want to embarrass them in front of their customers. It was really absurd of me to consider their feelings after they had torn mine apart. I told them after work how I felt and they looked at me as if to say it's okay, you'll get over it or she must be getting her period because she is so sensitive.

I did not go to work the following night that I was scheduled and I did not notify them. I called a day later to politely tell them I no longer wished to work for them. The owner proceeded to tell me how inconsiderate of his feelings I had been not to call. I thought to myself how absurd for him to talk of feelings when he had refused to recognize the fact that I had any feelings. My respect for myself and other women prompted me to write this letter. Remember as I did that your pride and value as a woman is not worth all the money in the world!

Precarious Analogy

To The Editor:

In response to Mr. Chisholm's letter of Nov. 20 in condemning McNamara House Council for wanting to conduct a furniture search, I found an interesting analogy. He compared McNamara House Council's concern over lost furniture with Richard Nixon's drug enforcement policies, a very precarious analogy at best.

This search would involve the residents of the room being present and people concerned over about the furniture just taking a look in the room. That's all, nobody would be hasseled if they didn't have the lounge furniture. It doesn't involve a raiding party smashing down the door and turning everything upside-down, looking for grass as Mr. Chisholm wishes to imply.

There is a problem. Because of the disappearance of a substantial amount of furniture (tables and chairs) from our two main lounges, people are forced to sit on a cold floor during meetings, classes, parties and even watching T.V. Also if Area Money has to be used to replaced this "borrowed" furniture there won't be enough money left to implement other recreational projects which the house voted for in a referendum. It doesn't seem fair that a select few should enjoy what was originally intended for all. So, What Would You Do?

McNamara House Treasurer

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Students' Kids

To The Editor:

The house is quiet now, so I am writing to the Daily Collegian about our plight. You see, I am the wife of a Graduate Assistant, and I am the mother of a 2 1/2 year old boy. I have him in the North Village Parent Cooperative Nursery for a few hours a day so that I can do some of the things that I like to do such as reading, sewing, writing letters, etc. The other mothers take courses, study, or go to work during that time. Meanwhile, my boy is playing and learning with other children.

This blissful situation may come to an end next semester. The University has cut our funds. They have done the same to the University Day School. The North Village Nursery is a cooperative with parents doing a lot of the supervision and clean up. We are located in the J-16 apartment of North Village Married Student Housing. Children of UMass students living elsewhere are accepted also. We have 2 professional teachers to give the children quality education. It is a small school, only about 25 kids. We all feel that it is a cozy little school for preschoolers. I'd rather my child go there than to some large school where he might feel like a number before he can even count.

We are in the process of requesting money from the Undergraduate and the Graduate Senate. We are writing to the University, to our representatives, and to our congressmen. We aren't asking for much, only for about $3,500 for 1974. We parents are taking on most of the cost, about $5,500, by paying tuition for our children.

This is a small plight, but I am sure that this big University of Massachusetts will be able to come up with the funds to help the little children of their students.

Syrian Cruelty

To The Editor:

The following is an excerpt from an article that appeared in the Boston Globe on Thanksgiving Day:

"...In December 1963, Syria returned 11 Israeli POWs. All but one of them had to be confined to a mental hospital as a result of the inhumane treatment received in Syria. Earlier this year, three Israeli pilots were returned and, too, are still undergoing care for physical and mental problems stemming from their incarceration in Syria. And there have been several reports of the discovery of tortured Israeli soldiers found when the Golan Heights were regained after Syrian advances in the early moments of the current outbreak of hostilities...Israel has listed over 350 captured Syrians, but the International Red Cross has been unable to obtain a corresponding compilation from Syria. The consequences of this lack of information are substantial in the light of Syria's spotty history on the treatment of prisoners..."

It would serve no purpose to describe the methods of torture that have been used on these human beings. It is fair to say, however, that they compare in every way in cruelty and inhumanity to the Nazi use of torture on Jews during the Second World War. Anyone doing research into Syrian treatment of Israeli prisoners will agree that this comparison is truthful and unexaggerated.

Two ironies in the situation are that 1) Syria is a signatory to the Geneva Conventions that protect the rights of POWs, and that 2) a number of those subjected to Syrian cruelty were not even POWs, as we understand the term, but were actually Jewish farmers who had been captured in Arab guerilla raids and dragged across the border into Syria.

A few questions to those students who support the Arab role in the Mideast conflict:

Healthy and sane men have been tortured to death or driven to insanity and physical debilitation by the deliberate use of torture. Where is your sense of outrage? Does your support of the Arab position imply a moral blindness where Jews are concerned? Why are you so quick to condemn Israel for every imaginable evil while remaining silent in the face of continuing Syrian war crimes?

Single Parents— Meet Other PWPs

Parents Without Partners (PWP) invites all single parents to share an evening getting acquainted, tonight, at 8, at "The Gables" on Rte. 5 in South Deerfield.

This "dutch treat" will open with introductions and a short talk by Ms. Barbara Wilkinson, membership director, about the easy ways to meet people and other benefits of PWP. Dancing and chatting by candlelight while exploring common interests will highlight the evening.

(PWP) Inc., is an international non-profit, nonsectarian organization devoted to the interests of single parents and their children. Custody and age are not membership limitations.

Vietnam War's 007 To Speak

Don Luce, discoverer of "tiger cages" on a South Vietnamese prison island, will speak tonight at 8:30 in Mahar Auditorium.

His topic will be "Political Prisoners in South Vietnam."

A journalist and agriculturalist, he has been described as the "James Bond of the Vietnam War." And "Time" magazine has noted, "Don Luce is to the South Vietnamese government what Ralph Nader is to General Motors. He knows the culture and the people better than any correspondent or U.S. government employee."

His talk at UMass will be his first public appearance after an official trip to the Peoples Revolutionary Government zone in Vietnam, as a representative for NBC News. The visit is co-sponsored by the UMass Sylvan Area Residential College and the Five-College Legal Studies Program.

Commuters Come Rap

The Commuter Assembly will hold its general meeting tomorrow at 5:15 in the Commuter Lounge. The grand opening celebration of the Lounge will be held at that time.

Some of the topics on the agenda will be the possibility of redecorating and refurnishing the lounge, buses, an amendment to the constitution and the opening of the Lounge.

Mr. Corker, Director of the Campus Center and Student Union, will speak and answer questions about the CC and SU. Also, any problems or suggestions brought up by commuters will be discussed.

All commuters are invited to attend and refreshments will be served. This is a good time to find out what the Commuter Assembly is and what it's doing for you.

Get Some Tips On Food And Money

"How to Eat Well on $1.50 a Day" will be the topic of a discussion this Thursday at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Speaker will be Fergus Clydesdale, professor of the very popular Food Science 101.

The program is one of the contemporary events series, "The First Amendment," sponsored by the Christian Foundation as a means of giving the UMass community a chance to discuss major public issues with expert opinion present.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology Hall of Fame: Carl Jung, Copernicus, Kepler, Alan Leo, Grant Lewi, Paul G. Clancy, Llewellyn George. The list, of course, can be extended and will be and, every so often, I will include it and expand it and expound on it in this space. Starting right now, I will add perhaps the most revered name in American astrology, that of Evangeline Adams.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): One you admire professionally may be having legal difficulties. Know it and don't press demands. Be flexible. Do some investigating. Analyze proposition. Gemini, Virgo and Capricorn could be in picture. You are in the running!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Light touch wins. Accent diplomacy. Look ahead. Be aware of potential. Deal with Libra. Mix-up in communications, calls or correspondence is indicated. Double-check. Confide in family member. You will receive support.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to backtrack. Emotional response could be opposite from logical move. Know what is actual, what is wishful, what is illusion. Means act in grown-up fashion. Otherwise, you pay dearly for what could be a childish tantrum.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low. Gather forces. Seek report, counsel of older, experienced individual. Accent the practical. Take nothing for granted. Be a newsman. Means check your facts, figures. Home and property values might be featured.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish what you start. Deal with Libra, Aries persons. Find ways of getting message across. Distribute, publish and advertise. Work procedures may need revision. Keep open mind. Remember lesson taught by one you respect.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take a chance but don't be reckless. Means be independent, confident, creative--but don't throw caution to winds. Leo figures prominently. Member of opposite sex may act in rebellious manner. Don't take it too seriously!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Much of what was routine is overhauled. Plenty of the past is tossed aside as habit patterns are smashed. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could be involved. Accent is on uprooting problem which is not really your own.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid tendency to scatter forces. Relative is confused. Know it and experiment. Refuse to be painted into corner. Highlight versatility. Short trip could be wild-goose chase unless you check facts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't mix money and friends. You could lose both. Key now is practical approach. Take stock. Size up situation and act accordingly. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could be in picture. Fantasy is reviewed and revised.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cycle is such that you can make beneficial changes. You are capable now of analyzing and coming up with constructive answers. One you formerly depended upon could be removed from scene. Be a self-starter.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trying to keep a secret now could prove a major task. Applies especially where family is concerned. Questions about money and budget appear almost certain to arise. Purchase of luxury item could be in question.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Open line of communication with one who can aid in professional endeavors. Give full play to intuitive intellect. You know without knowing; you are able to detect, perceive without formal method or procedure. Trust yourself!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are capable of being aggressive when necessary; you also fight for fair play. You have way of almost communicating with animals. You draw to you people born under Aries and Libra. You will be more popular in 1974 and March and December will be your significant months in that year.

In Denver Playoff Fever Is Mile High

By KENNETH T. WALSH
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Playoff fever, to which Denver fans previously have been immune, has struck.

The Broncos, who've never had a winning season in their 14 year National Football League history, climbed to first place in the American Conference's Western Division with a 14-10 triumph over Kansas City Sunday.

Most of the 51,331 fans at Mile High Stadium chanted "We're No. 1." There was hugging and cheering in the parking lot, and even the team doctor trotted into the dressing room with a raised index finger indicating Denver's top spot in the standings.

The victory gave Denver a 6-3-2 record. Kansas City and Oakland are tied for second with 6-4-1 marks.

However, the fever may be short-lived. Denver takes on the tough Dallas Cowboys this week while the Chiefs face Cleveland and the Raiders tackle the hapless Houston Oilers. But the Broncos think they can go all the way.

"It was our biggest game yet and our defense was outstanding," said running back Floyd Little, who's been one of the league's top performers despite his team's past dismal record.

"Now if we can take care of Dallas it'll be all our hill," he said. "We've got to get together and play the best football of our lives next week. That's what it will take to win.'

Denver's explosive passing attack, the best in the conference, came through Sunday as quarterback Charley Johnson threw touchdown passes of 18 and 40 yards to Haven Moses within 81 seconds in the second period.

The scoring flurry proved enough. Kansas City could manage only a second period 15-yard field goal by Jan Stenerud until late in the game.

The Chiefs rallied for a touchdown in the final minutes, scoring on a seven-yard pass from Mike Livingston to Otis Taylor.

Kansas City got the ball again after a Bronco drive stalled, but Bronco safety Charles Greer picked off a tipped pass with 40 seconds left to preserve the victory.

"We got the big plays when we needed them, both offensively and defensively," Denver Coach John Ralston said. "Charlie Greer's interception was the key."

Kansas City Coach Hank Stram said, "I'm almost glad to see this Denver franchise come along. They've worked so hard and their fans have been so loyal over all these losing seasons."

WFL May Lure Many NFL'ers

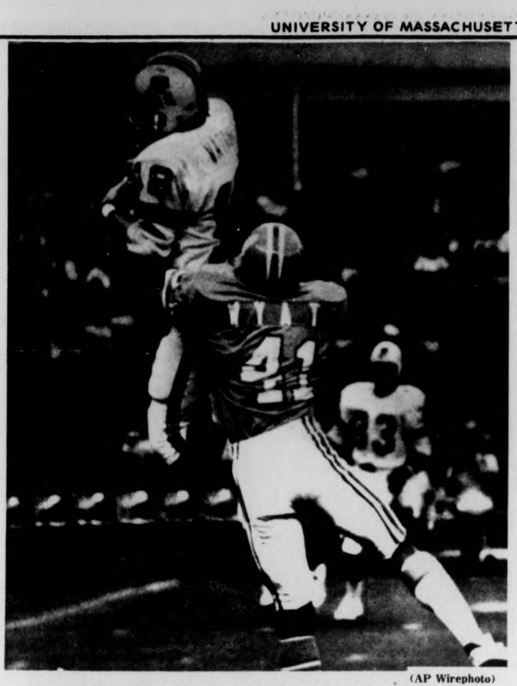
MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins linebacker Doug Swift says as many as 15 members of the defending National Football League champions could be signed by the proposed rival World Football League if enough money were offered.

"If they had the money, maybe a dozen to 15," said Swift.

Defensive tackle Manny Fernandez thinks the new league will have its biggest effect on other NFL clubs where salaries are not as high. "A lot of the players would go...because the money in the NFL is so limited," he said.

"You've got to make the money while you can. But the NFL has us over a barrel. Take the Super Bowl. The TV money has gone up every year, ticket prices have gone up...but the player money hasn't gone up a cent.

"When somebody talks like I'm talking, people might wonder about my loyalty to the ball club. But what about their loyalty to the ball players. If you're not able to produce here, you're down the road. That's as far as their loyalty goes."



(AP Wirephoto)

Suspended in midair is New England Patriot wide-receiver Randy Vataha during first-quarter action Sunday afternoon at the Houston Astrodome. For the Patriots, the 32-0 victory was their second in a row, while for the Oilers it was yet another disgrace to NFL football.

WHA Wants To Move Knights

BALTIMORE (AP) — The World Hockey Association wants to move the Jersey Knights franchise to Baltimore this season, the Baltimore News American reported in its Monday editions.

"We have three or four cities pursuing franchises," the newspaper quoted Dennis Murphy, WHA president, as saying "but our preference is Baltimore. This city meets every requirement."

Murphy, who recently replaced Gary Davidson as president, said Milwaukee, Montreal, Miami and Calgary also were interested in WHA franchises.

"We are ready to make a deal," Murphy said. "I plan to talk with the parties in other cities as a matter of courtesy."

Murphy said Baltimore could have a franchise within three weeks. The New York Golden Blades, now playing in Cherry Hill, N.J., as the Jersey Knights, would be the franchise available.

Matthews Named NL Rookie Of The Year

By ALEX SACHARE
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Matthews, who hit .300 as a regular outfielder for the San Francisco Giants, was named Monday the National League's Rookie of the Year for 1973.

Matthews received 11 votes from a 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America. He easily beat out Montreal pitcher Steve Rogers, the runner-up with 3½ votes.

Catcher Bob Boone of Philadelphia, relief pitcher Elias Sosa of San Francisco and third baseman Dan Driessen of Cincinnati drew two votes apiece.

Los Angeles infielders Ron Cey and Dave Lopes and San Diego outfielder Johnny Grubb each received one vote. Outfielder Richie Zisk of the Pittsburgh Pirates received the other one half vote.

The 23-year-old Matthews is the fourth Giants player to win Rookie of the Year honors. The others are Willie Mays, 1951; Orlando Cepeda, 1958 and Willie McCovey, 1959.

Matthews, who lives in Pacoima, Calif., appeared in 148 games for the Giants, batting an even .300 with 12 home runs and 58 runs batted in. He teamed with Bobby Bonds and Garry Maddox to give the Giants one of the fastest outfields in the major leagues.

He had 22 doubles, 10 triples and 17 stolen bases.

San Francisco's No. 1 choice in the 1968 free agent draft, the 6-foot-2, 200-pound Matthews earned his starting berth in a brief appearance with the Giants late in 1972.

After batting .313 for Phoenix in the Pacific Coast League, Matthews was promoted to the Giants in September and hit .290 in 20 games.

AF Outjumped

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — West Point beat the Air Force Academy in this weekend's National Collegiate Parachuting Association championships.

When the final jumper landed late Sunday, the U.S. Military Academy team had 109 points and the Air Force had 103.

Southern Illinois University, which hosted the four-day meet, was third with 88 points.

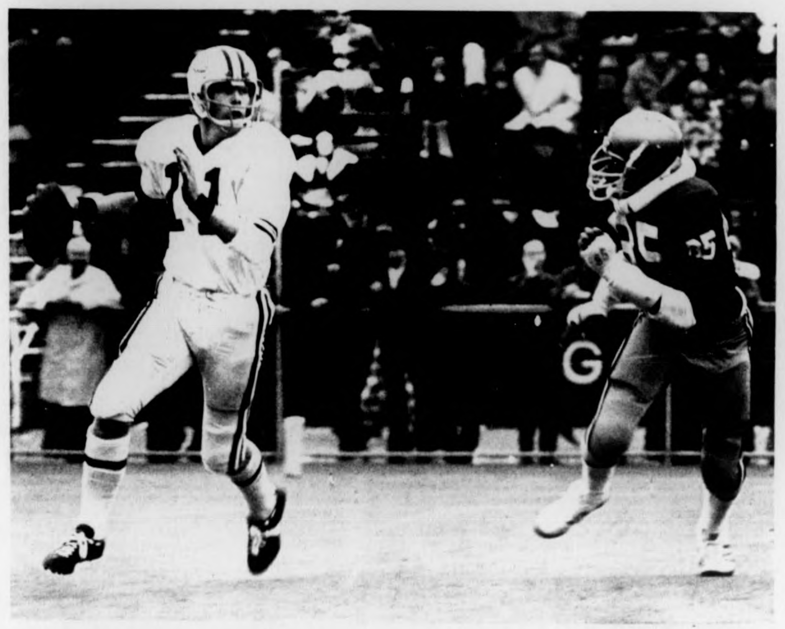
Peil Pennington: Runner And Passer



(Staff Photo - Gib Fullerton)

The 1973 season was satisfying to no one connected with the University of Massachusetts. Due to offensive line weaknesses and the lack of a decent running game, quarterback Peil Pennington was either sacked or forced to run for his life with alarming regularity. However, with all that going against him, Peil broke New England University records for career passing yardage and career yards in total offense.

'Bama Cops Top Spot In Poll

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

The Crimson Tide of Alabama replaced Ohio State Monday as the nation's top-ranked college football team.

Ohio State's 10-10 tie with Michigan shook things up in The Associated Press' next-to-last regular-season poll. Oklahoma, which had been third, moved into the runner-up position while Ohio State dropped to third and Michigan held onto fourth place.

Ohio State had been No. 1 since the fourth week of the season when Southern California's defending national champions were held to a 7-7 tie by Oklahoma.

Notre Dame and Penn State, like Alabama unbeaten and untied, remained fifth and sixth, respectively, and stayed in contention for the national title, which will be decided following New Year's Day bowl games.

Alabama, which defeated previously unbeaten Louisiana State 21-7 last Thursday, received 36 first-place votes and 1,176 points from the AP panel of 63 sports writers and broadcasters. The Crimson Tide had been in second place for six weeks.

Twenty first-place ballots and 1,095 points went to Oklahoma, which blanked Nebraska 27-0 on Friday and dropped the Cornhuskers from 10th to 13th.

Ohio State and Michigan were almost as close in the voting as they were in Saturday's now-famous deadlock. The Buckeyes received two first-place votes and 892 points while Michigan earned one top vote and 876 points.

Notre Dame, a 48-15 winner over the Air Force on Thanksgiving Day, received two first-place votes and 832 points while Penn State, which completed its first-ever 11-0 regular season by defeating Pitt 35-13, pulled down the remaining two No. 1 votes and 726 points.

Southern Cal climbed from ninth to seventh by trimming UCLA 23-13 in their Pacific-8 Conference showdown. The setback dropped the Bruins from eighth to 10th.

LSU's loss to Alabama nudged the Tigers from seventh to eighth while Texas leaped from 11th to ninth with a 42-13 rout of Texas A&M.

Top Twenty

The Top Twenty, with first-place votes in parentheses and season records:

1. Alabama (36)	10-0-0
2. Oklahoma (20)	9-0-1
3. Ohio State (2)	9-0-1
4. Michigan (1)	10-0-1
5. Notre Dame (2)	9-0-0
6. Penn State (2)	11-0-0
7. So. California	9-1-1
8. Louisiana State	9-1-1
9. Texas	8-2-0
10. UCLA	9-2-0
11. Arizona State	10-1-0

About Scheduling

I was reading about the recent football debauchery at Boston College and the thing that all reports seemed to imply was that UMass was on the field with a team that they had no business playing.

One thing that Boston College definitely does not have is supermen playing for them. Football, like any other sport involves athletes that all possess the same equipment, i.e., a pair of arms, two legs, a head, etc. Granted some individuals are more highly developed in these areas than others, but in most cases individuals play fairly evenly equipped.

The thing that Boston College had on UMass was the advantage of playing a tougher schedule against teams whose football skills were honed a little finer.

If you think that scheduling can make a difference in a team sport, you ought to see what it will do to a sport whose emphasis is personal. And I am talking about wrestling and gymnastics in particular.

The Thanksgiving holiday found me back in Pennsylvania talking with some people who keep their eye on the area where so much great wrestling is spawned. I found out that little Clarion State College is going to take a trip out West and wrestle two long standing national wrestling powers, Iowa and Oklahoma, plus participate in a tournament being hosted by Penn State that will see the Big 10 (Michigan) and the Pacific 8 (Oregon State also NCAA Runners-Up) Champions as participants. When I say Clarion State is small, I mean the whole College could be put in Central Area and just barely spill over to Orchard Hill. In the last few years, however, Clarion has come up with five National Champions — and three of them are back this year. They built to this potential by continually scheduling tougher and tougher schools. One time the toughest school on their schedule was Pitt (always in the top five in the EIWA) and now I to guess they worry more about Slippery Rock State College beating them.

There is a good chance that the Golden Eagles of Clarion State will get blown off the mat when they go out West. But they will get a chance to wrestle against teams who have wrestlers that are the very best at what they do. The Clarion wrestler will get a chance to try his favorite takedown against Dan Gable's Proteges and see how they counter or fall. If they get pinned they will know how and why — not that the kid was just better, but why he was better. Was it strength, endurance, a new move, a psychological edge?

Much the same can be said for gymnastics both men's and women's. Penn State, the defending NCAA Runner-up, is on the schedule of the UMass Minutemen. The gymnasts look forward to this meet for what it will hold in terms of learning. What new routine will the Lions have on floor exercise? Is the man on the parallel bars so good because he times his release just so or the way he puts his hand on the dismount? By observation and competition they will learn so when they participate against weaker teams on the schedule it will show, just as it will when they are in the League Tournament battling for a chance to participate in the Nationals.

The women have a decent schedule, more by luck than good scheduling. The toughest team they face every year is Springfield College and that is because they are just down the road. The women are the defending National Champions — but one championship does not constitute a dynasty. For the women to remain on top they have to see names like Southern Illinois, Indiana State, and Kent State appear on their schedule. It is only from teams like this that can see what originality will look like when they go to the Nationals, see what new routines can do for the same performer, and see what makes for poise and concentration.

"You migrate to your competition". An aphorism worn old by constant usage but one that yearly sees itself borne out by the Clarion State's, Penn State's, and the Boston College's.

Coburn And Nugent Named Yan-Con Stars

by STEVE DECOSTA

Tom Coburn and Mike Nugent, two standouts for the UMass booters, have been named to the 1973 All Yankee Conference soccer team.

For Coburn, the leading goal scorer in the conference, it was the second naming to the YanCon team. Nugent cracked the select circle for the first time.

The voting was conducted by the seven conference soccer coaches, and Coburn's name appeared on all the ballots. The only other unanimous choice was Tim Hunter of Connecticut.

Repeaters from last year's All Conference team were Coburn, Hunter, and Franz Innocent, a forward from Connecticut. Hunter was also chosen as an All-American last season.

Connecticut, the conference champions, and New Hampshire led the balloting with three players named. UMass and Maine were represented by two players while Rhode Island placed one. Vermont and BU failed to place a player on the team.

In other all star balloting, the New England soccer coaches association has chosen Coburn and halfback Jim Vollinger from UMass to compete in their annual all-star game. The game will be held in Springfield on December 2 in the format of University vs. College Division all-stars.

KICKING IT AROUND - Yale and Brown will meet this weekend to decide the New England university division soccer championship. Yale advanced to the finals by defeating No. 1 ranked Bridgeport 3-1, while Brown needed an overtime period to beat Connecticut 1-0.

Springfield won the College Division crown last weekend by defeating Babson 4-0. Springfield now hopes to advance to the national tournament, which they will host on the weekend of December 6.

Carl Vercollone now owns the UMass record for career's saves. His 87 this season gives him 185 in three years, pushing him way past the 120 of John Kiah, the old record holder.

Tom Coburn moved from ninth to third place in career goal scoring and from sixth to a second place tie in the category of career point scoring. Coburn now has 28 goals in his three seasons, which places him behind Clarence Simpson (34 goals) and Alfred Hoezel (30). Coburn also has a total of 34 points which places only three behind the record held by Arelindo Alves.

Charlotte Lettis 15th In Nationals

By STEVE CROWE

Running in the Nationals in Alburquerque, New Mexico was a whole new experience for Charlotte Lettis.

The course was on a golf links some 6000 feet above sea level, and it was flat. Nothing like the Orchard Hill terrain which Charlotte Lettis claims is the best type of training area. That was one experience — running for three miles in the desert and making it in good enough time to finish 16th. Out of the 120 announced starters, only 94 finished the race.

"After the race, almost everyone was collapsing on the ground," said Ms. Lettis. "While I was running I passed two women walking ahead of me, and one girl was bent over choking."

"My whole body felt like lead, extremely heavy," continued Ms. Lettis. "The thing that was painful was my stomach knotting up and my lungs from not getting enough oxygen."

That's the kind of race it was. And the Northeast regional cross country champ wasn't entirely pleased with the event.

"The Nationals should have been held in an environment equal to everyone," she said. "And having it that far west was a disadvantage for the Eastern runners. There were only five runners from here. Most of them came from California, Oregon, or Arizona."

But for the first mile, Charlotte Lettis was in no pain at all — in fact she was leading the pack and another Easterner, Doreen Ennis, was close behind. But that was when the altitude got to both of them. Ms. Ennis dropped all the way back to 36th.

For Charlotte Lettis, it was the first time she ever ran in a pack — she is so accustomed to finishing comfortably ahead of the rest. For her the experience was the greatest because she ran with the best female runners in the country.

Two former U.S. Olympians finished in the top 26, including Francie Larrieu-('72)-the winner of this race, and Kathy Gibbons ('68) who was 12th. Three women who have run an under-three hour marathon (26 miles, 385 yards): Vicki Foltz (7th), Cheryl Bridges (8), and Terry Anderson (25).

Two members of the U.S. national team that went to Russia this summer, Wendy Koenig and Debbie Held (the winner over there who set the indoor track record for the mile) came in 13th and 26th respectively.

If the meet were to be held in the East, under normal conditions, would Charlotte Lettis do any better?

"I have no idea how I would do then," she said, "but I probably wouldn't do that much better."

Marty Kelley

A Boston Massacre

From Perspective--He had a very tired look on his face. Sort of drawn. Sort of disappointed. As he lunched at the Bluewall he didn't want to talk...about IT. But looking back to IT, Dennis Kiernan went out with class. So did Pennington. So did Berra. But class can be a very temporary thing...With Boston College football, it's rather sustaining. But that class doesn't have to be matched on someone's scoreboard. I hope Dennis Kiernan knows that. I just hope.

Sifting through the Daily News, Dennis sipped a slow Screwdriver. He said the drink at this precarious noon hour would ease his pains. And with 14 tackles and five assists with BC, I'm sure he had some. But the pain that Dennis Kiernan and the rest of the Minutemen now endure is not of a physical nature. A whirlpool would take care of that. They say time will cure the emotional unrest rendered Massachusetts football. I say not.

Time will only show how ludicrous the BC-UMass matchup really is. So such in your price Kiernan and Co. Read what happened to the early Christians with those lions. Might as well schedule the next BC game in a Roman arena. The result could be that fatal. At least the Christians had a prayer.

But the Minutemen themselves are not to blame. Expecting MacPherson and his Minutemen to stop Esposito, Bennett and crowd that day was like asking Helen Keller for directions. Don't try it. Individually it's not their fault. Collectively, they suffered. But today it is over. You get Skinner and the boys at the Cage on Saturday. Let's forget the Boston Massacre. But like an event in history it needs proper perspective.

To those who got their asses whailed all over the field on Saturday..forget it. Your world doesn't end on the dark side of the BC scoreboard. At least I hope it doesn't. Mine won't. I can't let it.

What does losing to BC really mean anyway? And what the hell did you really expect? BC paid more money for that football game. Their actors were taller, stronger, quicker, and with what happened a year ago (28-7 humiliation), very much more determined. I bet they even recite the national anthem faster. You just can't stop a locomotive with the sign of the cross. But I'll give the credit where it's due...Dennis Kiernan tried...

Only an electric storm could have stopped it. But it's done. The statistics speak for itself. So does the talent. But of '73 we shouldn't remember what happened at Boston College. Nor should we forget the exploits of Berra and Pennington, lost seniors. The situation created at Boston College was mock reality. It wasn't real. If it were, we'd ask why...and ponder...but instead we'll simply forget...I hope.

There was to be no Boardwalk walk on clouds. There were no speeches. No plaques. No toasts to the Minutemen. But in a way what happened at BC and at Atlantic City, N.J. last year are very much synonymous. Both events were very much in the public eye. Both events are history. Both events involve UMass football. Both events are forgotten.

And that is exactly how the world of sport should be taken.

Sport is people. And at Chestnut Hill on Saturday you saw some that were better than others. So what. What does that prove? What will it ever prove?

Like a theatre company the performance moves to another city. For MacPherson there'll be another season. The world won't cry for the Minutemen. It doesn't have time. And if they want to waste their time feeling sorry for themselves, they can. But don't point to BC. Remember when you failed your intentions with Holy Cross and because of your own inability to cope with emotion on that day, the slow decay began.

And under a darkened steeple overlooking barren BC stadium...it ended.

File A Complaint With The Student Judiciary

By DANA IRLBACHER

Suppose a fellow student tosses garbage out a dorm window, hitting you (a passerby) squarely on the head with it.

What to do?

You could forget the incident, knock the kid's teeth out, call the police, or .... file a complaint with the University Student Judiciary.

According to Jim Pappas, Student Attorney General, you best recourse might be the last. Yet, in any situation, due to a general unawareness of how the student court system works, said Pappas, many campus members, students and staff, ignore the Judiciary's power.

Legally the court can penalize convicted students in various ways -- by sending a "letter of censure" (described by one judicial advocate as a "slap on the wrist"), fixing reasonable fees, conducting a form of probation, and recommending suspension or expulsion. These latter two sanctions have never been used, and could only be done so under guidelines of the Student Government Association (SGA).

Written records and-or tape recordings are kept of each court hearing. These records remain intact and strictly confidential to the Attorney General's Office. Then when four years pass, or all student parties to a hearing receive their UMass degree, the records and tapes are destroyed.

The attitude of the court, particularly this semester, Pappas said, "is not inclined towards undue punishment." Cruel and unusual penalties are forbidden by the Judicial Policy Act in the SGA Constitution of June, 1973.

Under the Act, undergraduates, the administration, Heads of Residences, add UMass staff members may bring action against any undergraduates. Pappas pointed out that students could petition the court to issue an injunction against the Student Senate, area governments or any RSO group.

Unlike court hearings out of Perry Mason TV repeats, Pappas said this semester's unviersity student court has no "your honor" type of atmosphere. The court is into its fourth operating year now, but Pappas described the last two years as "grossly ineffective", and "a farce." Earlier this year the court disbanded until Fall semester due to what Pappas saw as several reasons.

One reason given was the lack of training received by the student judges and advocates (lawyers). This semester, the Attorney General said, judges are not selected or trained as "legal scholars". Candidates for the 19 available judge seats are asked to freely admit their biases and do not need any legal background or knowledge.

Advocates, positions any student may hold, are taught along with judges the basic legal principles.

To aid in their training, both advocates and judges were given opportunities to participate in "mock trials" earlier this semester. As in the normal court proceedings, two advocates assigned to cover defense, and two for prosecution, would present evidence and arguments. Three judges would hear the case, determine the decision and describe the penalty, if given. If a petitioned appeal was granted, another trial before three different judges would occur.

Pappas, once an advocate, said that shoplifting cases "swamping" the court last year helped to cause its demise. The judges and advocates, he said, having to handle 50-60 shoplifting hearings, would, after a while become frustrated with their similarity. Such cases are now mostly handled out of court.

In a proposal now under consideration, shoplifting fines collected by the court would be placed in an RSO account. Pappas said the funds would then be transferred to an account in the Financial Aid Office. The Office would use the money as it wishes. In the case of shoplifting, the University Store would be reimbursed for the exact amount of goods damaged and no more.

The Judicial Policy Act provides for recognized lower courts to exist, such as area or dorm judiciaries. pappas said that no Area court systems are in operation, but some dorms do have judiciaries.

Dorm court systems are seen by the Attorney General as "ineffective" due to burdens placed on the Heads of Residences overseeing the proceedings. One of the 25-30 advocates this semester, Craig Mignone, described dorm hearings as "next-door-neighbor" trials. A danger exists, he said, of friends or enemies hearing a particular student's case.

Another advocate, Tony Battista, agreed with Pappas and Mignone that students "get a fairer deal" in the university student court.

The main "problem" existing with the University Judiciary now, said Pappas, is the "lack of cases" coming in.

"This court is not being used to full advantage," he said, "and it should be."

Luce Stresses Vietnamese Suppression

By RICHARD MEEKINS

"We, as Americans, have become apathetic. And because of that attitude, as many as 200,000 Vietnamese will die in the next two years", said Don Luce, discoverer of "tiger cages" on a South Vietnamese island last night in a speech to about 150 people.

Luce spent 15 years in Vietnam, first serving as a volunteer with the International Voluntary Service (IVS). He went to Vietnam with pro-Saigon views but upon discovering the "cages", he became radically anti-Thieu.

"Continued American support of the Saigon government will lead to continued suppression of the Vietnamese people", Luce said.

"There are as many as 200,000 political prisoners in South Vietnam. Most of them are not even members of the Peoples Revolutionary Government but people opposed to the Saigon government," he said.

Luce, an agriculturalist and muckracker journalist, was one of the few Americans in Vietnam who could speak Vietnamese fluently. He recently spent time touring North Vietnam and the P R G zone in South Vietnam.

"Since the Paris Peace Treaty 50,000 Vietnamese soldiers have died and the number of civilian deaths is not known."

He said that the killing stems from Thieu Government's attempts to sieze P R G land. Since the end of the war the P.R.G. has lost five per cent of its land.

"Prisoners during the Vietnam War were taken to prison camps and placed in "tiger cages". Many of the "cages" were not even large enough for a man to stand up in. Many prisoners became paralyzed as a result of this," said Luce. These types of persons still exist today as a result of American money which supports them, according to Luce.

"The biggest disease in the PRG zone is mines. Another large problem is defoliation due to bombings. Also, there are concurrent genetic problems as well," said Luce.

Asked what would happen if U.S. aid to the Saigon government ceased, Luce replied that there would be a three-part coalition government consisting of elements from the PRG, Saigon and neutralists.

"The most effective way of making Americans aware of what is happening in South Vietnam is through the fuel crisis. Americans are not aware that hugh amounts of American fuel is supplied to the South Vietnamese government for military purposes," said Luce.

When asked who to contact on this issue, Luce replied: "The most effective man in Congress is Rep. Paul Conte of Massachusetts who is Chairman of the Congressional Fuel Appropriations Committee."

Walgren Sues Amherst For Intersession Elections

By MIKE ALLAIN

Eric Walgren has released a statement expressing his confidence that "the Federal Court will compel the town of Amherst to follow truly open-process, democratic election procedures" when his current court suit with the town is resolved.

Walgren's statement comes after a November 9 pretrial conference at First District Court in Boston when, U. S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, Jr., acknowledge and filed expansions of the original suit.

Walgren is sueing the town for holding last January's primary during intersession when Hampshire and Amherst Colleges and UMass were not in regular session, and about 30% of registered voters were not in town.

Walgren was running for the selectman seat won by incumbent Merle Howes. Howes received about 1,000 votes compared to Walgren's 200.

The revised suit now states that the current Caucus Act which the town operated under in last January's primary fails to provide broad public notice of the deadline for filing nomination papers.

The revision also stipulates that the Caucus Act fails to provide sufficient public notice of "time and place" for voting in the primary election.

Garrity also acknowledged another amendment requested by Walgren, who is representing himself along with co-counsel Richard Whittier, that will make the January primary "unlawful and null" if Walgren wins the suit.

If Walgren wins, the court will issue a permanent injunction restraining the town from holding the 1974 elections without establishing dates that "permit and encourage" the student and faculty vote, according to the expanded suit.

"What I want is complete election reform", says Walgren, "and I won't settle for anything but."

Walgren termed the new election date schedule, recently announced by Selectmen, as "a piece of shit," and has drawn up an alternate proposal which will be discussed at an open conference at 4:15 p.m. on Thursday in Town Hall.

The Selectmen's schedule calls for a primary election February 12, "which is less than two weeks after the university resumes classes," says Walgren.

This does not provide enough time for the candidates to campaign in front of the students, nor is it sufficient time to register the voters, he says.

Besides complete election reform, Walgren is also seeking an invalidation of the January primary and a re-election in place of it.

Garrity suggested the possibility of an out-of-court settlement at the pre-trial conference, but Walgren refused.

"Which such a trade-off, the town would never agree to complete election reform," says Walgren. "So we're going to trial."

Walgren released an election reform proposal of the Tea Party, a radical Amherst political group, at Monday night's meeting of the Selectmen.

The plan includes neighborhood voting registration, "clear and broad public notice" of elections, equal campaign spending, polling places located at the demographic center of the precinct, revised election dates, and the "one-resident, one-vote" reapportionment.

The "one-resident, one-vote" plan would in effect give parents more "enfranchisement", Walgren says, because "the more children they have, the more power they would have."

Garrity announced that the trial will be held on either Dec. 26, 27, and 28 or Jan. 2, 3, and 4. Walgren will choose one of these sets of dates as he pleases.

Walgren's statement:

"Garrity took a number of steps at the pre-trial conference that make me confident that the federal court will compel the town of Amherst to follow truely open-process, democratic election procedures.

1. He was receptive to expanding the scope of the case to include bad public notice to voters of the election date and location of polling places.

2. He set a definite date and allotted three days for trial on whether last year's election should be overturned and reheld.

3. He directed the town's lawyers to concede all undisputed facts contrary to the tight-assed, meager stipulations the town has made to date.

4. He urged the town to settle out of court on a procedure for setting election dates so as to enfranchise students in the future in accordance with the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals.

Finnish Exchange Student Marvels At UMass Life

By ROBERTA MARTONE

"The American life style is different from the Finnish in every sense," said Hilkka Lukka, a Finnish exchange student from the University of Helsinki. Ms. Lukka is doing graduate studies in the UMass English department, and will remain in the United States throughout the summer.

In an MDC interview, Ms. Lukka explained the differences of campus life between Finland and the U.S. "The University of Helsinki has more students than UMass., but you would never believe it because it's so spread out," she said.

Ms. Lukka said only about 10 per cent of the students live in dorms, while the majority live "off campus" in large houses.

Ms. Lukka, who lives in Prince House in Southwest, says it is alot noisier than the dorms in Finland. But, she said, people seem more friendly in the United States. "At the University of Helsinki, I would probably know my next-door-neighbor, but never the whole floor!"

The informal atmosphere of the classrooms at UMass was a big surprise to Ms. Lukka. "In Finland, we have mostly large, formal lectures, and we never talk to the teachers," she said.

In the Finnish school system, there is a hierarchy of professors. Ms. Lukka said, at each university there are usually only two teachers with the title of "professor", and two assistant professors. The rest of the teachers are known as "lecturers".

A student at the University of Helsinki must have one major and two minors. "80 to 90 per cent of the students study English as a foreign language," said Ms. Lukka.

The high cost of tuition at UMass was a surprise to Ms. Lukka. In Finland, tuition is approximately $40.00, and room and board is $600.00, for the entire year. "Everyone must be wealthier here because I see so many cars. At home, only one of my friends has a car," said Ms. Lukka.

She added also that the food in America is very expensive. "I live on hamburgers here."

In Finland, the students take care of certain affairs at the university, but the university is run largely by the professors. According to Ms. Lukka, the Student Union is both a local and national organization. Each university has their own Student Union, but the various Student unions of the six universities in Finland form an organization also.

The Student Union is responsible for the construction of dorms, dorm libraries, and a special student travel agency. Funds for the Student Union activities are taken from the regular fees paid by the students, Ms. Lukka explained.

At the University of Finland, students conduct their own houses for entertainment, such as, student theaters, films, or clubs.

"The students at the University of Helsinki are more politically active than here. There is a movement towards socialism, but it changes all the time," Ms. Lukka explained. Ms. Lukka also said she was amazed at how people "feel things here", citing the Middle East crisis as an example.

When asked if the Women's Movement was active in Finland, Ms. Lukka said, "I don't think we need it, because we are already liberated. You don't really hear much about it."

According to Ms. Lukka, the women in Finland are very independent. Most married women work because they want to although some work because they have to.

Ms. Lukka is the first Finnish exchange student to attend UMass. The exchange was made possible through the International Club.

The actual Finnish Club was formed in 1969 by Nancy Stark Hamrahan, now a graduate student at UMass. During 1969, the Finnish Club promoted a few non-credit Finnish Studies courses. These courses were in the form of honors colloquias at Orchard Hill, and concerned mainly the Finnish language. Due to lack of funds, the courses were discontinued for several semesters. As of this semester, the courses have been re-established and expanded.

According tp Paul Saagpakk, an English professor at UMass, and advisor to the Finnish Club, next semester a three credit course on the Finnish Language will be taught by Ms. Lukka.

"Our dream is that, through these courses, American students will learn something of the Finnish culture and language," said David Stark, another member of the Finnish Club. There is also an opportunity for U.S. students to study in Finland, through the exchange program.

The Finnish Club will be celebrating Finnish Independence Day, December 6, 1973 on campus. Saagpakk said the main purpose of the celebration is to create interest in the Finnish Club. Events will include speeches and films on Finland. The place for the celebration has not been determined.

Black Science: "A Necessary Society"

By CHILLY WILLIAMS

Dr. Saundra Oyewole, a microbiologist from Washington, D.C. spoke before a meeting of the Black Science Society last week. Dr. Oyewole received her B.S. from Howard University, her M.S. from the University of Chicago, and a Ph.D. from UMass.

Dr. Oyewole said the Black Science Society is, "a very necessary organization that should be used both by science and non-science majors." She said the Society can provide the necessary information for those interested in the different fields of science.

Dr. Oyewole also said that schools must improve upon the primary and secondary levels if the third world people are to survive as a nation. Third world people, she said, must also reach out to those who are interested in science but don't have the proper training. She said the third world must make sure they do get the right training by supporting different programs. A tutoring program should also be available to those who need it.

A question and answer period followed her speech, involving an exchange of ideas as to what the Black Scientists of tomorrow should do.

One brother, Keith Woodeard informed the meeting about the "Society of Scientists and Technologists for African Development". Mr. Woodard said "the sixth Pan African Congress has outlined six areas of focus". They are agriculture, health and nutrition, research in science and technology, communication, political cooperation, and support for the Liberation Movements in Africa.

Dr. Oyewole applauded Mr. Woodard for bringing this up, and said it a known fact that there's an abundance of scientists in the Western World, but not enough in the Third World. She also said, "You will be more than welcome if you are a third world scientist who wants to help the underdeveloped and developing third world countries".

Just before the meeting adjourned the Black Science Society thanked the beautiful sister for speaking before them. All in all, it was a very interesting meeting that was well attended and very educational.

MED SCHOOL ADMISSION PROBLEMS?

EuroMed may offer RX via overseas training

For the session starting Fall, 1974, Euromed will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning.

Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderate difficulty in succeeding at a foreign school, the Euromed program also includes an intensive 12 week medical and conversational language course, mandatory for all students. Five hours daily, 5 days per week (12-16 weeks) the course is given in the country where the student will attend medical school.

In addition, Euromed provides students with a 12 week intensive cultural orientation program, with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are eligible to participate in the Euromed program.

The Student Union Gets A Facelift

By FRITS GEURTSEN

"The Student Union building strikes me as an example of early Fascist architecture. The lounges now look like they were furnished with Salvation Army furniture," said Dr. Arnold Friedmann of the design department.

Apparently quite a few people agree with him because the Union will be revamped during the next three years to make it "warmer and less institutional."

Friedmann, a member of the committee to renovate the building, (Student Union Task Force) described the full extent of the redesigning project.

"What we are trying to accomplish is to bring the facilities of the Student Union (SU) up to par with those of the newer Campus Center (CC). We feel that the present building doesn't even begin to meet the needs and wants of students."

"The plans include a retail area with assorted shops, color-coordination of the entire building, and the optimal use of all available space. Eventually it's all meant to be one complex but right now there's very little that links the two buildings," he continued.

The Task Force, which has been the driving force behind renovation all along, is comprised of students, CC-SU Governing Board Members, CC administration, and Dr. Friedmann.

Professional Design Firm

Realizing the project was beyond their capabilities, the Task Force contracted a professional design firm. Bill Worden, secretary-treasurer of the CC Governing Board and a member of the Task Force, said "We interviewed five different firms and finally chose Ferguson and Sorentino of New York City because their ideas seemed closest to our own interest and because we got the feeling that they were genuinely interested in who was using the building and for what purposes. The contract with them will be signed in January."

When asked about the firm, Friedmann said he was familiar with their work and had confidence that student's interest would be respected. "They're a relatively young firm attuned to students and interested in working with students on the project," he said.

The firm describes itself as "thoroughly experienced in all disciplines: architectural; space planning; interior, industrial, and graphics design."

History of the Project

Last summer Friedmann, one undergraduate and twelve graduate students in a Design Seminar focused on the problem of the Union's condition. The students represented the departments of Design, Art, and Landscape Architecture. After three weeks of intensive examination of the facilities, they issued a short paper containing numerous suggestions as to what could and should be done about the Union.

Friedmann said "Our purpose was to come up with a conceptual idea with student input. What we did was done purely from the viewpoint of design and not governed by budget."

According to Worden, when the Task Force was established, the suggestions were submitted to them. All expenditures for renovation by organizations in the building were immediately frozen so that work wouldn't be duplicated.

Finances

Worden estimated that the project "in the long run would cost perhaps a million dollars." The CC Governing Board, however, has only $200,000 in its annual capital outlay budget.

When asked where the rest of the money would come from, Worden answered "From the general budget. That's made up of the Campus Center's income plus student fees. We get as much as we can from the CC income and then the students pay the difference."

The designers will be paid by the hour. Since there will be students working with them either for pay or credit the costs will be somewhat lower than they would be otherwise, said Worden.

The Three Stages

The porject has been divided into three stages. Each is scheduled to take roughly a year to complete. All plans and times are tentative and subject to change.

Stage 1 — will be primarily concerned with the lobby and retail areas. According to the Design Seminar the main problem in the lobby is the daily traffic congestion. This will be changed by widening the access to it and increasing the number of entrances to the Union. Color-coded directories will be strategically placed to help people find their way more easily.

The most novel idea in the plan is the establishing of a retail area in the mezzanine. Students would be provided with services that they either have to go downtown for now or don't have at all.

This includes: a package store, a Health Food store, a bank, a hairdresser, a CVs store, and a stereo shop. These shops will be run by outside interests. The rents collected should lower the CC fee, which is among the highest in the country.

Another aspect of the first stage considered essential by all concerned is the opening of a new interconnect between the two buildings. The present setup is called "drab, narrow, and scarcely adequate."

Friedmann said another area that deserved top priority was the lounges. The plan call for more of them, and for the present ones to be remodeled so that they aren't so large and impersonal.

The Hatch area is due for complete renovation. The present ventilation is poor, the food lines are badly-planned, and the place has absolutely no atmosphere, the Seminar paper stated.

Stage II — will concern itself primarily with the office areas in the Union. The offices, now temporary, are characterized by the poor additive remodeling phases of past years. The corridors leading up to them are dismal and poorly-lit. The space will be remodeled to allow flexibility in the coming years as different groups use it. For example, the Collegian offices will move to the back of the building.

The art gallery now on the first floor will move to the Fine Arts building when it is complete. The walls of the SU and in particular the Ballroom will continue to be used for display of exhibits.

The dining rooms, cafeteria, and kitchen will remain unless it is determined that they are no longer serving their purposes.

Stage III — will involve the Ballroom and the exterior of the SU. The plan calls for the Ballroom to become a truly multipurpose room, to be used for movies, concerts, conferences, etc. A shopping mall will be set up here to take some of the load off of the Campus Center lobby. Friedmann's group suggested that a balconey be constructed in the ballroom, but that doesn't appear in the design firm's plans.

People involved in the renovation planning said the open spaces outside the two buildings should remain but that more shrubbery should be planted and sculpture placed in various spots. The exterior of the Union was also due for a facelift, but the extent of this was not yet decided.

The entire building at the end of the three year period will be color-coordinated. Air conditioning and other such facilities will also be brought up to par.

"Not Another Breuer"

One of the greatest concerns of the Task Force was that mistakes made with the planning and building of the CC don't reoccur.

Bill Worden said "We made sure that the design firm didn't get a blank check like the University gave to Marcel Breuer when he was contracted to design the Campus Center building. We've learned our lesson. He originally estimated that it would cost seven to eight million dollars. The final cost was 21 million. We can't afford to make mistakes like that again."

Friedmann said "Breuer's not too popular around this campus but in all fairness it must be realized that he was given a somewhat impossible task. It's not intirely his fault. The Trustees and others decided what the building should consist of and he had to take it from there."

According to all concerned, many mistakes will be avoided because student input is finally starting to be taken into account.

First Tape Heard In Public

Committee Probes Secretary's Credibility

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the famed White House tapes was played in public for the first time yesterday but the only question it settled is that there is indeed a humdinger of a hum.

It lasted, as the White House said, 18 minutes and 15 seconds.

To straining ears in U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica's crowded courtroom, it sounded like electric clippers in a barber shop. Here and there, before and after the hum, the voices of President Nixon and aides John D. Ehrlichman and H. R. Haldeman could be heard in snatches of conversation.

"What the hell does that show you" a voice like the President's said once. "I'd like a little of that consomme today." The President again.

There was some whistling — tune and whistler unidentified.

Then the long buzz, loud at first, then a little lower and then loud again.

The tape, of a meeting in Nixon's Executive Office Building suite on June 20, 1972 — involving first Ehrlichman and then Haldeman — was played as the President's secretary, Rose Mary Woods, was on the stand.

It was the 10th day of a hearing that began as an inquiry into two subpoenaed Watergate tapes the White House said were nonexistent. It changed in character after the White House disclosure last week that the Haldeman conversation was missing the 18-minute segment.

Special Watergate prosecution force lawyers say that the part obliterated was conversation about the Watergate break-in that occurred only three days before the conversation was recorded.

While the tapes hearing was in progress, the Senate Watergate committee acknowledged major investigations weren't going well and postponed further hearings until at least January.

Committee senators attributed the delay to witnesses who have ignored committee subpoenas, as staff admission that it wasn't ready to proceed and White House refusal to turn over some documents.

The possibility was left open by the senators that panel would go out of existence next year without further public hearings.

Meanwhile, the White House pictured Nixon as being undecided about making some of his income tax returns public. Sen. J. Bennett Johnston Jr., D-La., said Nixon promised him and five other senators Monday night that he would open some of his tax returns to public review.

A White House spokesman said yesterday the President will make available complete information about his personal finances but would not say if release of tax forms would be part of this disclosure.

Miss Woods testified she was listening on the June 20 tape for signs of Ehrlichman leaving Nixon's office — and that the Haldeman conversation had already stated — when her telephone rang. As she reached for the phone — to the left and behind her — she said she accidentally pushed the record button. At the same time, she said, her foot must have been on the foot switch that starts the tape machine.

After the telephone conversation, she said, she noticed the record button down, listened to the tape and discovered the hum. Then, she said, she told the President who said not to worry because only the Ehrlichman conversation tape was under subpoena. This was an erroneous impression according to prosecutors.

On Nov. 14, as the National Security Agency was making copies of that tape for the judge, the 18-minute gap was discovered. Miss Woods said the President told her of the length of obliterated conversation.

"I couldn't believe there could be something like that unless there was a malfunction in the tape," the red-haired Miss Woods said. "I told him Nixon I didn't think that in any way my hitting the record button could cause that long a gap...I think I would have remembered that long a telephone conversation."

That left at least 13 minutes of obliterated conversation unexplained. Experts will assist Sirica in determining the cause.

The White House claims the entire erasure was caused by the pushed record button, "possibly while the recorder was in the proximity of an electric typewriter and a high intensity lamp."

The typewriter and lamp will be brought to court and tested.

What was heard in court yesterday was 38 minutes of a copy of a copy of the original tape.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27 — ANOTHER DAY IN COURT — Rose Mary Woods, President Nixon's personal secretary, is flanked by attorneys Charles H. Rhyne, left, and William H. Rhyne, father and son, as she arrives at U.S. District Court Tuesday for another appearance regarding the presidential tapes. Monday she testified that she thinks she accidently pushed the wrong button on a recorder that obliterated an 18-minute period on a tape of a June 20, 1972, meeting between President Nixon and H. R. Haldeman.

Senate OK's Ford; House Approval Expected

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate overwhelmingly approved Rep. Gerald R. Ford yesterday as the nation's 40th vice president.

House approval, expected next week, would complete congressional confirmation as required by the 25th Amendment, ratified in 1967.

The vote was 92 to 3 in favor of the Michigan Republican. All the opponents were Democrats.

The Senate vote had been scheduled just less than seven weeks after Spiro T. Agnew resigned the nation's second highest office and pleaded no contest to a single count of income tax evasion.

Two days later, President Nixon chose Ford, a 25-year-House veteran who has been the House Republican leader since 1965.

In what members said was probably the most searching scrutiny of any presidential nominee in history, Senate and House committees sent hundreds of investigators looking into Ford's background and studied 2,000 pages of raw FBI files.

Ford spent six days before Senate and House panels, answering detailed questions about his financial dealings, handling of campaign funds and philosophy, winning congressional praise for openness and candor.

Members of both the Senate and House stressed that the proceedings were especially important because of the start of preliminary impeachment proceedings in the House against Nixon.

Ford, 60, was strongly pushed for the nomination by his House Republican colleagues. A number of Democrats are likely to vote against him, however, because of his conservative voting record and some allegations he is unsuited for the vice presidency or presidency.

The House Judiciary Committee, which wound up its hearings Monday, is expected to vote on the nomination Thursday. Action by the full House is scheduled before Dec. 6.

Vice President-designate Gerald Ford said yesterday that he sometimes differs with President Nixon but will work side-by-side with the President in trying to solve the nation's problems.

"If I have any merit," Ford said, "it is that I can sit down with people I disagree with, perhaps philosophically, and work out answers."

Ford told a convention of the Seafarers International Union that his job as vice president will be to work with the Democratic Congress and "to give an input at the White House from some 25 years of basic experience" in Congress.

Ford spoke in both nautical and sports terms in describing his expected relationship with the President, noting that "you don't tackle your own quarterback" and that the "mate doesn't undercut the captain."

Ford said the country has weathered 200 years of often-stormy weather and said it currently has "a fine skipper" with a good record.

"And I think he'll have a good record for the next three years," said Ford, whose nomination was expected to win approval in the Senate later today. The House is expected to approve the nomination next week.

House Majority Leader Thomas "Tip" O'Neill followed Ford to the platform and said that, while he agreed with Ford that the "ship of state was on storm-tossed seas," he disagreed "as far as the skipper is concerned."

However, O'Neill said he thought Ford was an excellent choice for vice president.

President Nixon spoke to the Seafarers on Monday.

Gas Supplies Could Be Reduced 30% Strict Regulation Will Be Necessary

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government tapped civilian and domestic supplies yesterday to assure adequate fuel for the Defense Department, and sources said consumer gasoline supplies may soon be reduced by up to 30 per cent.

The cutback would be twice that announced by President Nixon Sunday night.

President Nixon's Emergency Energy Action Group, which met yesterday was reportedly considering rationing gasoline, imposing a supplemental tax of 30 to 40 cents, or both.

Meanwhile, Nixon signed a bill requiring him to carry out mandatory allocation of all petroleum products within 30 days. The law, governing allotments to distributors, is designed to assure adequate supplies of fuel for all sections of the country.

The White House also proposed regulation yesterday that would require home owners who use oil for heat to lower their thermostats six degrees below last year's settings.

Announcing the heating oil action in the Federal Register, the White House said the regulations would be revised after public comment and would go into operation Dec. 27. But they do not provide enforcement mechanism, and the penalty for failing to cooperate would be running out of fuel.

In its first use of the 23-year-old Defense Production Act, the government commandeered 825.9 million gallons of gasoline and other fuels from 22 major oil companies, ordering delivery by Jan. 16. The Pentagon estimates the fuel is sufficient for about one month.

The Interior Department is assigning the quotas, based on the Defense Department's estimates of requirements, and placed the biggest levy on Shell Oil Co., which must come up with 108.1 million gallons.

By invoking the Production Act, the Defense Department authorizes oil companies to break delivery contracts with civilian customers.

The Pentagon said the Arab oil embargo had cut off about 300,000 barrels of oil each day that would normally reach the Defense Department.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger indicated in a briefing with Nixon and 22 senators and House members that the embargo is unlikely to end until progress emerges from Middle East peace talks, which he said he hopes will be under way Dec. 18.

Among actions being considered to help control the use of gasoline, in the face of the shortage, is a mandatory cutback.

"We're looking for gasoline cuts of about 30 per cent" over the next several months, an administration source said.

One proposal reportedly advanced by the Treasury Department would impose a gasoline tax of 30 to 40 cents, in addition to the present levy of 4 cents. It could be coupled with a weekly allowance of 10 to 15 gallons of gasoline, free of the added tax.

At a Senate finance subcommittee hearing, White House energy adviser John A. Love testified that he favors a free market regarding petroleum prices, but opposes immediate decontrol.

One more designed to cut down the need for fuel - year-around Daylight Saving Time - was approved by a vote of 311 to 88 in the House. The White House has said electricity and heating demands can be cut by as much as three per cent by pushing the clocks ahead one hour, but House members were cautious about predicting potential savings.

In other energy-related developments:

-The White House issued final regulations prohibiting electric power plants that burn coal from switching to oil. The rules permit plants burning natural gas, a fuel in critically short supply, to switch to oil.

-The Office of Petroleum Allocation ordered priorities on the sale of fuel for marine use, giving preference to boats and land facilities involved in harvesting and processing fish and other seafood. Pleasure vessels, including those operated commercially, may buy marine fuels only if adequate supplies are on hand after commercial fishing boats and seafood processors have bought their supplies.

-House Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers, D-W. Va., said he hopes to finish work on emergency energy legislation by the end of the week.

-Rep. Chet Holifield, D-Calif., chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, said he will speed consideration of an administration-backed bill creating an agency to consolidate research efforts and administer a five-year, $10-billion research program proposed by President Nixon.

Alternate Energy, Heating Methods Can Increase Personal Danger

By DUDLEY LEHEW
Associated Press Writer

That spare gallon can of gasoline you've stored in anticipation of an emergency is a "liquid bomb" equal to 14 sticks of dynamite.

Those charcoal briquettes can keep you warm - but they also can take your life. So can that antique stove you've dusted off and set up.

With the reported increases in gasoline hoarding, and as people try alternative energy and heating methods, the possibility of personal danger has soared, experts say.

"We expect a great increase in fire deaths this winter because of this," said Richard Peacock, director of public affairs for the national Fire Protection Association in Boston, "There have been deaths already."

"We expect that more people will die trying to keep warm than every before," he said. The most immediate potential hazard concerns motorists who have been reported flocking to gasoline stations for spare cans of gasoline since President Nixon announced energy-saving steps.

"The explosive power of one gallon of gasoline is approximately that of 14 sticks of dynamite," said Phil Dykstra, manager of the National Safety Council's home department in Chicago.

Peacock agrees: "If you put it in your car and someone hits you, there's just one hell of an explosion. You're really carrying around a liquid bomb."

"Any kind of an impact from a car, even from a sharp tool in the trunk, can puncture these cans," he said. "Gasoline vapors come out of gasoline cans, even at cold temperatures. It's not the gasoline that explodes, it's the vapors."

"Any smell of gasoline in a storage room or an automobile trunk is good evidence that there's a vapor leak in the container," Peacock said.

"Never store it in a room with hot water heating equipment. You set off an explosion with accumulated vapors."

Many states forbid storage of gasoline.

Officials also are concerned over potential dangers involved in increased usage of fireplaces and substitute methods of heating. Many people have been buying wood and coal-burning stoves. Some dealers have reported a run on charcoal briquettes.

"Cast iron stoves are particularly dangerous," Peacock said. "They get hot and people don't know how to adjust the flues and gases collect in the fules and they blow up. The way to install one of those stoves is to get advice from an expert."

"Ventilate the house enough to get a good supply of fresh air if you're going to use a charcoal burner or a hibachi," he said. "It can cause death by asphyxiation."

He said his office had received a report on the recent death of a family of six, caused by improper use of briquettes. "They had a brazier in their living room. They never woke up."

"Briquettes in themselves are not dangerous, no more dangerous than burning wood or coal, or any other type fuel, if you have proper ventilation and proper equipment to burn them in," said Dykstra.

"One of the things we are worried about is that people will begin to use inadequate heating equipment."

Both Dykstra and Peacock said electrical systems of oilheated homes might not be able to handle the burden of added supplementary electric heaters. They also said some electric heaters can present dangers if accidentally tipped over or if left on too long near combustible material.

"Briquettes in a fireplace are okay, if the vent or the flues are open. The same situation exists for gas heaters, which still present the same hazard as briquettes. As long as it's a combustible energy, it's a potential hazard," Dykstra said. "It gives off carbon monoxide."

But fireplace chimneys also can be unsafe, according to Eugene F. O'Connell of Stamford, Conn., who builds, repairs and cleans them. "If a chimney is used five or six times a week, it should be cleaned once a year. If it has been used only once or twice a week, it should need cleaning every three or four years."

A potential hazard exists if the fireplace user burns soft woods, which O'Connell says give off tars and resins which cling to the walls. The sap can be absorbed into the masonry and it is combustible.

"We recommend hard woods because they have less resins and pitch that cling to the inside of the fireplace," said Dykstra. "We recommend that those who have fireplaces either have their chimneys, before they really start to use it for the winter season, professionally checked or at the very least check it out themselves."

"We also recommend that fireplace owners have a good approved all-pupose fire extinguisher."

Hijacked Dutch Jet Returns To Dubai

DUBAI (AP) — A commandeered Dutch jumbo jet returned to Dubai Tuesday night and officials offered the three Palestinian hijackers safe conduct if the others aboard were freed, an airline spokesman said.

The Boeing 747 took off from Dubai earlier Tuesday and flew around the Mideast for hours in search of a place to land before returning to the tiny Persian Gulf sheikdom.

The terrorist-commanded jet had been shunned by at least seven countries as it meandered around the Mideast since being taken over Sunday night in an effort to win freedom for imprisoned Palestinians on Cyprus and as a protest against alleged Dutch support of Israel.

The jetliner already had logged 4,600 miles under hijack command when it left Dubai with a crew of 10 and and official of the Dutch airline KLM aboard. The plane headed for the South Yemen capital of Aden, where authorities said the airstrip was not big enough for the giant plane.

The Aden authorities said they told the pilot the plane could land to refuel in an emergency, but that the hijackers would have to accept responsibility for any accident.

The plane circled the Aden airport for two hours and 10 minutes and then left, the authorities said.

A KLM spokesman in Amsterdam reported the Dubai safe conduct proposal. An airline spokesman said earlier Aden had refused a guarantee of safe conduct out of the country.

Official sources in the Turkish capital of Ankara said the jetliner had asked permission to land at Istanbul, Turkey, during the Dubai-to-Dubai flight.

The second stop in Dubai made six landings for the hijacked jet an apparent record. An Argentine airliner hijacked last July 4 touched down five times while under air pirates' orders.

Passengers and stewardesses from the hijacked Dutch airliner arrived Tuesday night in Amsterdam.

At Malta, the stop before Dubai, the hijackers had allowed 244 passengers and eight hostesses to leave the plane. An extra pilot was taken aboard to join the nine-man crew and A.W. Witholt, a vice president of KLM who remained aboard the plane as hostage.

En route to Dubai the plane flew over Cyprus and the Arab states of Lebanon, Syria and Iraq. Those Arab countries, as well as Egypt, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Bahrain, refused to grant permission for landing in apparent disapproval of such terrorist tactics.

The gunmen seized the $37 million plane Sunday night on a flight from Beirut to Tokyo to protest alleged pro-Israeli policies of the Netherlands and to bargain for release of comrades imprisoned in Cyprus.

They said they and their jailed friends belonged to a little-known guerrilla group called the Arab Youth Organization for the Liberation of Palestine.

The hijackers were reported armed with plastic explosives, had grenades and a pistol.

The released passengers left Malta Tuesday night aboard a plane sent to pick them up.

One passenger, H.N. Hassan of Sudan, said he and his fellow passengers remained calm throughout their 32-hour ordeal.

House Votes Daylight Saving

WASHINGTON (AP)-The House today voted to put the nation on year-round Daylight Saving Time.

The bill approved by a vote of 311 to 88 is one of several pieces of legislation President Nixon has said he needs to deal with the energy crisis.

Year-round DST could reduce electricity and heating demands by as much as three per cent, according to the White House.

Arabs Lift Oil Restrictions Against Japan, Common Market

By ELIAS ANTAR
Associated Press Writer

ALGIERS (AP) - Arab foreign ministers approved a Saudi Arabia proposal that oil restrictions against Japan and all European Common Market countries except the Netherlands be lifted, reliable sources reported here yesterday.

The sources said the foreign ministers approved the proposal at a meeting in Algiers before a summit conference of Arab leaders convened on Monday.

The summit conference is to act on the ministers' resolutions.

The proposal by Saudi Arabia, the Mideast's largest oil producer, apparently did not include any change in the Arab embargo of oil for the United States. The Netherlands also is under a total embargo.

The Saudi proposal seeks to reward Europe and Japan for recent declarations indicating a tilt in policy more favorable to the Arabs, the sources said.

The Netherlands was not included in the proposed shift because the Arabs consider the Dutch government to be committed to Israel, the sources said.

FAISAL AT CONFERENCE — King Faisal of Saudi Arabia, left, flanked by Saudi Arabian Deputy Premier Ibn Fahd, attends the opening session of the Arab summit conference in Algiers.

The summit conference in Algiers sought on Tuesday to reconcile rival Jordanian and guerrilla claims to the allegiance of the Palestinian people - an explosive issue the leaders feel must be resolved before any peace conference with Israel.

Kings and presidents from 16 countries met in a closed summit session to hear reports from Presidents Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Hafaz Assad of Syria, the two chief Arab combatants in last month's Middle East war.

The reports were understood to have covered the conduct of the fighting.

Tuesday's main summit business, however, was the silent struggle between Jordan's King Hussein and the Palestinian guerrilla leadership under Yasir Arafat.

"What's The Story?"

Meal Tickets, And Other Rip-Offs

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN

Question: I would like to know why the University deems it necessary to put a mandatory status on meal tickets and for that matter, restrictions on the housing (on campus living for underclassmen, unmarrieds, and those under 21). What's the rationale behind these rules?

Answer: We've all heard stories about people who return to visit UMass after being away for many years, and remark in astonishment how much this place has changed. Well, if their memory dates back to around 1953 they can remember when Draper Hall, Greenough, and Butterfield were all buildings that served as dorms and dining commons in one. But then the University started to get larger. The Board of Trustees felt that because Amherst was such a small town, located way out in the western part of the state, they had an obligation to house and feed the great number of students that were now coming to UMass. So to more efficiently serve the students, large dorms and dining commons were built. And with the construction of these buildings came the responsibility to pay for them. The Board of Trustees further feels that there is not enough electricity for a large amount of in-dorm cooking, not enough places to eat off-campus, and not enough stores to buy food from to allow for students not to have meal tickets. These facts, according to Joel Stoneham, Director of University Food Services, are the rationale behind the rules.

Question: In light of the 18-20 year old's new found adulthood, and the fact that a person 21 years or older doesn't have to buy a meal ticket; will we (18-20 year olds) be forced to purchase a meal ticket for Spring semester 1974?

Answer: In last week's column I answered this same type of question regarding the effect lowering the age of majority will have on the Housing Office requirement of students to live on campus until they are 21 (or meet other standards for exemptions). The answer for the housing requirement is the same as the answer for the meal ticket...yes, you will still have to purchase one, even if you are over 18. The reasons behind this were discussed in detail last week, but I'll briefly explain the main reason again. The age for not having to buy a meal ticket is not set at 21 because it is the age of majority, but because it is a convenient cut-off date. So changing the age of majority from 18 to 21 will have nothing to do with changing the meal ticket policy, because the policy is set down by the Board of Trustees.

Question: I lost a 50 cent piece in the Campus Center Post Office change machine. I decided to report it to you instead of damaging the machine. Please send me 50 cents.

Answer: I checked with Building Operations at the Campus Center and they said the best thing to do when this happens is to pick up the phone located at the automatic Post Office. This phone is directly connected to the Amherst Post Office, and they're the ones who will refund your money. The Campus Center has nothing to do with this post office's operation. When money is lost in the machine during the Amherst Post Office's off hours, a report should be made as soon as possible. Since you did not report the loss immediately, I would suggest that you contact them now.

"What's the Story?" will be a regular feature in Wednesday's Collegian. I will be looking into various aspects of the University system that may be of interest to or need clarification for the University community. I will also answer any questions or problems people are having within the University. So if you are having a hard time finding the answer to your question, write it down on a piece of paper and drop it in the "What's the Story?" box outside the Campus Center Store, send it through campus mail to Box 6 Campus Center, or bring it to the Ombudsman Office, room 919 Campus Center.

5% Daily Voltage Cutback Leaves Energy Consumption Uneffected

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A five per cent voltage cutback in effect for four hours daily across New England was seen as having little effect on energy consumption in a sampling of expert opinion.

"The effect of a brownout is so small that it's probably not worth it," Gerald L. Wilson of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology said Tuesday.

Wilson and several others told the Springfield Daily News that while the voltage reductions result in an immediate reduction in energy consumption, many electrical appliances and motors draw more current to make up for the loss of voltage.

Daily voltage reductions between 4-8 p.m. began Monday. They were ordered by the New England Power Exchange NEPEX, an organization which coordinates 23 area power companies. NEPEX estimated a monthly saving of 1.8 million gallons of fuel.

Allen Rowlings, of the power exchange, announced that NEPEX saved about 60,000 gallons of fuel from the reduction Monday evening.

The findings of the newspaper's sampling were challenged by NEPEX spokesman James Lydon, who said in a telephone interview from his Boston office that "we know the savings that we've measured are real."

Lydon said the key factor in estimating fuel savings was in the equipment used.

"Any reduction means that we will not run our least efficient equipment," he said.

He explained that the cutbacks in voltage directly affect older oil-burning facilities, which either go off line or undergo voltage reductions.

Newer equipment, apt to burn fuel more efficiently, is unaffected, he said.

Lydon said some of the units affected by the reductions only are used during the peak evening hours.

Wilson, an associate professor of energy processing and director of MIT's power systems engineering laboratory, contended that the prime energy saving in a brownout was in lighting, which dims slightly when the power is cut.

He said most electric motors do not reduce speed or power in a voltage reduction. Instead they draw more current. Thermostatically controlled appliances do not produce less heat, but instead take longer to reach desired temperatures, Wilson said.

Wilson said a 5 per cent voltage reduction results in an immediate 1.8 per cent reduction in the use of electricity.

However, as motors begin to compensate for the loss and thermostats continue to seek their set temperature, power consumption begins to increase, he said.

"The benefits in reduced load are not there," he said.

Wilson and others warned that the voltage reduction could damage some electrical equipment.

Government Reports Trade Surplus

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States reported another half-billion-dollar surplus in its foreign trade in October, putting the country closer to its first annual trade surplus since 1970.

The October surplus was $527 million and placed the trade surplus for the first 10 months of the year at $680 million. At the same time a year ago, there was a trade deficit of $5.2 billion.

The big improvement in the country's foreign trade is attributed by economists to the effect of two devaluations of the dollar, which have made U.S. goods cheaper overseas and foreign goods more expensive at home.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz said Monday he feels the dollar now is correctly valued in relation to the currencies of the United States' major trading partners.

The change in value has resulted in a repatriation of some of the billions of U.S. dollars that flowed out of the country during the years of big deficits in U.S. trade and balance of payments.

The second dollar devaluation occurred in February of this year, and the United States had its first surplus in 1973 in April.

It also has had surpluses in July, September and October, with the September surplus of $873 million being the biggest monthly surplus in eight years.

The country had trade deficits of $2 billion in 1971 and $6 billion in 1972, but seems headed now for a surplus trade year, according to government economists.

The country's balance of payments, which includes the flow of dollars for such things as investment and defense purposes also has shown a marked improvement since the first quarter of this year, but still has an overall deficit.

DeSalvo Murder Shakedown Begins

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — Guards launched a shakedown search yesterday at Walpole state prison for the weapon that was used to stab to death Albert DeSalvo, the self-professed Boston Strangler, the Correction Department said.

Meanwhile, Norfolk Dist. Atty. George Burke continued to investigate a suspect in the case. But he declined to identify the person or reveal a motive.

A correction official said inmates in the maximum security section of the prison were locked up while guards went from cell to cell, stripping inmates and searching their cells for contraband.

The shakedown, to include all sections of the institution, was to be finished today, the spokesman said.

DeSalvo was serving a life sentence imposed in 1967 for sexual assaults on four women. The conviction was not connected with the exploits of the Boston Strangler, and no one has been brought to trial in that case.

'STRANGLER' SHOWS CHOKERS--Albert DeSalvo, who admitted but was never convicted of being the Boston Strangler, shows choker necklaces he made in prison at Walpole, Mass., last March. DeSalvo was found stabbed to death in the prison Monday. The chokers were sold at the prison shop and by mail.

Burke said he was investigating the possibility that DeSalvo's killing might have been linked with drug traffic in the prison.

DeSalvo, 42, a former handyman, was found in his cell bed stabbed 16 times Monday morning. Police theorized that he was killed shortly before the inmates were locked in their cells Sunday night.

DeSalvo was the chief orderly in the prison hospital. Burke said he appeared to be stabbed with a surgical instrument.

The Boston Strangler is attributed with slaying 13 women in an 18-month period between 1962 and 1964. Authorities have never brought charges in those killings, because they say they lack sufficient evidence.

Backed By Mideast Oil

Onassis' Company To Build U.S. Refinery

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - An oil company owned by Aristotle Onassis plans to build its first U.S. refinery near the New Hampshire seacoast, backed by guaranteed shipments of Mideast oil.

In a State House news conference Tuesday, Gov. Meldrim Thomson and businessman Peter J. Booras of Keene, coordinator of the $600 million project, said the facility would provide ample petroleum for New Hampshire and one quarter of the amount used by New England.

It was the second refinery to be announced in recent weeks for the six-state region, currently without any such facility. Booras and consultants to the firm, Olympic Refineries, Inc., outlined plans to build a marine terminal on the leeward side of the Isles of Shoals and to lay a pipeline about 15 miles underwater and underground to Durham Point.

As rumors grew in recent weeks about the proposed construction, about 50 residents of the Durham area formed an ad hoc committee to block the building of the plant in the town.

Booras and state officials expressed confidence that the company would alleviate fears of residents and cause "no significant disruption to the environment."

"We hope to convince the people of that area that a refinery will be an asset and will in no way be detrimental," Booras said.

Thomas Bonner, president of the University of New Hampshire, said the university would investigate the environmental aspects of the project "to serve that public interest."

Thomson, a long-time supporter of an oil refinery, said he was releasing his chief administrative aide, Fred Goode, for the next six months to concentrate on clearing objections to the oil refinery and to a nuclear plant proposed for the seacoast area.

Booras said the company hoped to have all the necessary permits within the next few months and to have the refinery built by the summer of 1976.

"If the company didn't think they could win the necessary approval, they wouldn't have committed themselves," he said.

Booras said more detailed plans would be presented to the state and local officials by mid-January.

A report issued by Booras said the refinery would produce 375,000 barrels a day of heating oil, gasoline and propane. New Hampshire consumes 80,000 barrels daily, and New England as a whole requires about 1.3 million barrels, a spokesman said.

Booras, who declined to discuss specifics about the company, said it is an international firm with "contracts" that assure it of a continuing supply of crude oil from Saudi Arabia.

Although the company will rely on the oil imports, Thomson said the project is in support of President Nixon's goal of making the United States self-sufficient for energy by 1980.

White Considers $1 Per House

BOSTON (AP) - The mayor is considering a plan that would let neighborhood people take over abandoned houses for $1, fix them up and live tax-free for five years.

The urban homestead plan, passed by the city council on Monday, is similar to programs in other cities.

However, Mayor Kevin H. White is reported hesitant about the scheme because of possible legal problems. His approval is necessary before it could take effect.

Under the plan, title to the property would be transferred from the city to the resident after five years.

It passed the council over the objection of Councilor Frederick C. Langone, who said the city's lawyer questioned the city's right to waive taxes without state legislative approval. He also questioned the legality of leasing property without benefit of auction sale.

Mass. Turnpike Stations Ordered To Stay Open

BOSTON (AP) — The chairman of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority ordered the 11 service stations on the state turnpike yesterday to ignore President Nixon's requested ban on Sunday gasoline sales.

"The gasoline stations on the Massachusetts Turnpike are open 24 hours per day, seven days per week, under requirements established by the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, and any changes in these requirements must be authorized" by the authority, said Chairman John T. Driscoll in a letter to the oil companies that operate the stations.

Driscoll said that turnpike operations "are not comparable to those of interstate highways, state highways or other local public ways."

On Sunday, President Nixon asked the service stations to voluntarily refrain from selling gasoline between 9 p.m. Saturday and midnight Sunday.

Jack Dixon, a turnpike spokesman, said the authority was worried about declining patronage on the toll road.

"With a 50 mile an hour limit, why should you travel on a turnpike when you can go on a parallel road and keep up the same speed?" Dixon said. "This could wipe us out."

The turnpike stations are operated by Mobil, Citgo, and Exxon.

The 135-mile-long, limited access road runs from downtown Boston in eastern Massachusetts to New York state on the western border.

The stations "have a contract and can't make any changes," Dixon said. "They have to sell gas."

Mass. State Colleges React To Fuel Crisis

ANDOVER, Mass. (AP) - The presidents of the Massachusetts state colleges discussed the possibility yesterday of shutting down for a month this winter to save fuel, a spokesman said.

Closing for a month "could happen with some colleges, because they're going to reshuffle schedules," said James Hammond, president of Fitchburg State College.

Some were considering closing in January, while others might choose other months, Hammond said.

Hammond is chairman of the State College Presidents Council, which held its monthly meeting yesterday.

The presidents also discussed technical means of saving fuel, such as improving heating controls. The building personnel of the state colleges plan to meet tomorrow to discuss these measures.

Meetings among academic deans of the colleges were also planned, Hammond said.

Hammond said, however, that the state colleges were not considering uniform action.

"Each campus will have to consider its own setup," he said. "Everyone is aware of the gravity of the situation."

The University of Massachusetts said yesterday it was cutting short its voluntary intersession program of seminars at its Amherst campus by one week.

Instead of running from Jan. 7 to Jan. 25, the program will not begin until Jan. 14. The university will also close some dorms during the period, when many students are off campus, a spokesman said.

The university was also considering changes in its sports schedule so that teams would play doubleheaders instead of individual games, and cut down on travel.

Also under consideration was rescheduling maintenance work and classes so that buildings can be closed earlier in the day.

Southeastern Massachusetts University, another state school, said its students had organized a computerized car pool to help cope with the gasoline shortage.

The registrar's office will send letters to students in early January listing the names of fellow students who live within easy carpooling distance, a spokesman said.

Phillips Exeter Academy, a prep school in Exeter, N.H., said that it would extend its Christmas vacation by five days.

THE MENAGERIE OF GLASS — An old barn on the edge of the University of Kansas in Lawrence, Kan., has been converted into a glass blowing studio.

$1.3 Billion And Harvard's Hurting

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The endowment of Harvard University, the largest of any university, stood at $1.36 billion last June 30, and the university operated in the black for the second straight year, the university reported Monday.

The endowment was $1.7 million above the previous year's, an increase made possible by gifts since a decline in the stock market cost Harvard 2.5 per cent of its June 30, 1972 portfolio.

Private gifts and bequests for capital totalled $24.6 million in the year ended June 30, up 72 per cent from the year before. Gifts for current use rose 1.5 per cent of $25.7 million.

Total university operating expenses rose only 4.9 per cent to $217 million, leaving a surplus of $2.1 million.

Financial Vice-President Hale Champion said the university's financial position was one of "fragile stability" and noted recent inflation was not reflected in the 1972-73 accounts.

Park Plaza-One More Try

BOSTON (AP) - Community Affairs Commissioner Lewis S. W. Crampton invited developers Tuesday to submit a fourth Park Plaza urban renewal proposal that he said appears to meet financial and environmental objections raised to earlier plans.

State officials had outlined the conditions last September when they rejected the Boston Redevelopment Authority's BRA third proposal.

In a letter to BRA Director Robert T. Kenney, Crampton said he expects public hearings on the fourth Park Plaza plan to begin within 10 days of its official submission.

The business-residential development would be in Boston's Park Square area and border on Boston Common.

Inmates-You'd Better Come Back

BOSTON (AP) - Prison inmates who fail to return from furloughs will be subject to up to 10 years imprisonment under a bill signed into law by Gov. Francis W. Sargent Tuesday.

The new law follows a recent court case in which a Superior Court judge dismissed escape charges against an inmate who failed to return from a furlough. The judge said no escape was involved and that the state's furlough law did not provide penalties for not returning.

Help Is On The Way For Near Poor

BOSTON (AP) - Legal help for the near-poor, too well-off for poverty lawyers, is being made available by the Massachusetts Bar Association.

Seventy lawyers are working part time in the program, which gives legal assistance to tenants and landlords with housing problems.

It was available to people whose income after taxes and medical insurance is under $6,000, plus $750 for each dependent. Single, childless people with income less than $8,250 also qualify.

Legal help costs $20 an hour, but the total bill does not exceed $200. Private lawyers in Boston charge $30 to $35 an hour, a bar association spokesman said.

A Close Call For The Minuteman

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — A wandering tourist who heard a strange ticking sound emanaging from a brown paper bag lying near the Minuteman statue may have saved the Revolutionary War monument from oblivion.

The tourist, unidentified by police, called authorities, who opened the paper bag to gind four sticks of dynamite, a detonator and a clock.

The device was dismantled at 10:55 a.m. Monday, five minutes before it was due to explode.

If it had gone off, it probably would have put the statue right into orbit," said Concord police chief William J. Costello.

The famed statue, nearly 100 years old, depicts a Minuteman holding a rifle. It stand near the Old North Bridge, which was not threatened by the bomb.

Law And Order?

On the night of Tuesday, October 30, a man walked into 725 Webster and asked to buy a case of beer. Gary Schuster had been selling beer in Webster for some time and found nothing unusual about selling a case to this apparently young man dressed in jeans and a flannel shirt. However, the moment this transaction was completed, four armed UMass Campus Policemen entered the room and proceeded to place Gary, his roommate, and his roommate's girlfriend against the wall. The police then continued by frisking the three and searching the room, during which time, one officer told them all that they were under arrest. Gary protested and declared that he was the only responsible party, and the police released the other two captives.

As the ensemble continued out of Gary's room, five more armed Campus Police officers arrived on the scene. Assured that the prisoner was now well-guarded, the nine armed campus policemen escorted Gary to the cruiser in which he was placed to make his journey down to the station. Throughout the ride from Webster to the Campus Police Station, one officer kept a firm grip on Gary's arm to make sure the dangerous criminal wouldn't escape.

Upon arriving at the station, Gary was charged with (1) storing of alcoholic beverages with intent to sell, and (2) sale of alcoholic beverages without a license.

On Thursday, November 1, an article in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian read that a police "spokesman went on to say, 'I would like to emphasize that what transpired was an investigation and a resultant arrest. It was not a raid.''' However, in the words of Gary Schuster, "When five cops storm into your room, put you up against the wall, frisk you and search your room, I call that a raid."

Continuing along the same train of thought, let's travel to one Friday night at 11:30 p.m., around the same date as the previous incident. A student whom I shall refer to as Tom was standing outside his dorm, Baker House, with a few friends. They were somewhat drunk, and they proceeded to become involved in a heated, and fairly obscene, dialogue with certain residents of Greenough House. The verbal battle continued for about ten minutes, at which time, three Campus Police cruisers came rolling across the courtyard. Aware of the possible dangers of remaining on the scene, Tom and his cronies scampered up the stairs of Baker. On arriving at the second floor landing, Tom stopped to shout one final obscentity at the approaching cruisers, and then continued to walk up the last flight of stairs to his corridor.

Entering his room, Tom turned to find his key which would enable him to lock his door. (All the doors in Baker must be locked with a key.) While fumbling for his key, Tom felt a hand gripping his arm, and before he realized what was happening, he was being whisked down the stairs with his arm pinned tightly against his back. Still being abruptly assisted by the officer, Tom arrived at the second floor in time to find the other two officers barreling up the stairs to join their colleague. One officer exclaimed, "Are there any more up there?", and after receiving a negative response, he grabbed Tom's other arm, and the three campus policemen escorted Tom outside.

Once outside, Tom asked the officers if he was under arrest, and they explained to him that he was under protective custody and that they would keep him for the night and release him in the morning. They frisked him, handcuffed him, gave him his rights and hustled him off to the Campus Police Station.

Still amazed at the rapid sequence of events, Tom then realized that he was the proud owner of three fat joints in a cigarette case in his front pocket, which, because of the handcuffs, was out of his reach. Tom pleaded his case to the young officer at the wheel and asked if he could throw out the three joints. The driver calmed him and they continued to their appointed destiny.

Once in the Campus Police Station, Tom's handcuffs were removed and he was instructed to empty his pockets on the desk. Picking up the cigarette pack and feeling its contents, the officer at the desk was heard to say, "I think we've got another charge coming up." Having emptied the cigarette pack onto the desk, the officer verified his remarks by saying, "It's now 'possession of marijuana'''.

Tom was then taken out on a venture to the Amherst Police Station, where he was to be locked up and held. The campus police officer now in charge handcuffed Tom above his elbows and behind his back, and attempted to guide him with an occassional twist of the chain between the cuffs. Then the officer told Tom, "Learn how to live with them. Don't fight them. (referring to the handcuffs)." On the ride to the Amherst Police Station, the officer continued to harass Tom by asking if it was "dynamite weed" that he was busted for. Tom refused to answer.

Tom was then taken by the same campus policeman into a room in the Amherst Police Station in order to be fingerprinted. After making a mistake on the first attempt, the officer came to the last finger of his second attempt and grabbed for the wrong finger. Tom pointed out the officer's mistake, and the apparently frustrated officer slammed his elbow into Tom's jaw, sending him into the wall. The policeman had established his authority.

The reason behind the presentation of these two stories is readily apparent. It now appears that the Campus Police are getting out of hand, and that certain campus policemen are allowing power to affect their thinking to the point that while trying to enforce the law, they are actually mocking it. Whether or not Tom or Gary were guilty is another question, but even if their guilt was established, it could not be interpreted as a license for overly harsh treatment by the police.

If the wish of the Campus Police was to close up Gary's business, the raid would have been more than sufficient. However, their actual purpose became evident when they continued with intimidating treatment and the pressing of charges. It was no longer the case of a college kid making a slight value mistake and getting caught. It was now a clear case of the police against a criminal.

Gary Schuster is the president of Webster House, and until this time, his slate was clean. However, on November 16, 1973, Gary Schuster was found guilty of both charges and was fined $500, subject to appeal. He is now the proud owner of a criminal record.

On the other hand, Tom's only real mistake was getting caught drunk on a Friday night, a condition which most of us often share. However, neither this nor any other condition could possibly have been sufficient cause for the treatment he received. Not only was he arrested and humiliated, but he was physically abused by the officers involved. Tom will be going to court as this article is being written.

In both cases involved, the Campus Police overreacted to the situation. As one of the nine arresting officers told Gary, "While we were up there arresting you, there were two assaults on campus." Ridiculously enough, it didn't seem unusual to this officer that nine policemen were dispatched to arrest one student. In short, the stories of Gary and Tom are only two — there are more. They all only serve to reinforce the theory that authority ceases to remain just, when power becomes a factor.

If there are campus police officers who consider this criticism unjust, don't bring your appeals to me. Rather, take your comments to your colleagues who persist in making a mockery of justice. Make sure they realize that it isn't their name that they risk, but the name of the Campus Police and those of any and all low enforcement officials throughout the nation. These few officers cast dispersions on the very foundations of justice and the American judiciary system, and their actions should be curtailed.

If we allow these few unjust officers to function in our society, then we will be discarding the student efforts of 1968, and the overall striving for student participation throughout the years will have been to no avail. An educational institution is designed to assist and educate the students of that institution. When it ceases to conduct these two functions, it no longer serves any useful purpose.

If the UMass Campus Police continue with escapades similar to those stated previously, then they will be defeating the goals of the University and the overall cause of justice. If "law and order" means the arrest and conviction of every student at UMass that commits one minor crime or another, then "law and order" is no longer congruent with justice.

Subtle Discrimination Against Fatsos

To The Editor:

I am writing about a very large and generally very silent group on this campus, those people who are fat — oohps! — overweight. The kind of "subtle" discrimination directed toward us is different from other kinds of prejudice precisely because nobody feels guilty about it — to the contrary, everyone who practices it is extremely righteous and proper about it.

A fantastic number of nondescript people feel perfectly free to come up to my table at the coffee shop and without any introduction whatsoever say to me: "In all honesty let me give you a piece of advice as a friend" (mind you, I've never even met the guy) "why don't you lose some weight — go jogging, it always works." Having so generously shared his accumulated wisdom with me, the fellow usually proceeds to converse normally (i.e., the usual coffee-shop bull) with the rest of the people at the table.

Women are even more "subtle." They assume a priori that a fat guy is mentally retarded, sexually impotent and emotionally vacuous. My basic funtion vis a vis them is that of a garbage can to dump into. This is generally accomplished in two steps. The first goes something like, "I'm sick of all this sex and physical bullshit, what I want is someone who is just a friend" (I certainly do not know why friend is modified by just! Does it mean that her partner in 'sex and physical bullshit' is not her friend?). Now, having established just the kind of relationship that is desired and knowing full well that I am going home alone this Friday night, this little lady starts out be telling me about her boyfriend (who happens to be dancing with someone else at the moment) in all the gory detail imaginable. Of course she sould never say that to a guy — but since she is talking to what must obviously be an eunuch — she is confident that she is really doing me a favor by keeping me in this delightful form of company.

An Ancient Greek On Watergate

To The Editor:

An ancient Greek was heard to say that, with respect to Watergate and other nefarious acts of the present Administration (I'm sure) "love of power, operating through greed and through personal ambition, was the cause of all these evils. To this must be added the violent fanaticism which came into play once the struggle had broken out. Leaders of parties in the cities had programs which appeared admirable — on one side political equality for the masses, on the other the safe and sound government of the aristocracy — but in professing to serve the public interest they were seeking to win the prizes for themselves. In their struggles for ascendancy nothing was barred; terrible indeed were the actions to which they committed themselves, and in taking revenge they went farther still. Here they were deterred neither by claims of justice nor by the interests of the state; their one standard was the pleasure of their own party at that particular moment, and so, either by means of condemning their enemies on an illegal vote or by violently usurping power over them, they were always ready to satisfy the hatreds of the hour. Thus neither side had any use for conscientious motives; more interest was shown in those who could produce attractive arguments to justify some disgraceful action. As for the citizens who held moderate views, they were destroyed by both the extreme parties, either for not taking part in the struggle or in envy at the possibility that they might survive."

Superficial Level Of Communication

To The Editor:

As regards the commentary by Thomas Brine on 11-19, though I'll leave the singles parties solution to him without comment, it is indeed true that UMass has a peculiar social community. Having returned to school after five years of moving about, I came here expecting a considerably more mature and outgoing environment than the one I found, but now my illusions are shattered and I sometimes have the feeling of being in the midst of a curious science fiction machination — masses of people rushing anxiously back and forth from one clique to the next, coming and going according to schedule with the same tired banalities, most of them jealously guarding both role and anonymity. Maybe because I live off campus I've missed some vital unifying factor in the dorm and dining commons community; lessons in social awareness perhaps?

Equally distressing is that many of those among us are apparently still in the throes of their high school passions, and worse, are often very unsure and uneasy about human contact beyond the most superficial level. I recall with amusement asking one girl if she would review some lecture material with me, she looked shocked at this invasion and stammered out something about going home, lots of reading, and so on — but I was merely guilty of using the wrong vernacular, "How ya been, man?", "So whatcha been doin'?", "Well, see ya around, huh?" seem so much more consistent with the general level of communication. I'll just have to learn.

Doing Time

By ERNIE REIS

Two years ago Attica was still a topic of conversation. This year we have the volitile situations that currently exist in many of the major penal institutions in Massachusetts. Individuals who are close to the prison scene seem to be waiting for another Attica to occur but some place else.

For those who concern themselves with discussions about and for prison reform are often left hanging like the inmate by the casual observer. Reformers are looked at with a sense of isolation as is the inherent nature of their subject. The idea that prisoners and the institutions that hold them are out of sight and out of mind make prison reform a difficult task at the start.

However, people have started the task of prison reform often taking some very misguided steps. Programs have been initiated which ultimately take up the time of inmates while they are incarcerated and do nothing for them when an inmate is set free back in the community. The problems of the "criminal" remain.

In discussing the problem Attica is a logical focal point. The casual observer sees the violence of Attica and this only reinforces the violent myth people have about prison and prisoners. Lost in Attica were the issues of dehumanizing treatment of inmates, the lack of any rehabilitative treatment and the continuation of the cycle of criminal behavior. Caught in the middle of society's need for incarceration of "criminals" and the inmates need for humane treatment are the guards.

The hard part about discussing the roles of guards or correction officials is that one does not know who they are. Inmates call them screws while those who view prisons as one form of political oppression call them stooges-puppets of the establishment. With labels such as these it is hard to view these men and women as human.

Attica is two years behind us and these labels and the problem of prison remain virtually untouched. They will remain untouched if people do not get involved. It would seem then that there would be a call for volunteers to work feverishly for prison reform. That is not the case-this article would not make such a shallow presumption.

Instead we are calling out for students who think they want to become involved with the problem of prison reform by becoming a part of prison reform. The School of Education through the Model Education Rehabilitation Program at the Berkshire County House of Correction is sponsoring a 90 day learning experience for 15 credits dealing with prisons.

The learning experience keys itself on one basic course requirement-that the students participating voluntarily spend 90 days locked up and treated as inmates at the Berkshire County House of Correction. This is not a new idea as six students, one during this semester, have volunteered for this experience.

One of the revelations these students have discovered is that none of the inmates look like James Cagney or Humphrey Bogart. Instead some are only seventeen and can't read. The main purpose then of the learning experience is to get by the violent tough guy image to get at a teenage learning problem. However, as a volunteeer inmate you are not visiting to tutor twice a week you are there immeshed in the total character of the prisoners and their needs.

Diane LeBlanc is currently a freshman at UMass. She and four others did 90 days in jail during the summer while most of us enjoyed the freedom of the vacation. Upon getting out Diane said, "It wasn't hard. Just boring."

If Attica still jars the memory banks and stirs the fires of indignation please attend a meeting being held in Rm. 803 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m. this Wednesday on November 28th. Details concerning your voluntary incarceration will be explained. Students should understand that basically this is an off campus academic program and has all the necessary waivers for students to participate without losing out academically during the semester. Instead campus activity is restricted to that time when an inmate is allowed to receive visitors.

Ernie Reis is an advisor to students interested in persuing careers in adult corrections. His office is 466 Hills South, phone 545-0636.

Peace, But No Holocaust

To The Editor:

Deep concern should have arisen when the Soviets began putting their missles into the Middle East. Israel a small nation trying to survive wants to live in peace and have communication with her Arabs neighbors. Before the war in 1948, The Hagannah "Israel Defense Force" went door to door and asked the Palestinians to stay. The El Fatah, the Arab League, told them to leave for they would see Jewish blood bath. So the Palestinians left and the next day Israel won the war for Independence in 1948. There the refugee problem started and could have easily been solved for the Arabs are rich with oil but they want to use their poor refugee brothers as an anti-Israeli tool for propaganda instead.

Israel is a small nation surrounded by hostile enemies that want to destroy her. Who in history has heard that a nation that won four wars has to give her land back? Has Russia given back Hungary or Czechoslovakia? Israel wants peace but not at the cost of her sons blood. Israel wants peace but will never, again allow another holocaust. NEVER----AGAIN!

PEACE----SHALOM.

Hillel To Hold Israeli Week

The Jewish communities of the Pioneer Valley will be coordinating a series of discussions, films, lectures, and entertainment for the first week in December. This events will center on many aspects of Israeli and Jewish life.

Starting off "Israel Week" will be Siege, an Israeli film that has been very well received by critics in both Israel and the United States. It is a rare glimpse into the lives of people under the stress of war. This film will be shown on Saturday, December 1st at 7:00 and 9:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, UMass.

On Sunday, December 2nd at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, there will be a memorial service for those killed in the mideast fighting, to be followed by a lecture by Ruth Kluger, author of The Last Escape, who will speak on "From Holocaust to Independence".

On Monday at 8:00 p.m. in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College, Zeidan Atashi will speak on the "Role of Minority Communities in Israel". Mr. Atashi is the Israeli Consul in New York, and a Druze Arab. In addition, on Monday and Tuesday, December 3rd and 4th, The excellent film "A Wall in Jerusalem" will be shown, gratis, in the Campus Center (room 101 on Monday and 169 on Tuesday) at UMass.

At 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday, December 4th in Room 120 of the School of Business Administration at the University there will be a lecture on "Social Structure and Change in Israel" by Mr. Nahum Guttman, after which the film "The Living Wall" will be shown. A discussion of the issues raised by the film will follow.

Wednesday morning, December 5th, will see the start of an "Art and Crafts Exhibit and Sale" in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at UMass. The exhibit will include many well-known Israeli and American artists whose works cover a variety of mediums. The art of Sharir, Bak, and Moreh will be on display, along with the works of such local artists as Leonard Baskin, Elliot Offner, and Barry Moser. In addition, art prints, ceramics, jewelry, weavings, and many other items contributed by artists and craftsmen from the Pioneer Valley will be offered for sale. The exhibit will be from 10:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. Also, on Wednesday at 2:00 p.m. there will be a question and answer session on Israel in Room 113 of the University campus center. Everyone will be invited to take part in the discussion.

Former Vietnam Prisoner To Speak

Jean Pierre Debris, former Vietnam schoolteacher who spent two years in a Saigon prison, will speak Thursday night at 8:00 in Hasbrouck 20. He will also show a film Vietnam: A Question of Torture. A coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge will follow the lecture.

Jean Pierre went to Vietnam in 1968 to teach school. After witnessing grave injustices inflicted upon the Vietnamese people by General Thieu and his government Jean Pierre and a friend protested by climbing on top of a mountain and passing out "Peace" leaflets. The protest led to their arrest in July 1970. Jean Pierre spent two years in a Saigon prison. He said that his release was due to people on the outside demanding it. He also said Thieu was afraid to have westerners witness the extremely cruel torture inflicted on the prisoners.

Since his release in 1972, Jean Pierre has been a full time peace activist. He has traveled with the Indochina Peace Campaign on a speaking tour with Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden. Jean Pierre talks about the cruelties of the Saigon prison and gives descriptions of eyewitness accounts. One prisoner, he said, was a pregnant woman who was tortured with electricity until she had epileptic fits and then could not nurse her baby after he was born. Another prisoner was a seven year old boy who was burned by cigarettes because he would not reveal where his father's friends were.

Jean Pierre also emphasizes that American money is being spent to aid General Thieu and thus, is being used against the agreements of the Paris Peace Treaty. American companies are also aiding in building the "tiger cages" the small torture cells into which the prisoners are thrown.

Thus, although American troops may be out of Vietnam, American involvement has not ceased.

Debris's visit is being co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and the United Christian Foundation.

Achtung! Study In Germany!

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is taking applications for its 1974-75 study program at the University of Freiburg in Germany.

Graduate and senior level undergraduate students from all colleges and universities are invited to apply. Although the program is not restricted to students concentrating in German language and literature, the University of Freiburg requires all foreign students to pass its language proficiency test. The program begins with a several week orientation program which stresses the German languages.

Courses are offered in the social sciences, arts and humanities, including comparative literature, political science, philosophy, history, music, English, economics, and German language and literature. Scholarships are available to outstanding students, and Fulbright scholarships may be applied to participation in the Freiburg program. UMass students who receive financial aid may apply it towards their expenses in Freiburg.

The basic $2600 cost includes round-trip travel, room and board, tuition and fees. Not included are books, travel within Europe and miscellaneous fees. Between the foothills of the Black Forest and the Rhine Valley in southwest Germany, Freiburg is renowned for its 12th century cathedral and open market.

Applications and additional information are available from Dr. Barbara B. Burn, director if international programs, Whitmore Administration Building, UMass Amherst 01002.

University Women To Meet

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., at the First Congregational Church, Amherst, the American Association of University Women will hold their November meeting. Mr. John Caldwell, Director of Channel 57, will be the speaker.

The subject of discussion at the November meeting will be Communication and the Mass Media. The quality of life and the extent of freedom may well depend on the invisible environment created b the mass media. How the content of communication is shaped effects our perceptions of reality, our attitudes, and even our fantasies. Our concerns will include the following:

1) responsibility of the media
2) impact of communication on cultural change
3) the arts-graphic and performing
4) children's programs
5) quality of programs vs. needs of people.

Art Exhibitions

Two exhibitions will be offered at the Mead Art Building, Amherst College, from Nov. 26 to Dec. 20.

One of these will be a display of works by American artists John Steuart Curry and Sidney Waugh. Both men reached artistic maturity in the 1930s and continued working through the next decades. Their art differs greatly: Curry is most often associated with the American regionalist artists and Waugh is remembered for his sculpture and designs for the Steuben Glass Company.

The Mead Art Building is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and from 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays. Visitors to the Art Building should take the Amherst College entrance a half-block south of Route 9 on South Pleasant Street (Route 116) and follow the one-way road around the Quadrangle. The Art Building is adjacent to Stearns Tower, between James Dormitory and Stearns Dormitory.

Scholarships For Foreign Students

The Tuition Scholarships Sub-Committee of the Faculty Senate Committee on Foreign Student Affairs is pleased to announce the availability of applications for tuition scholarships to be awarded to eligible foreign students on the basis of academic excellence and financial need. Several of these scholarships will be available for the second semester and all non-immigrant foreign students are encouraged to apply.

Applications are available from the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 239, and must be returned with two supporting letters of recommendation prior to December 20.

WMPIRG's New Service

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) has announced the formation of a new service designed to help UMass students with common consumer problems. The Small Claims Court Citizens' Advisory Service will encourage use of the court as a fast, effective way to settle disputes without the aid of a lawyer. The Advisory Service will open centers this week in the WMPIRG local office, 2nd floor of the Student Union at UMass.

WMPIRG has also published a consumer information booklet on "How to Sue in Small Claims Court in Western Massachusetts." Both the booklet and the service centers are intended to aid victims of unfair business practice in use of the small claims court.

The 20-page booklet, "How to Sue in Small Claims Court," outlines basic procedures for filing small claims court actions. It lists court addresses, clerks and schedules for Berkshire, Hampden, Franklin and Hampshire counties. It also contains examples of forms required for small claims court action and helpful tips for preparing testimony, appearance in court and carrying out the suit.

Office hours at UMass are Wednesday, 1-3 p.m. and Thursday, 7-10 p.m., telephone 545-0712.

Office hours at the WMPIRG Regional Office are Monday, 7-10 p.m. and Wednesday 7-10 p.m.

Profs. Awarded

UMass-Amherst Professors Joan Bean (Psychology) and Mary Barber (SBA) have been awarded fellowships from the Carnegie Corporation Grant, "Women and Career Options." Provided with "release time" from a part of their spring semester, 1974 duties, Drs. Barber and Bean will encourage women to become full-fledged professionals and leaders in fields that have rarely been chosen by women; and they will study why women compromise or become discouraged from their original career aspirations.

Nursing Recruits

Application must be made to the Division of Nursing for acceptance into the major. This can be done in the sophomore year. Students who want to apply for September 1974 may pick up applications in the CASIAC office or in Morrill IV, Room 414.

An Open Meeting will be held on Wednesday, November 28 at 7:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge (Room 314) of the Student Union to discuss the revised curriculum of the Division of Nursing. Anyone interested is welcome.

Science Speaker

William E. Heronemus will be the guest speaker for the Five College Science and Society Symposium tonight. "U.S. Energy Policy: The Need for Greater Emphasis on Solar Alternatives" will be the subject of his talk, which will be presented at 8:30 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. The public is cordially invited. For the past three years, Professor Heronemus has been conducting research on alternative energy sources, particularly those which require ocean-sited power plants. His recent publications include "The United States Energy Crisis: Some Proposed Gentle Solutions" and "Power from Offshore Winds."

"Mikado" Try-Outs

There is a need for orchestral talent and male singers especially tenors, for a Winter Term Production of Gilbert & Sullivan's The Mikado to be presented at Mount Holyoke College February 9 & 10. Try-outs will be held at Chapin Auditorium, Mount Holyoke College, on Wednesday, Nov. 28 and Thursday, Nov. 29 from 2-6 & 7-10 p.m. Call Phyllis Riley, 538-2048, for further information and audition appointments.

Campus Nudes: The "In" Thing

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — The latest collegiate caper is shedding clothes and some students at the University of Maryland are making spirited efforts to out-bare each other.

Instead of eating goldfish or piling into telephone booths, naked students are taking part in foot races, basketball games, parades and even one mock wedding.

Campus Police Chief Jerrold L. Witsil said that only one nude runner has been arrested so far this year.

The runner, who was not identified, was charged with assault and disorderly conduct after hitting a resident director who tried to make him go inside.

Richard Davidoff, one of the resident directors charges with keeping peace in the dormitories, said the festive atmosphere accompanying the nude activities "is pretty disruptive to the students who don't want to be involved."

Any attempt to stop the activities, which usually last an hour or two, night cause a lot of trouble, Davidoff said.

Davidson said he had received dozens of complaints. Student enrollment at the College Park campus near Washington is 33,299.

Students said the record for mass running in the nude was set at midnight Nov. 15 by about 125 sprinters — mostly male — who circled a dining hall while spectators urged then on with shouts, music and firecrackers.

A group of coeds claimed the distinction of holding the most bizarre event. They staged a mock wedding in which the participants wore only hats and headdresses.

One student said he started the nude activities by taking off his pants in front of a girls' dormitory.

Marijuana Dealers Finance Operation

DAVIE, Fla. (AP) — Little Jody Dietrich will get a vital heart operation thanks to a $2,000 donation from a group calling itself the "Broward County Marijuana Dealers Association."

"This puts us over the top for the hospital bill," Jeanette Allie, chairman of the "Jody Dietrich Heart Surgery Fund," said Tuesday.

A slim woman in her early 20s walked into the Sterling National Bank Monday with an envelope stuffed with $100, $50 and $20 bills for the 6-year-old boy, who is suffering from a congenital heart valve defect.

"She just walked in, handed the envelope to my secretary and left," said bank president Bob Ruckman. "Incredible but true."

The money was accompanied by a blistering letter which condemned "the people in the system which made this action on our part necessary."

The trust fund for Jody was established last week by the Theta Sigma Chi women's service sorority after a hospital refused to admit the boy because his parents did not have insurance or the $3,000 to cover the cost of the operation, Mrs. Allie said.

Mrs. Allie said Variety Children's Hospital in Miami told her and the Dietrichs that the child "could not be admitted without the estimated balance for the operation."

But a Variety spokeswoman said family had "misunderstood" hospital officials. The Dietrichs were told that a deposit would be required because they did not have insurance, but no specific amount was mentioned, the spokeswoman said.

The letter that accompanied the contribution said: "What the hell is happening in this country when a 6-year-old child needs life-saving surgery and is denied treatment because some hospital demands a down payment on the inherent right he was born with to health and happiness?

"It is apparently the same sickness that has caused thousands of our young people to be branded as criminals and put in prisons for using a drug proven far less dangerous than the deadly amounts of alcohol consumed by their parents..."

The letter was signed, "Cannabis Rex for the Broward County Marijuana Dealers Association."

Mrs. Allie said Jody's father, Henry, worked part time as a horse trainer at Calder Race Course and could not afford the operations.

Sheriff Edward Stack said he did not know of the existence of a dope dealers association in his county. He speculated the idea may have come from a similar incident last September in which a "Gainesville Marijuana Dealers Association" donated $10,000 to a telethon.

Study In Paris

A year of study in Paris is available to UMass students for no more than the cost of spending the academic year on campus in America. For the past five years the university has been offering this opportunity and a new group of students is now being recruited for the next academic year starting in September 1974.

Generally speaking, students take half their courses at the Sorbonne or at other approved French institutions and the other half with the UMass professor and assistant who are also the program directors in Paris. Students are lodged with carefully selected French families in order to insure exposure to French life and to avoid the dormitory experience.

Non majors as well as majors in French are invited to participate. In the past about one third of the students elected French as a minor, but in fact the important requirement regarding language ability is that the student have some rudimentary grasp of conversational French which can be improved while studying and living in France.

Since this Paris program is organized and sponsored by the Boston campus of UMass, two of its representatives will be here in Amherst on Thursday November 29 to explain its goals and interview interested students. This meeting will take place this Thursday at 2:00 p.m. in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall. Professors MacCombie and Volpe of UMass/Boston will be glad to interview students and answer their questions. Any student unable to attend this meeting should contact Professor Busi of the Amherst campus in room 328 of Herter Hall.

The HP-45 Advanced Scientific Pocket Calculator

Want better grades in science, engineering or math? The HP-45 can help, because . . .

- It solves all types of scientific and engineering math problems! Does vector arithmetic. Calculates the mean and standard deviation, factorials, powers, square roots and reciprocals. Automatically converts U.S./metric constants, and polar/rectangular coordinates. Performs log, trig and math functions. And it does so much more!
- It displays answers in fixed or scientific notation! Has selective round-off capability (0 to 9 places).
- It replaces log and trig tables! They're pre-programmed in. No interpolation required.
- Its 14 registers remember intermediate solutions! 9 of them are addressable for selective storage and retrieval of data. Register arithmetic is fast and easy . . . it eliminates pencil-and-paper calculations!
- Its accuracy—up to 10 digits—surpasses that of slide rules and most other calculators! It reduces mistakes. Handles numbers as small as 10^{-99} . . . as large as 10^{99}—200 decades!
- It offers computer-like power! At a fraction of the cost. And there's no waiting to use it.
- It saves time! Up to 50 times faster than a slide rule. Solves complex problems in seconds.
- It operates silently . . . anywhere! Perfect for classroom, library or dorm. Runs on rechargeable batteries or AC.

It's as easy to use as an ordinary pocket calculator—but it's like having your own computer!

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

If I wanted to be negative, I would say that the most unpleasant Sagittarian I have met would be singer John Davidson and that the most obtuse Libran I have encountered would be quiz show psychologist Dr. Joyce Brothers.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent now is on elevating your position. Strive to make room for yourself at top. You gain plaudits; door of opportunity opens for possible advancement. Key is to diplomatically weave and win. Don't force. Gentle persuasion will accomplish purpose.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Publication, distribution opportunities increase. You are able to sharpen point of view. Travel could be high on agenda. Accent language, education. Be selective. Highlight integrity. See situation as it really exists.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on money handled by others. Check savings, investment programs. Get on top of financial situation. Leave nothing to wishful thinking. You can deal from position of strength. Gain co-operation of partner, mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint from Gemini message. Do plenty of listening, observing. Permit mate, partner to take initiative. You lack sufficient "evidence." Legal affairs may be spotlighted. Aries, Libra persons could figure in important ways.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on work, basic issues and general vitality. Nutritional requirements should be given special attention. You could embark on project which is demanding. Give yourself every edge. Leo, Aquarius persons may be in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be dealing with children. Considerations of security are of paramount importance. Where and how you live is spotlighted. Make changes. You need not feel there is only one way. Experiment. Ask questions. Answers are obtainable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Virgo message. Build on solid structure. Choose course which is familiar. Going too far afield now would be an error. Emphasize security. Older individual does have your best interests at heart. Know it and respond accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): People seem determined to "tell you stories." You receive numerous reports, many concerning neighbors and relatives. Maintain emotional equilibrium. Take time to check details. Realize no one is giving up something for nothing. Assess costs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put ideas to work. Merely talking is not enough. Key now is to test. Invest in your own abilities. Pay and collect. Balance budget and books. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently. Timing remains sharp.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spotlight is on personality, personal appearance. Take lead. Insist on quality. You gain added recognition. Be confident and let others know you intend to go all the way. Vitality makes comeback. You receive compliments, recognition--and cash.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Period of solitude is indicated. Remember that being alone is not necessarily the same as being lonely. Build spiritual resources. Heed inner voice. Pisces, Virgo persons could figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent now is on friendship, hopes, desires. You get what you want--choose wisely. Relationships are intensified. Nothing happens halfway. It is all or nothing. Know it and don't play games with emotions. You could be a big winner.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are active, dynamic and independent. You create and break rules. You set your own pace and attract envy. You are controversial and every inch the individual. You may change residence in 1974--February and November will be significant months. Many born under Leo and Aquarius are drawn to you.

Maharaj Ji Says...

Most people have heard about Guru Maharaj Ji and the various claims made about him. Few people, however, are aware of his essential message, which is the Knowledge he has to offer.

Guru Maharaj Ji's Knowledge teaches us how to meditate on the source of love, growth and creativity inside us. It is not the sort of knowledge we can find in libraries, for it is a direct experience of something within us, not a theory. That is why Guru Maharaj Ji says, "this is the Knowledge you can't get in college." Guru Maharaj Ji literally shows us how to see the soul, how to bathe in its purifying and health-giving light. This concrete experience of inner peace and joy eradicates hatred, greed and fear. It eases the pressures of daily life, and leaves us free to act unselfishly and effectively at all times. Medically speaking it is an evolution of the human species. It contains a solution to every problem at present facing humanity. And it is practical. One hundred per cent. It works.

The Knowledge is shown to people by close disciples of Guru Maharaj Ji known as Mahatmas. It is revealed free of charge to those who come with an open heart. For further information, come to tonight's program which begins at 7:30 in room 163 of the Campus Center or call 773-7436.

Ancient History On WFCR

A highly original look at ancient history and its relevance to our own times and problems is the format of "The Uncensored Past," a series starting on FM station WFCR Sunday, Dec. 2 and running for 13 weeks.

The half-hour programs will be built around readings from the classics and other works by Professor Francis Glasheen of Central Connecticut State College and commentary by author and broadcaster Sidney Walton from his unpublished manuscript "The History of Freedom."

Winter Jobs In Europe

Paying student jobs in ski and other winter resorts are still available in Europe. Jobs are given out on a first come, first served, basis to any full or part time student who applies immediately. Most of the jobs are in Alpine ski resorts in Switzerland, Austria, Germany and France. There are also openings in hotels and restaurants in larger cities.

A paying job provides the opportunity to see Europe while earning some money. Standard wages are paid, but the big saver is the free room and board which is provided with each job and arranged in advance.

All job arrangements are made on a non-profit basis by Student Overseas Services (SOS), a student run organization for the past 15 years. SOS charges only for the actual paper work involved in confirming the job and room and board arrangements. A 5-day orientation is also provided to give students a brief introduction to Europe before going to their jobs. Students wishing to remain in Europe longer can be placed in second jobs.

Any student between the ages of 17 and 27 may obtain a job application form, job listings and descriptions, and the SOS Handbook on earning your way in Europe by sending their name, address, education institution, and $1 (for printing, postage, addressing and handling) to either SOS - Student Overseas Services, Box 5173, Santa Barbara, Calif. 93108 or to S.O.S. - 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg - Europe.

Judge Declares BU Pucksters Eligible

BOSTON (AP) - A U.S. District Court judge ruled Tuesday in favor of two Canadian hockey players in their suit against the NCAA, the Eastern College Athletic conference and Boston University trustees.

In a decision which could have far reaching effects on U.S. intercollegiate hockey, Judge Joseph L. Tauro issued a restraining order, making Bill Buckton and Peter Carzo eligible to play for BU.

The two admitted they accepted room, board and expense money while attending high school and playing Junior B hockey in Ontario. However, they contended they did not accept money to play hockey and brought suit against the NCAA and ECAC, with BU trustees becoming part of the action to get a legal ruling.

The NCAA and ECAC rules bar Canadian hockey players who have accepted expense money in Junior B play. A player was declared ineligible at BU last season, and the team had to forfeit several games.

Judge Tauro restrained the NCAA and ECAC from declaring Buckton and Carzo ineligible and from imposing any sanctions against BU. An appeal is expected, but the judge ruled the two players eligible immediately.

He said the NCAA and ECAC rules imposed on BU conflict-one set for student-athletes who have played in this country, another for those who have played in Canada. "What concerns me is that we have a set of rules that are arbitrary," Judge Tauro said. "We can all agree that we don't have a flagrant case of professionalism. Suppose these boys went to Andover, Mass. Academy and got board, room and tuition. What's the difference."

BU Athletic Director Warren Schmakel said that Buckton and Carzo would continue to play with the Terriers.

"The only thing I was concerned about was the kids and the rest of the team," Schmakel said. "The last part of the ruling is important because the NCAA undoubtedly will appeal the finding. If it's decided the other way later, the BU team won't be penalized for having played these kids."

Eagle Sullivan Cited As NFL Offensive Star

By BRUCE LOWITT

NEW YORK (AP) - New York Giants Coach Alex Webster was glancing at the statistics. He got to Tom Sullivan's name and muttered: "That's your story right there."

It was about the only time anybody on the Giants got to Sullivan all day. Most of the time, Philadelphia's top running back stampeded them into submission, rushing for a career-high 156 yards.

But what really locked up the Eagles' 20-16 victory Sunday was his pass reception and ensuing run in the game's fading minutes.

His rushing, which included a three -yard dash for the decisive touchdown and several crucial third-down carries, plus that game-saving pass play, earned the second-year pro from Miami the selection Tuesday as The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

His big catch came after New York had cut a 20-6 Philadelphia lead to just four points and, with a stiffened defense, had forced the Eagles into a third-and-20 situation on their own 22-yard line with about three minutes to play. If the Eagles had to punt, the Giants would get the chance to drive for a go-ahead touchdown.

They never got it. Roman Gabriel faded back, found both his wide receivers with double coverage, then spotted Sullivan over the middle.

Gabe rifled a 10-yard pass, Sullivan caught it, slipped between two converging defenders, bounced off linebacker Pat Hughes and rumbled 19 yards more to the New York 49 before being tackled.

From then on it was just a matter of eating up the clock-which the Eagles did as Sullivan carried on six of the remaining eight plays.

Other offensive stars included Larry McCutcheon of Los Angeles, who rushed for 152 yards and caught five passes for 51 yards, Cincinnati's Ken Anderson, who passed for three touchdowns, Buffalo's O. J. Simpson, who rushed for 124 yards - 58 of them on a touchdown scamper and Minnesota's John Gilliam, who caught five passes for 139 yards including touchdowns of 54 and 30 yards.

Coach Censured For Using Women

By GEORGE STRODE

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The Ohio Conference called Oberlin Coach Dick Michaels on the carpet Tuesday for using women in men's intercollegiate competition for the second time this year.

The league prohibits women from competing in any sport.

Ohio Wesleyan University Athletic Director Bob Strimer charged Michaels with using two coeds in a cross-country meet against his school this fall.

Michaels had faced similar charges last spring for using women in a conference swimming meet. He was censured by the Ohio Conference Grievance Committee at that time.

Conference Commissioner Mike Cleary, one of six grievance committee members, said, "It's a pretty clear case. They've broken a conference rule."

The two women, whose names have not been disclosed, ran against Ohio Wesleyan, but Michaels contended they were only doing it as an exhibition. He said their finishes did not count in the team points.

Michaels said his 15-man squad voted unanimously to let coeds compete with them this season.

Cleary countered by saying, "Oberlin said they were running with the men because there was no women's programs at the school. That's their problem, not the conference's."

Senate Uncovers Evidence Of Drug Abuse

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Senate subcommittee has found "distressing evidence" of drug abuse among athletes, it as announced Monday.

Sen. Birch Bayh, chairman of the subcommittee to investigate juvenile delinquency, said that amphetamines-also known as "speed" and "pep pills"-and steroids appear to be the drugs most commonly used by athletes.

"Our hearings and other reports make it clear that athletes, including amateur athletes, are not immune from the drug abuse epidemic confronting the nation," he said, on releasing 840 pages of testimony on the subject.

He said reasons for drug abuse among athletes included group pressure to perform better, and fear that failure to use drugs would give their competitors the edge during games.

But the Indiana Democrat contended that "there is no therapeutic basis to justify their use by healthy individuals.

However, the subcommittee said it found little evidence that team officials made drugs available for athletes. Rather, it noted that educators, coaches and team physicians were concerned increasingly over the harmful effects drugs have on athletes, particularly the young.

Letters To The Sports Editor

Cross Country: "Inner Drive, Spirit, And Guts"

To The Sports Editor:

Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, Tom McGuire; the names might not ring a bell, but this is the name of the game in the gruelling sport of cross-country here at UMass. These three runners made-up the nucleus of one of if not the greatest cross-country teams in UMass history. Last year, the listed runners were good, and they knew it, but it took them, with an even higher level of achievement, one year to make the campus recognize their efforts.

As a former teammate in Indoor and Outdoor track of the runners, I personally can testify that these athletes have chosen an event in a sport which critically demands the utmost of the inner drive and spirit as well as guts to accomplish satisfying results. These guys have always had the will to accomplish goals, personal and team, which made it easy for a great distance coach such as Ken O'Brien to put together, not only the best team in the Yankee Conference or New England, but one of the three best teams on the entire east coast as well as one of the countries better teams.

Knowing that sports such as football, soccer, and lacrosse have dominated the fall sports scene I want to personally congratulate first, the Daily Collegian and Scott Hayes for finally giving more publicity to a team that greatly deserves it; secondly, the runners, who have shown the spirit of success by working together as a team, and finally, Coach O'Brien, who doesn't get as much satisfaction winning as he gets in seeing the personal success and recognition his runners earn and deserve.

One And Two Man Teams

It all started in 1909, way up in Dawson City. The Miners were still digging the yellow ore and the dance hall girls were still showing their garters every night at the Yellow Barrel Saloon. The Dawson City Klondikes made the Stanley Cup that year and even though they were royally deuced by the Ottawa Capitals, to the tune of 22-2 they went out in style. Just getting there by dogsled was bad enough.

You see even in the nether-nether days, when men were men and confusion was an unknown quantity, hockey writers and fans had the pernicious habit of defaming hockey teams by claiming that success was due to one or two blade-twirlers. In hockey's halcyon days of the '40's and '50's, when Montreal ruled the hockey wars, Maurice "the Rocket" Richard caused many supposedly knowledgeable sportsmen to brand the Canadiens as a one-man team. People forgot about the Blakes, the Lachs, the Reardons, the Reays, ad infinitum. To everyone Montreal was a team of one; "une equip d'un seul patineur."

Today the pattern has continued. Teams that win seldom receive all the credit when full credit is due. The detractors of winning teams have always taken great relish in inventing flurries of acrid excuses for a team's hard-earned laurels and the Boston Bruins affair is no exception.

It all started the day before the Bruins were set to face the Flying Frenchmen at the Garden, in a game they won two to one on Davey Forbes' foul tip. Claude Ruel, Canadiens chief scout, accused the Bruins of being a disgrace to NHL hockey. As he classically put it, "The Brüin, she 'ave a bad 'ockey team. She got Esposito and Horr and dat's it." Bep Guidolin lashed back at Ruel like you would lash back at any overgrown Frenchman. "If I didn't know better," said Guidolin, "I'd say that Ruel is making up for missing the playoffs. Anyway, those stupid Montreal papers would print anything." It's amazing the way people are like sheep, because since then everyone's been saying the same thing: the Bruins are a two-man team.

Well, there's no doubt that Orr and Esposito are the stars of the Bruins but when you rationalize a team's successes in that manner, it's just like excusing a loss with remarks like "if only they hadn't hit the goal post three times." In other words, once it's done it's done. The Bruins have Orr and Esposito, there's no use or logic involved in discussing non-facts or asking why the sun rises every day. To discuss the Bruins with the assumption that Orr and Esposito didn't play for them is as foolish as discussing the world situation with the assumption that the United States, or better yet, the American continent was never discovered. They are there, it's as simple as that.

Team sports really are an illusion of sorts; at least to the onlooker. Championship teams win because a group of human beings has busted their butts to emerge at the top of the sports mountain. But sadly, in the end, only a few of the media audience and those who produce the media on paper or in broadcasting who fail to realize that in team efforts a winner is created only when everyone produces at the peak of his capability. The Bruins proved that last season: no team can win with only one or two men producing.

Skaters Open At Home With Salem State

By BILL BALLOU

"Coach," I asked Jack Canniff last night at practice, "the entire campus community, and myself, would like to know who's starting in goal for you tomorrow night."

"So would I." he replied.

And that, friends, is the first question of many that have to be answered before anyone knows what kind of season to expect from the UMass hockey team.

It will be one of three men. Chick Rheault, John Binkoski, or Jeff McReynolds. Rheault, a star last year till he was hurt in a motorcycle accident, will be the regular once he's healthy. He may be healthy tonight, but it would seem more likely that either Binkoski or McReynolds will get the nod.

Both Binkoski, a senior, and McReynolds, a sophomore, have looked good in pre-season.

Of rather significant import is the UMass opponent. It's Salem State, a team that has never beaten UMass, but gave them fits in a 5-4 loss last year at the Lynn Arena.

The Vikings are in much the same boat as UMass. They're young, inexperienced, but potentially quite talented. They're always well-coached by Barry Urbanski and should be a tough opponent. They were 10-9 and made the playoffs last year.

Canniff plans to play six freshmen tonight, including one line composed entirely of frosh. That'll be the fourth line centered by Mike Merchant with wings Carl Burns and Jim Scanlon.

Other freshmen up front are Jim Dillon and Mark Sullivan.

Defensively, Canniff will go with one freshman, Tim Howes, who should fit right in with the inexperienced crew. Mike Ellis, a junior is the only backliner with any appreciable varsity experience. Robbie Quinlan played a little last year, but sophomore Dave Alesandroni and junior Bill Mintiens have no varsity experience at all.

Off pre-season performances it seems that UMass will score plenty of goals. They beat RPI's All-American Don Cutts four times, and scored five against BC's Ned Yetten. Both schools are tough Division I teams, so nine goals against them is a healthy output.

However they gave up 15 goals in the two games, and the pre-pre-season fear that the defense would be weak has thus far materialized. Sticking with one goalie, whoever it is, will help, since Canniff used a different goalie every period in the scrimmages.

The defense will be helped when Brian Mulcahy returns after Christmas, but the Minutemen are going to have to survive until that time.

So, if you're looking for the answer to question No. 1, or any of the others that this year's edition of UMass hockey promises to pose, tonight's a good chance to find out.

Game time at Orr Rink is 8:00 p.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian SPORTS

(Staff Photo-Al Chapman)

DON'T JUST STAND THERE! — SHOOT!....OR PASS? That's the ultimate question here. It's thesis vs. antithesis, and over the past two seasons the Minutemen have synthesized enough goals to become one of the top two teams in division two.

The Bookie And The Bettors

By RICH SEVIERI

First round draft picks, their lawyers, and the concessioners (stand owners) at Schaffer Stadium are not the only ones making money out of sports. Nor are expansion team owners, and the BU football program the only ones losing it. The following is a two-part article, continued in tomorrow's Collegian, about the others who make money on sport out of the real national past-time in our cities--Gambling.

Jimmy is a bookie in a residential area just north of Boston. There are according to Jimmy, more than a hundred bookmakers among the forty thousand people living in his district. To the clientele in the bar where he books he is seen as a legitimate businessman, like the corner druggist or neighborhood barber.

Thanksgiving week means a lot of action for Jim. His 25 to 35 regular "customers" will wager around five thousand dollars on various football and hockey games as well as on a few horses and the number pool.

"My average customers," says Jim, "bet about $50-75 bucks a week. This may be one of my biggest weekends. It rates right up there with New Years and the Superbowl."

Jimmy's cut is 25 per cent of the action, the money bet that is lost. A bookmaker can also work for 50 per cent of all the money wagered, but he would also be responsibile for paying off the winners.

Jim asks for a scrap of paper from my notebook and quickly does some mathematics. "So far this week" said Jim, pointing to the numbers on the paper, "1845 has been lost, that means my cut is 465." With the heavy weekend betting coming up that's good money? "Yeah", said Jim, "But I bet alot myself."

"I can't lose money myself", says Jim, "its impossible while working on 25 per cent of the losses." "I started booking," he continues, "because I was a heavy bettor and got to meet some influential people." Jim makes a gesture towards a heavyset man standing at the bar and explains that through this man he made his initial contacts.

Friday is payoff day for Jimmy as he accepts bets on the cuff most of the week. Two of his customers approach the table we are sitting at, money in their hands. Jim extracts a large roll of money from his pants pocket, takes the money handed to him, adds the new bills to the roll and puts it back in his pocket. The two customers sit at the table and join in the conversation.

One of the customers, Larry, had his holiday cider soured by dropping both the Dallas-Miami and Bruins-Philly games. The 1½ - 2 odds on the Bruins game meant that Philly was spotted a goal and a half and the Bruins had to win by two. The Bruins 4-2 victory is a "no winners" for the bookie. Philly lost by more than 1½ goals and the Bruins failed to win by more than 2 goals to beat the spread. The bookie always wins on ties.

Most of Jim's action after the football season will shift to hockey. According to Jim, "The Bruins are always favored at the Garden no matter who they are playing or how they have been playing themselves." He knows of no lines that are issued on the WHA or AHL.

Chris Shenckel on television remarking "how cute that Oklahoma cheerleader is," interrupts our conversation. Thanks to ABC Jimmy will get extra weekday "action". Both bettors and bookies agree that televising a sporting event increases bettor interest. Cosell's mouth may not be the only reason 30 million watch Monday night football. "Monday night is always my biggest night," said Jim, "Its the big bail out," added Larry.

Another of Jim's customers stands at the bar ogling the Sooner "cutie". He has $90 riding on Oklahoma and hopes to equal his best week of the season of 250 in winning's. The line on the Oklahoma-Nebraska at the beginning of the week was Oklahoma by 7. Alot of money goes on Oklahoma and at game-time Oklahoma is a 14 point favorite with the bookies.

"The amount of money bet determines the line," explains Jim. "It's the same as at the track where the amount wagered determines the odds on a horse. The home team is given 3 points automatically. Take the Ohio St.-Michigan game this weekend, the line is Ohio St. by 4 but they are actually a 7 point favorite, Michigan gets 3 points for being at home. The money wagered in each office determines the spread. It's usually within one or two points everywhere." he added.

WMUA

It's the time of the season for Minuteman hockey. Coach Jack Caniff's skaters are a young, inexperienced group, but they looked good at the B.C. scrimmage and they should provide for exciting hockey action. WMUA will be bringing you the best games of this squad starting tonight against Salem State. Game time is 8:00; air time 7:50. Join Russ Small, Bill Ballou and Paul Allen for all the action live. That's Minuteman hockey on WMUA. . . 91.1 FM.

Super Salesman

Every year around the middle of December, Russ Kidd steps into a phone booth outside Boyden, sheds his hockey coaching garb, gets into a car and becomes Super Salesman.

Kidd's the JV hockey coach and leg man for the hockey recruiting program.

"Jack (head coach Canniff's) the guy who controls the purse strings and takes care of the details and paperwork," Kidd explains, "I'm the guy who has to get out there and sell the kids on the idea of coming here."

He's been doing some pretty good selling, if this year's freshman crop is any indication. Six frosh will be playing for the yaristy in tonight's opener with Salem State. Some were the result of Kidd's digging, others Canniff's. But together they've produced one of the best freshmen crops UMass hockey's had.

It's not easy. UMass has to compete against other schools, and lots of them, with more elaborate programs, better facilities, and a higher grade of competition. The toughest recruiting opponent is BC.

"We've never beaten out BC for a player they really wanted since I've been here," says Kidd, and that includes plenty of bodies. The programs are similar, except on different levels. Both go after local talent.

"We're a state university and I think we have an obligation to kids from Massachusetts. Take a look at Bowling Green in Ohio; they've got like all Canadians and a couple of kids from New York. As far as kids from Ohio are concerned it might as well not be a state university."

"Besides, we've got to recruit on a shoestring. We just can't afford to go out of state."

Even so, it's tough to get the cream of the Massachusetts crop. Kidd and Canniff have to build up the UMass good points (which for a pro-minded hockey player are few) and brush over the bad.

"I hate even to have to mention the rink," says Kidd, "because when you tell a kid you can see the reaction. What I try to do is tell them what a good opportunity UMass is. It gives them a chance to play, the opportunity for a good education, and a good social life. You know this place has quite a reputation."

Unfortunately the reputation hasn't extended all the way up into Canada. The hockey program has at the present time just one Canadian in it, Paul Bannock, a defenseman who's currently on the JV roster.

"I'd like to see a couple, just a couple, of Canadians on the team," says Kidd. This is the first varsity team in quite a few years without at least one Canadian on it. Pat Keenan, UMass' all-time leading scorer, is a Canadian and Eric Scrafield, a forward of not much distinction a couple of seasons back was also a Canadian.

"We get lots of letters from Canadians," says Kidd, "and we always reply, but they generally want more than we can afford to give them."

The correspondence, though, pays off. Every so often a ringer walks through the door unexpectedly (somewhat less often than July snow). A good example is Jim Lyons, a sophomore forward who'll be playing tonight.

And something eventually comes of the 200 or so high school games Kidd sees every year. A Mike Merchant, for instance. "Now there's a guy," Kidd says, "who probably, because he was on a lousy team, didn't get the look he should have." Merchant, a freshman center, will play tonight on a line with two other frosh, Mike Scanlon and Carl Burns. He's a lot like Don Riley and could be a "find."

Kidd will add the two new junior leagues in New England to his itinerary, but doesn't think they're going to be very fertile.

"There aren't that many good high school players in them right now, and I don't think many will go. What will probably happen is most of the players will be guys out of high school who aren't playing anywhere else."

With a rink of their own (privately owned, though) past the "dream" into the "possible" stage, the recruiting picture would seem brighter. But even if things don't improve, facility-wise, Kidd doesn't have to worry. He could always sell vacuum cleaners.

UMass: Molding The Growth

By MARSHA VENUTI

While the past 10 years have seen tremendous physical growth at UMass, those days are over. The direction of the University will soon be towards remodeling, renovation, and making this a pedestrian campus.

H. Jack Littlefied, Director of Planning, told the Collegian that the decision to limit enrollment at the Amherst campus at 25,000 stopped building short. He said that after the four building projects that are now in progress are completed, all energies will be toward "the continuing need for campus improvements".

Right now construction continues on a new power plant, the Infirmiry addition, the Fine Arts Center, and Phase II of the Graduate Research Center which is two more towers.

"Our future will be renovation and remodeling older buildings rather than asking appropriations for new buildings," Littlefield said. "But we will build a modular project to house the people who are scheduled in a building that is being renovated." He said that there are plans for 60,000 gross square feet of modular facilities for this purpose.

"There is a long-standing plan for a pedestrian core to the campus," Littlefield told the Collegian. "The key point of this plan is to close North Pleasant Street to motor traffic from the Newman Center to the Graduate Research Center." By doing this, and eliminating all central parking lots, we can achieve that pedestrian core, he said.

In order to close North Pleasant Street, a replacement road must be provided and surrounding roads must be improved to absorb the redirected traffic, Littlefield said.

The town of Amherst has chosen a road that will connect with Rt. 116, allowing people to come from South Amherst to the University without using Main Street and going through the center of town. When this road is completed, the town will give UMass the deed to North Pleasant Street and it will be closed to traffic.

Another part of the plan to achieve a pedestrian core to the campus involves the elimination of all central parking lots, an improvement in the bus service, and increased safety of pedestrians, Littlefield said.

"Only one-third of the total of commuters use the off-campus bus service," he said. "We want to bring the bus to more doorsteps to encourage commuters not to bring their cars on campus at all." He said the total plan would mean the bus would bring the student or employee closer to any building than he could get his car. Therefore the bus service from the peripheral parking lots will also have to be improved, he said.

Littlefield said that in 1962 a land use plan for the campus was drawn up by the firm of Sasaki, Dawson, and DeMay. This plan, which stresses a pedestrian and academic core for the campus, has been the guideline for growth.

"The point of the plan was to use the land so as to retain as much open space as possible," Littlefield said. "Which is why we have so many high rise buildings.

"They may give you funny feelings about the horizon, but they give you more grass and trees," he said.

"Many of the things that we want are conflicting," Littlefield explained. He said that all 25 floors of the library could have been built in two floors the size of the main level, but all the open space by the pond would have had to be sacrificed.

"The area by the pond adds a quarter of a mile on to anyone's walk on this campus," Littlefield said. "But I think the students think it is worth it. I know the Trustees think it is worth it."

Littlefield said the Southwest is another example of conflicting interests. There was a desire to make the residential area near the core of the campus but also to house a large number of students. It was a question of building up or out, and each way answers some problems and not others, according to Littlefield.

"Looking in retrospect," he said about Southwest, "I think we should have provided for more variety, more changes, more options."

Littlefield has been here since 1964. He explained that the University has gotten one major building appropriation and some support money per year from the state. As a result the school grew and took on more students. Now the State College system had developed to the point where it can absorb a larger share of state students and a ceiling could be put on UMass enrollment and growth.

DuBois Papers Treasured

By M.G. COLLINS

Since May, the University has become the owner of a vast amount of material accumulated by the late W.E. B. Dubois, one of the greatest minds of the twentieth century and the leading black intellectual of his time. This legacy has become generally known as the "DuBois Papers".

"I don't know of anything I've done in my life that I'm most proud of as this," Chancellor Bromery said of his role in acquiring of the papers.

Herbert Aptheker, historian and executor of the DuBois estate, stated in a press release to the New Yorker magazine, "The University of Massachusetts will be a Mecca for scholars in DuBois for years to come - as long as the Unviersity lasts."

The American Legion has censured the University for paying $150,000 for the papers of an avowed Communist.

What are the DuBois papers?

William Edward Burghardt DuBois was the foremost black intellectual of his time. An educator, sociologist, philosopher, editor and author, DuBois pioneered the development of Black Studies in the United States. He was one of the founders of the NAACP and an impassioned exponent of complete equality for black Americans.

Disgusted with the racial and political situation in the United States, his later years were spent in Ghana collating materials for the Encyclopedia Africana at the invitation of Kwame Nkrumah. In Africa, DuBois verbally renounced his U. S. citizenship and gradually adopted a Communist ideology. DuBois died in 1963 at the age of ninety-five.

The DuBois collection now at UMass consists of over 75,000 items - manuscripts, correspondence, medals, tapes, degrees, citations and photographs - an aggregate of information compiled by DuBois since he was nine. The importance of this collection is incalculable not only from the standpoint of black history but because DuBois' papers span the entire field of historical achievement from 1890 to 1963.

Correspondence in the collection includes letters from such world figures as Sherwood Anderson, Pearl Buck, Ralph Bunche, Calvin Coolidge, Albert Einstein, Mahatma Ghandi, Marcus Garvey, Sinclair Lewis, Eugene O'Neill, Paul Robeson, George Bernard Shaw, Upton Sinclair and H. G. Wells to name but a few. The collection also includes many complete manuscripts never published before by DuBois.

These papers are now in the custody of the library's Archives and acquisitions section where they are maintained in a special room at a specific temperature and humidity. Many of the papers, says Ms. Katherine Emerson of Archives and Acquisitions, are carbons or written on cheap paper and are very frail due to their age.

The appraised value of the collection is in excess of 400,000 dollars, according to Chancellor Bromery.

Ms. Leone Stein, director of the University of Massachusetts Press, became aware of the availability of the papers at a conference co-sponsored by the Association of American University Press and the National Endowment for the Humanities in 1968. Chancellor Bromery contacted DuBois' widow to inquire about the papers. He discussed them with her on and off, for two years until Ms. DuBois came to UMass to dedicate the Department of Black Studies in honor of her late husband.

Frank Blasts Apostola At Senate Meeting

By BRIAN COYNE

Joseph Frank, chairman of the English department, read a letter to the Student Senate last night castigating SGA President Nick Apostola for his support of a committee report of the Faculty Senate which called for an alternative to the Rhetoric requirement, and questioning Apostola's ability to continue as president.

The senate took no action on Frank's letter, nor was there any discussion of impeachment of Apostola.

The reason for Frank's displeasure with Apostola was that during the entire Rhetoric requirement controversy last year, Apostola went on record as opposed to any type of requirement for students. The proposal to abolish the rhetoric requirement was defeated by the Faculty Senate last year. This year, the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate issued a minority report, calling for a written English competency test for incoming Freshmen as a substitution for the rhetoric requirement, which Apostola concurred with.

In his letter, Frank said Apostola "sacrificed his own principles to political expediency," in reversing his position and supporting the competency test. Apostola replied that he did support the committee report for the sake of political expediency, and went on to say that he did not trust the English department's promise to advocate the abolition of the rhetoric requirement this year.

In other business, the senate appointed the Food Services Governing Board as the official student representative in the search for a new Food Services Director; recommended a change in the election schedule of the Town of Amherst to better coincide with the schedules of UMass, and Hampshire Colleges; recommended to the Chancellor that the University remain open during intersession.

The senate heard a presentation from Eric Walgren, a local political activist which would move back registration deadlines and town primaries about two weeks. This would provide more campaign time while the universities were in session. Last year, Amherst held town elections while UMass was in spring recess. The elections are scheduled about ten days after students return, which, in Walgren's opinion, is not enough time for adequate campaigning. The senate voted unanimously in favor of Walgren's revised timetable.

UMass. now has women's varsity field hockey, swim, ski, basketball, softball, gymnastics, and volleyball teams.

AIAW And Women's Sports Involve Every UMass Woman

By ALISON SIMCOX

UMass has been a charter member of the A.I.A.W. (Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) since its formation in January of 1972. This organization, which runs all national championships, is the same as the N.C.A.A. (National Collegiate Athletic Association) for men. An Eastern Association for Women's Athletics (EIAW) encompassing the middle atlantic and Northeastern states runs regional championships.

In many sports such as gymnastics, qualification in regional championships is required before an athlete is eligible for the national championships. UMass now holds the national championship for women's gymnastics.

The organization originally prohibited all athletic scholarships and recruitment programs. Although recruitment is still prohibited, they were forced to change their position on scholarships when brought under suit last January. That suit came as a result of claims from some students in Florida that they were not being allowed to compete in intercollege sports because they were on athelic scholarships.

Three years ago UMass established the Women's Sports Committee, composed of one elected student representative and coach from each sport to recommend policy and procedures to Dr. Spears, head of the Women's Athletic Department and Mr. Frank McInerney, head of the Department of Athletics. This committee is housed in the Department of Physical Education under the Department of Athletics.

This year two sub-committees of the Women's Sports Committee have been formed, the Scholarship Committee and the Awards Committee.

The Scholarship Committee is comprised of four members. Jean Abrahamson is the only student member. Its purpose is to research national standards, AIAW and the two other main organizations of women's sports's policies and positions on scholarships and to make suggestions to the Women's Athletics Council. The committee has not given out any scholarships yet. Ms. Abrahamson emphasized that "it is all just in the making".

The Awards Committee was set up to propose to the council types of awards, if any, and to whom awards should be given. At present men are given a choice between three awards — a mug, UMass jacket or letter sweater. Women receive no awards.

Funds for scholarship programs will come largely from gate receipts, which in the past were only brought in from men's sporting events.

Jane Farr, coach of the women's basketball team and an active member on the Women's Sports Committee, said that admission policies will remain comparable to the men's, free for all UMass students and specified for others. Last spring admission was charged for some basketball games, gymnastics and the swim team are beginning to charge. Just about all sports have the perogative and, according to Ms. Farr, it seems to be only a matter of time before they follow suit.

The AIAW is against active recuitment so UMass will have to get along without it. To compensate, clinics have been set up, and will continue to be, to bring local high school teams into contact with the university's athletic teams. Exhibitions are also given at various high schools.

UMass now has women's varsity field hockey, swim, ski, basketball, softball, gymnastics, and volleyball teams. Volleyball is new to varsity this year.

Ms. Pat Griffin, coach of the swim team, sees "more talent in the water this year than we have ever had" and "a general growth motivation for women's sports."

Jane Farr, speaking on behalf of the council, said "we will continue to have women athletes choose a college or university because of their program offerings, not because of any financial rewards we can give them".

Motorists Ignore Speed Limits

By MARK VOGLER

Many motorists are not observing newly posted speed limits to cope with the current energy crisis.

On a strip of 420 miles of turnpikes and major highways from Amherst to Wash. D.C. Sunday, 618 cars were observed "speeding".

While enroute to the nation's capitol, the Collegian noted the number of vehicles that passed a staff car which was travelling approximately 50 mph.

Even though speeding violations were apparent, there were several motorists who demonstrated a concern for conserving fuel. The Collegian passed 170 vehicles while going at the posted speed limits.

The speed limit was most noticeably ignored on a 27 mile stretch from Route 91 in Northampton to the Connecticut state line where 61 autos exceeded the lawful speed.

Fifty six miles later in New Haven, Connecticut, 138 cars had been observed over the speed limit, 195 had passed the Collegian at Greenwich.

While the greater number of motorists were observed traveling over the speed limits on the Garden State Parkway and New Jersey Turnpike, a greater number of cars were abiding by the established speed limits.

Many of the passing vehicles stayed in line with Collegian car before accelerating and passing, possibly indicating feeling of guilt on the part of speeding motorists.

Other motorists tail-gated slower cars traveling in the outer lanes, high-beaming and horn-blowing before moving on. Some of the motorists who were observing limits warned passing vehicles of recent energy crisis measures by returning a few horn blasts.

Sunday marked what could be the final day of uninhibited weekend traveling. President Nixon then ordered a nation-wide ban on the Sunday sale of gasoline to go into effect when Congress enacts emergency legislation.

Papers With A History

DuBois for the papers was signed last May. The contract stipulates that Ms. DuBois receive $150,000 for the papers over the next ten years. Chancellor Bromery emphasizes that Ms. DuBois did not personally demand renumeration for the collection but her lawyers requested the fee to protect her interests. The Chancellor also specified that the money for the fee came out of special univeristy funds attached to the Chancellory and not out of the taxpayers pocket.

Only $7,500 of the contract has been paid so far and there is an active search for a private institution to pick up the tab. Specifically, a grant to cover restoration and indexing of the collection has been filed with the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Chancellor insists that payment for a collection of this magnitude is not unusual and does not necessarily set a precedent.

Nor does he anticipate the $150,000 fee will block future donations to the University archives collection. Bromery is confident he will have funds to support the restoration of the papers in "three to five months".

Why did Ms. DuBois choose UMass as the depository for collection? DuBois' connection with the school is tenuous. Educated at Fisk and Harvard, DuBois taught at Wilberforce and Atlanta Universities. DuBois' only connection with UMass is that he is a Massachusetts native, born in nearby Great Barrington.

Chancellor Bromery cited this as one reason why Ms. DuBois wanted the collection here. Since the Black Studies Department was named after her husband and that state universities have more permanence than private institutions also influenced Ms. DuBois decision.

When the contract with Ms. DuBois was signed, two thirds of the material to be transferred here was with Dr. Aptheker in New York. Chancellor Bromery traveled to Egypt last summer to retrieve the other third and after much difficulty with the Egyptian authorities he took the material out of Egypt and to the UMass archives.

According to Bromery, the Egyptian government is extremely sensitive about manuscripts and antiquities leaving the country and it was only when Dr. Bromery implied that he was related to DuBois did the Egyptians release the documents.

Still to be acquired for the DuBois collection, is a bust of DuBois which is with the sculptor in London and DuBois' library, containing many first editions, which are located in Ghana. Neither Bromery nor Ms. DuBois know if the library still exists and inquries are currently being made. The acquisition of the library is, along with the bust, a gift of Ms. DuBois to the University outside the terms of the contract. The Chancellor plans to meet with Ms. DuBois in Ghana and negotiate for the library's release if it can be found and is still intact.

Future plans for the collection are centered on restoring the documents which will cost approximately $60,000 and take two years. The papers will be microfilmed for display as they are catalogued. The University Press has recently released the first volume of the projected twelve editions. It consists of unpublished correspondence from the DuBois collection and a compilation of ten of his speeches on black education.

Dr. Bromery, in his quest for funds hopes the endowment is large enough to pay for the acquisition and restoration of the papers as well as a display of DuBois memorabilia and scholarly studies of the collection.

Kleindienst: No Hand In 'Knee' Arrests

By TOM BRETTINGEN
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Former U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst testified Wednesday that he had no personal hand in determining who was indicted as a result of the armed confrontation last year at Wounded Kneee, S.D.

Kleindienst, who resigned as attorney general last June during the Watergate disclosures, also denied telling newsmen that the Justice Department was using sealed indictments to spur negotiations with the Indian activists.

The testimony came during a pretrial hearing in federal court on a defense motion seeking dismissal of all indictments against the Wounded Knee defendants. More than 100 persons are charged with crimes ranging from assault to conspiracy in the 71-day occupation of the South Dakota reservation village.

Kleindienst was subpoenaed by the defense because of a quotation attributed to him in news reports March 28 from Phoenix, Ariz. He was quoted as saying the government was using the threat of indictments as a bargaining tool.

The defense contends this reflects the government's "bad faith prosecution," one of several grounds listed in its motion for dismissal.

The defense maintains the government is prosecuting selectively against American Indian Movement members, and is prosecuting them in an effort to hinder the group's activities.

"I made no decisions regarding the issuance of indictments with respect to persons at the Wounded Knee site," Kleindienst said.

Are We Next?

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) - Plymouth State College said Wednesday it would delay the start of its spring semester from Jan. 28 to Feb. 4 to save fuel.

President Harold E. Hyde said the "winterim" session between-term activities would go on as planned from Jan. 2 through Jan. 25 as long as enough students took part.

UMass is made of many things, but mostly it's just plain mud...

New England Hurts For Local Vet Schools

If you are a student at UMass with at least average intelligence, a cumulative average of 3.0 or better, and a desire to attend graduate school, then you probably have a better than 50-50 chance of going on to higher education.

That is, unless you are a pre-veterinarian major in the Animal Science Dept. In that case, the odds are 40 to 1 against you.

While there are only 18 colleges of veterinary medicine in the United States, none are located in New England. In 1970-71, 73 per cent of first-year veterinary students were residents of states with a veterinary college; 21 per cent were residents of states having regional agreements with other states, and 2.4 per cent (35 students) were from New England.

Therefore, pre-vet students from New England must apply to veterinary colleges which can only accept a token number of out-of-state applicants.

At UMass, pre-vet majors are no longer willing to accept what they consider to be tokenism. Realizing the odds for higher education are getting tougher each year, over 100 students have already joined the UMass Pre Vet Club this year.

The club is actively supporting the passage of Massachusetts Senate Bill S-92. If passed, the bill would provide land and buildings for the extablishment of a regional school of veterinary medicine. It would be located near the UMass Medical School at Worcester, and be used by the six New England States.

According to Jim Fleming, club president, the club has contacted State Senator John Conte, originator of bill S-92, to discover what can be done to ensure passage of the bill.

Presently, the club is circulating a petition in the Amherst area to support Senate Bill S-92. Club members are contacting their representatives to urge passage of the bill.

The problem facing many New England pre-vet majors is stated by the New England Board of Higher Education.

"Among the 18 colleges, only two have regularly offered much hope for aspiring New England veterinarians, those at Cornell University and the University of Pennsylvania. The result is that countless interested students are discouraged from even applying to veterinary school; students whose only disqualification is the fact that they are from New England."

Food Services Investigated

In response to the outrageous number of student complaints dealing with the University Food Services, a 3-part series has been prompted.

During the past three months, Mike Kneeland, Mark Citron, Jerry Lazar, Scott Bacherman and Cindy Gonet have been investigating various aspects of the Food Service.

Below, the first of their reports is filed.

That Joel Stoneham would lose his job as food director seemed inevitable.

The signs were there: widespread student discontent with the quantity and quality of dining commons food; reports of the University administration's dissatisfaction with Stoneham's managing abilities; and a well-liked man named Ken Dean who had "worked with" Stoneham on a study of his department.

Nevertheless, when Stoneham was recently notified that his contract would not be renewed, he was admittedly surprised and visibly shaken. His supervisor, Vice Chancellor Thomas Campion, did not publicly state the reasons for his actions.

Joel Stoneham was not a perfect administrator; he had certain inadequacies.

In the aftermath of Stoneham's "firing", however, many observers are asking if it was due to his individual performance of duties, or if he was a victim of uncontrollable circumstances.

Stoneham himself would argue the latter. Indeed his modest office in the Worcester dining Commons reinforced his positions. Hanging from the walls were large graphs titled "Food Crisis, 1973." The wavy lines, which traced the cost of food by each month, pointed up and up.

When students visited the easily accessible Stoneham, and complained about the service they were getting for the price, he had merely to point to the ominous graphs. For the students, it was hard to argue with such reality staring them in the face.

Joel Stoneham

Other Stoneham sympathizers point to the students' present attitudes to advance their "victim of circumstances" defense. They say that with the end of the Vietnam War, attentions could more easily focus on matters closer to home, matters which would have seemed trivial to them while thousands were dying in Southeast Asia.

Students were dissatisfied further through an unusual source, the courts. With the voting and drinking age being lowered to 18, students felt, and still feel, that they can not be legally forced to buy meal tickets. Current legal precedence, though, does not seem to support them. The result...more vocal complaints concerning a circumstance Stoneham could probably not control.

Anti-Stonehamists say only he is to blame for his present circumstance. Although administrators say Stoneham had remarkable purchasing abilities, such people as Rick Sevini, Chairman of Rents and Fees, say there were certain budget deficiencies.

Stoneham initially maintained that he was illegally fired. He said that although Vice Chancellor Campion gave him at least six months notice as required by law, the reasons for the non-renewal of his contract were communicated verbally, not written as required.

Behind the scenes at the Faculty Club, Stoneham decided to fight the administration. He attempted to solicit the aid of former bigwheels Dean Field and Warren Gulcko. The two men decided not to actively support Stoneham.

Thus, Stoneham's bid to keep his job of seven years had failed. He is now resolved to accept his present position as a "handy-man" until his contract officially expires next year.

An affable man who is active with community youth, Stoneham also felt that a prolonged fight by him might jeopardize the jobs of some of his subordinates. This he did not want.

But Stoneham's future is far from bleak. Already some companies have offered him positions, saying they have confidence in his abilities.

Watergate Tapes:

No New Erasures

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House lawyer said Wednesday technicians told him there are other conversationless spots on subpoenaed White House Watergate tapes, but the spots represented no new erasures in the tapes.

Lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt told a federal court that the spots were discovered by technicians using an oscilloscope while making copies of the tapes for the court.

It was Buzhardt who last week disclosed to U. S. District Judge John J. Sirica that an 18-minute gap existed on a crucial Watergate tape.

He testified Wednesday after Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's personal secretary for 23 years, completed three days on the stand without shedding further light on how the 18 minutes of conversation vanished from the tape.

Buzhardt said also that it was three months after he received a memorandum from the special Watergate prosecutor on the subpoena of presidential tapes before he read it carefully enough to determine the subpoena included the tape of the June 20 presidential conversation with H. R. Haldeman.

He said the spots were not surprising because White House tape machines once used to record Nixon's conversations were actuated by sound, but not necessarily by conversation only.

Leonard Garment, who represented the White House told the court he was concerned that Buzhardt's reply to questions about the spots might be misconstrued by newsmen to mean there were additional gaps on the subpoenaed tapes.

Buzhardt was asked if he knew of any new "erasure, mutilation, alteration, obliteration, gap, missing conversation or any deletion" on any of the tapes.

"No, I do not," he replied.

"There are times that the tape is running but there is no identifiable sound," Buzhardt said. Tape-recording machines could be kept running by the rumbling of a nearby truck or a ticking clock and the instruments on the machine would show no voice" he said.

THROUGH FOR THE YEAR--Senate Watergate Committee Chairman Sam Ervin, D-N.C., and Vice Chairman Howard Baker, R-Tenn., tell newsmen on Capitol Hill Tuesday the committee has voted to cancel all further public hearings this year. The committee decided to broaden its investigation by seeking to subpoena a new list of presidential tape recordings.

Senate Votes Saxbe Attorney General

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Wednesday passed, 75 to 16, a bill intended to make Sen. William B. Saxbe, R-Ohio, constitutionally eligible for appointment as attorney general.

President Nixon has held up submission of Saxbe's nomination awaiting passage of the legislation, which now goes to the House.

Saxbe now is ineligible because in 1969, shortly after he came to the Senate, the salary of the attorney general and other Cabinet members was increased from $35,000 a year to $60,000.

The Constitution provides that no member of Congress shall, during the term for which he was elected, be appointed to an office for which the salary was increased during that time.

The bill the Senate passed attempts to clear this barrier to Saxbe's nomination by rolling the salary of the attorney general back to $35,000.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., the assistant majority leader, argued the administration measure is an indirect attempt to amend the Constitution.

"The constitutional prohibition against the appointment of Mr. Saxbe is complete, final, absolute, and beyond remedy by legislation," he said.

Sens. Roman L. Hruska, R-Neb., Hiram L. Fong, R-Hawaii, Alan Cranston, D-Calif., and others countered that the bill meets the intent and the spirit of the constitutional provision.

With the salary of the attorney general rolled back, they said, Saxbe does not stand to benefit from the increase provided in 1969.

However, Byrd won adoption by an 87-0 vote of an amendment under which a challenge to the constitutionality of Saxbe's appointment would be heard by a three-judge court with a direct appeal to the Supreme Court.

Byrd said there is little doubt of a court test of Saxbe's appointment, if he is confirmed by the Senate, and this would cast a shadow over his actions as attorney general.

Nixon announced on his intention to nominate Saxbe on Nov. 1, after Elliot L. Richardson resigned as attorney general rather than carry out the President's order to fire special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

In Greece... Business As Usual

By PAUL ANASTASSIADES
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS (AP) — Governments come and go in Greece, but life in the noisy tavernas and bouzouki clubs scarcely misses a beat.

"What difference does it make to us who is in power?" asked a merchant seaman on leave in Athens. "They're all the same bunch of profiteers, and all we should care about is our pay, our soccer, our eating and drinking, and our women."

Drink had mellowed the thoughts of the seaman, but a look around showed many others shared his casual view of the military coup Sunday that ousted President George Papadopoulos and installed Lt. Gen. Phaedon Gizikis as president.

In the picturesque taverna and bouzouki club center of Plaka at the foot of the Acropolis in the old city of Athens, the music blared, the tables were full and the dancers made Zorba look like a novice.

Night life in the capital had been in rare hibernation with a week of curfews imposed during the antigovernment rioting that preceded the coup. But one taverna owner said Monday night: "They've all poured back as if they haven't eaten in a year."

Many Greeks seemed delighted by the coup, not so much out of fondness for the still mysterious new rulers but out of discontent with the Papadopoulos regime.

"The dirty old...," said an expressive taxi driver. "They got him with the same medicine he got others."

Work and pay remained the major question for others.

House Balks On Campaign Financing

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Rules Committee voted Wednesday that the House should in effect reject a Senate - passed plan for federal financing of presidential and congressional campaigns.

Later, several top House Democrats huddled in an effort to work toward a compromise with the Senate that would keep the presidential portion while eliminating the congressional part. It was understood that Senate and House Democratic leaders planned to meet on a compromise approach Thursday before the scheduled House vote.

The Rules Committee urged that the House simply refuse even to go to a compromise seeking conference with the Senate on the full debt ceiling bill because the Senate put campaign financing amendments on it.

Hijackers Arrested

By HOLGER JENSEN
Associated Press Writer

DUBAI (AP) - Three Arab hijackers who flew around the eastern Mediterranean for 68 hours in a commandeered Dutch jumbo jet released their 11 hostages Wednesday and walked into the arms of waiting police.

Authorities said later they were "in custody" but their fate remained unclear.

The surrender ended an erratic trip that began Sunday when the three young pirates took command of the plane over Iraq. Their hopscotch search for refuge covered 7,000 air miles and underscored the Arab world's new hostility to hijackers.

Most governments refused to allow the KLM Boeing 747 to land at their airports and denied sanctuary to the hijackers. They forced the plane to land in Syria, Cyprus, Libya, Malta - where they released the passengers and stewardesses - and twice in Dubai on the Persian Gulf.

They were denounced by Palestinian guerrilla leaders, even though their stated goal was to strike a blow against Israel and halt Dutch support of the Jewish state.

Responding to their demands, the Dutch government pledged that KLM would not fly war supplies to Israel and that Dutch volunteers in the Israeli army risked losing their citizenship.

An announcement from Amsterdam said the surrender was negotiated on a three-way telephone link between Dubai airport, XLM headquarters in Amsterdam and the Dutch Foreign Ministry in The Hague.

The Dubai government said the hijackers asked to be treated kindly, not imprisoned and not sent out of the country. Sources said Dubai had agreed to let them talk with a representative of the Dutch government, but gave no other details.

Officials refused to divulge what kind of deal, if any, had been made for the release of 10 Dutch crew members and A.W. Witholt, a vice president of KLM who had boarded the plane in Malta as an additional hostage.

Airport officials said the $37 million jumbo jet appeared undamaged and a fresh KLM crew was on its way to fly it out of this small sheikdom.

In Amsterdam, KLM President Sergio Orlandini told newsmen the crew members were "in reasonably good condition."

Nine of them had been on the plane since it took off from Amsterdam Sunday bound for Tokyo.

RELEASED PASSENGERS LEAVE--A Maltese official waves to busload of released passengers from a hijacked Dutch jumbo jet Tuesday after the plane refuelled on Valletta, Malta, for a flight to a still-secret destination. The passengers, 250 including crew members, were released in exchange for two hostages--a vice-president of the airlines and an Egyptian charge d'affaires in Malta.

Govt. To Hire 250 Oil Execs

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton said Wednesday petroleum executives will be called to government services in December as the administration prepares to exercise wide-ranging control program over the nation's fuel distribution.

Morton said he still hopes direct gasoline rationing can be avoided, but he said the expertise of the industry executives is needed "in petroleum distribution planning" for the next six months.

Morton said about 250 executives would be recruited to become "special government employes" early in December.

The House Commerce Committee completed its hearings Wednesday on legislation to give President Nixon emergency powers to impose rationing, speed limits and shorter workdays to save the nation's fuel and keep the energy shortage from creating an economic recession.

In his news conference, Morton announced two steps his department has taken to increase the nation's fuel supplies over the long run:

-The leasing of six tracts of federal lands, two each in Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, for commercial development of oil from shale, a type of rock.

-Asked the Justice Department to take the final legal steps in preparation for issuing federal permits to build the long-delayed trans-Alaska oil pipeline.

He said the pipeline permits may be available in about 14 days. The Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., a consortium of seven oil companies building the pipeline, can get the permits as soon as it pays the costs of the government's environmental study of the project.

But Morton warned that Japan, hard hit by the sudden cutoff of oil from Arab nations, must not expect to get much oil from Alaska.

"We are absolutely dedicated to the proposition that U.S. oil exports woud continue at the historical level, which has been a very, very small per cent, like two-hundredths of one per cent," Morton said.

Asked about his earlier prediction of gasoline rationing by January, Morton said: "We are making better progress than I though we would" on conservation of gasoline and home heating oil. He also credited unusually warm weather.

Morton declined comment on published reports that the President's Cabinet-level energy group, of which he is a member, was losing interest in the idea of a high gasoline tax and leaning toward rationing.

After the group met Tuesday night, its members were reported nearing the conclusion that a tax could not be legislated or applied quickly enough to cut gasoline use the 30 per cent deemed necessary.

Morton said gasoline is already being conserved to some extent, particularly on the highways.

His remark was supported by news that some states are halting Sunday gasoline sales, as requested by the President, along their major turnpikes.

Oil Embargo Continues

Arabs Adamant

By ELIAS ANTAR
Associated Press Writer

ALGIERS (AP) — Arab kings and presidents decided Wednesday to use every means at their disposal, including the oil squeeze, to win their confrontation with Israel.

The leaders said there will never be peace in the Middle East until two basic conditions are met — "Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territory, especially Jerusalem, and restoration of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

Israel has consistently rejected both demands.

The demands were included in a statement ending the three-day summit, the first such parley since the end of the October Middle East war. The summit was meant to tighten Arab ranks for a peace conference with Israel tentatively scheduled for Dec. 18 in Geneva.

But Iraq and Libya boycotted the meeting because they oppose peace with Israel, and King Hussein of Jordan only sent envoys because he wanted to avoid face-to-face disagreement with the Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

The leaders kept their resolutions secret but gave maximum publicity to their resolve to continue holding back oil from countries they consider unfriendly — and to open the taps for pro-Arab nations.

The Arab oil-producing nations have cut back production 25-30 per cent, raising fears of a fuel crisis this winter in the United States, Japan and Europe. Moreover, they have slapped a total embargo on the United States and Holland because of policies considered particularly pro-Israeli.

In a move designed to put addition pressure on those who support Israel, they decided to cut production at least 5 per cent more each month. But the oil sheiks have granted a one-month suspension of this measure for Japan, the Philippines and the Common Market countries, except Holland, in recognition for pro-Arab statements.

The Real Weather

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Depending upon where you live, the National Weather Service issued both good and bad news about the upcoming winter's weather for a nation facing major fuel restrictions.

"The Midwest, much of the South, and parts of the Northeast are estimated to have a 60 per cent chance of enjoying a milder winter than normal."

"Temperatures along the East Coast, in the Central Great Plains, and in the deserts of the Great Basin are rated a toss-up, with an equal likelihood of going either way."

But scientists of the agency - an arm of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration - admitted they couldn't say how much colder or milder the winter might be in the areas listed.

The Energy Crunch

Slow... But Alive

CHICAGO (AP) - The National Safety Council says President Nixon's proposals to conserve gasoline could save as many as 14,000 lives a year on the nation's highways.

Vincent L. Tofany, Safety Council president, said Wednesday the proposed 15 per cent cutback in the availability of gasoline and lower speed limits could reduce the annual traffic fatality toll by as much as 20 to 25 per cent.

The safety council said 56,600 persons were killed in traffic accidents last year.

Tofany said that Safety Council statistics indicate that speed limits lowered to 50 miles per hour for cars and 55 for trucks could save as many as 9,000 lives.

"Coupled with the 5,000 lives that could be saved from a 10 per cent reduction in mileage," said Tofany, "about 14,000 lives could be saved next year as a result of the two gasoline conservation proposals."

The 9,000 life-saving figure, he said, assumes 75 per cent compliance with new speed limits.

City Trash: What A Gas

By C.G. McDANIEL
AP Science Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - University of Illinois scientists say they have developed a process cities can use to convert garbage into methane gas at a profit.

The process could provide 5 to 10 per cent of a city's gas needs, said Dr. John T. Pfeffer, professor of sanitary engineering at the unversity's Urbana campus.

He said in an interview that such a plant could be built within two years.

Environmental engineers John C. Liebman and Edward S.K. Chian worked with Pfeffer on the process which they demonstrated in their laboratories.

Under their method cities would shred municipal garbage and then remove glass, metal and other inert materials, some of which can be recycled.

The remaining garbage would be fermented, producing methane gas which can be used for fuel and carbon dioxide which can be sold for making dry ice.

If municipalities provide their collected garbage free to a conversion plant, sale of the gas could produce a profit of between 50 cents and $1 per ton of garbage, Pfeffer estimates.

Top-Level Advice: Proper Allocation

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A high-level government assessment of the fuel shortage's economic impact concludes that a recession can be avoided next year with proper fuel-allocation policies.

Nixon administration economists see the unemployment rate going up from its present 4.5 per cent but falling short of the 6 per cent rate forecast widely by private economists.

"There are some difficult days ahead on unemployment," said one government study. He refused to give a precise estimate but said the jobless rate would be under 6 per cent.

The 1974 picture on inflation is cloudier. The economic slowdown expected next year will help moderate some price increases, but fuel prices will probably advance sharply, the government economists believe.

With the stock market in a tailspin, the administration will try to calm some of the uncertainty at a news conference Thursday scheduled by Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. The uncertainty has been fueled by fears the economy will slide into a recession next year with the jobless rate going to 8 per cent.

Only if the consumer bears the heaviest burden of the shortage can a recession be avoided, the economists concluded. A decline in economic production is possible if industry is cut back any more, they say.

So far, the energy crisis has had its toll on jobs, putting thousands out of work in the auto, chemical, construction and textile industries. Travel and recreation industries also are expected to be hard hit.

Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton tried to allay the fears at a news conference Wednesday, saying the stock market "in its normal, over-sensitive way is overreacting."

Morton said that if the nation cooperates in the fuel-conservation measures announced by the government, "we will minimize the impact on jobs."

Stations Lock-Up

Never On Sunday

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sunday drivers using state turnpike systems will be faced with closed fuel pumps in many areas starting this weekend.

An Associated Press survey showed that turnpike service stations in at least four states — Maine, Pennsylvania, New York and Florida — will sell no gas between 9 p.m. Saturday and midnight Sunday and fuel will be rationed in a fifth state, New Jersey.

The closing plans are in response to President Nixon's request for a voluntary ban on Sunday sales of gasoline. The Emergency Allocation Act now pending in Congress would empower Nixon to make such closings mandatory.

A spokesman for the Maine Turnpike Authority, which has six service stations along its 100-mile length, said stations would stay open to provide emergency services on Sunday "but will bag their pumps and not sell gas."

The story was the same in Pennsylvania. A turnpike commission spokesman said Wednesday that the 28 service stations on the road will close their pumps between 9 p.m. Saturday and midnight Sunday beginning this weekend.

Any vehicle running out of fuel on the 470-mile toll road will be given enough gasoline or diesel fuel to reach the next turnpike exit, the spokesman said.

The New York State Thruway authority banned all gas sales from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday and said any motorist who runs out will have to pay for an emergency supply instead of getting it free as had been the practice.

The Florida Department of Transportation said service stations on the state's 265-mile turnpike will remain open for repair service only on Sundays and that if a motorist runs out of gas, he'll be given only enough to get to the next exit.

In Massachusetts, turnpike authority chairman John T. Driscoll said all 11 service stations on the highway will be open 24 hours a day, seven days a week as usual.

Driscoll told the oil companies which operate the stations that turnpike authority regulations require that the stations stay open.

Service stations on the 236-mile Kansas Turnpike also will remain open for the time being, a spokesman said.

Govt. May Enforce Use Of Seat Belts

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Department of Transportation Wednesday proposed giving incentive payments to states that require automobile drivers and passengers to use their seat belts.

The grants would range from 10 per cent to 25 per cent of a state's regular federal haighway safety appropriation, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said.

That appropriation is determined by a state's population and by its road mileage. California traditionally gets the largest amount - it is eligible for $6.1 million in fiscal year 1974 - while several states qualify for the lowest amount of $381,000.

One law would require all front seat occupants to use lap belts. States with this law would get a 10 per cent incentive payment.

The second law would require all front seat occupants to use all available belts and all rear seat occupants to use lap belts. States opting for this law would receive a 15 per cent incentive payment.

The third law would require all occupants to use all available seat belts. States with this law would get a 25 per cent payment.

Passengers in those states with mandatory seat belt usage laws who were caught not wearing their belts would be subject to a minor fine, the safety administration said. It said it would recommend against any state adopting a jail sentence penalty for failure to wear seat belts.

The safety administration long has been under pressure from some advocates of seat belts to require mandatory use of the belts. Australia, which has such a law, reports its fatality rate dropped 20 per cent the first year after the law was passed.

GOPs Attack Brooke

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) - The Republican City Committee has asked Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., to resign from the party.

Passage of the resolution, approved unanimously by the group's executive committee, came on a voice vote with some dissent at a meeting Tuesday night.

The resolution said GOP "grassroots workers" felt "betrayed by Sen. Brooke's unfair attacks on President Nixon at this time when the President needs encouragement and support."

The group said Brooke had opposed many key policies and programs of the Administration.

Brooke has told President Nixon he believes the President should resign.

Shale Mining Raises Ruckus From Western Conservationists

By KENNETH T. WALSH
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) - Wildlife would be destroyed and environmental resources devastated under a government program to lease federal lands for commercial development of shale oil in three Western states, ecologists said Wednesday.

They reacted to Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton's announcement that 20-year leases on six federal tracts in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming will be offered in competitive bidding between Jan. 8 and June 4.

"Oil shale development is years away and it's a very damaging process," said Carolyn Johnson of the Colorado Open Space Council, a coalition of 30 environmental groups including the Audubon Society and Sierra Club.

Mrs. Johnson said the leasing was "a giveaway to the oil industry under the label of energy crisis" and "represents a commitment for destruction of great environmental resources for a drop in the bucket of oil."

She said mining shale in western Colorado's Piceance Basin could destroy 75 per cent of the region's 30,000 deer.

Vegetation would be destroyed, roads would interrupt wildlife migratory patterns and humans would flood the area seeking jobs.

William Viavant, an environmentalist in Utah, said judgment of the project should be deferred until an environmental impact report is made.

If it shows shale oil can be developed without degrading the land, "we would say, go ahead and try it."

Tom Bell, publisher of an environmental weekly newspaper in Lander, Wyo., said the leasing was premature.

Morton said, "The leasing program I have approved will encourage oil shale development and allow us to learn whether our 600-billion-barrel shale oil reserves can be developed at acceptable economic and environmental costs."

Economy...

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A government index that forecasts future economic performance took its biggest drop in over 13 years in September, then increased slightly the following month, the Commerce Department reported Wednesday.

But a government economist warned against concluding that the September decline of 1.6 per cent in the so-called composite index of leading indicators heralded a business recession.

In othe economic developments Wednesday:

-The Cost of Living Council said it will announce its decision Friday or Saturday on a proposed new round of price increases for 1974 automobiles.

-The council indicated it might hold public hearings on a proposed 6.5 per cent price increase on many steel products by U.S. Steel Corp., but will not decide on them until it knows what other steel producers plan price increases.

Layoffs...

DETROIT (AP) - General Motors plants began ordering additional layoffs Wednesday as the impact of a major production slowdown rippled through the giant auto firm.

Slack demand for most larger cars, partly as a result of gasoline shortages, has been cited as the cause of the assembly line layoffs.

A spokesman for GM's Fisher Body Division confirmed its plants were ordering temporary and indefinite layoffs affecting thousands of workers.

GM last week announced the assembly lines producing full-size and intermediate cars at 16 plants would shut Dec. 17 for one week, idling an undetermined number of workers.

A GM spokesman said Wednesday that there was still no data on how many of the firm's 415,000 production and maintenance workers in the United States would be affected by the assembly line shutdown.

Spokesmen also said GM did not yet know how many employees would be laid off in plants that supply the assembly operation.

Brutality...

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) - Police said Wednesday they were searching for the daughter of poet-playwright Mary McDougal Axelson, 82, who died after being beaten in her hospital bed.

Mrs. Axelson died Tuesday, 22 hours after a nurse heard the woman cry for help and found her bleeding from the mouth.

The playwright's daughter - 44-year-old Mary Axelson Cropper of New York City - visited the hospital Monday about the time of the beating, police said.

Joseph McAloon, administrator at Doctor's Hospital, said "before she died Mrs. Axelson told police and hospital officials that her daughter had hit her. She died before she could tell us how it happened and why."

The Dade County Medical Examiner's Office said an autopsy showed she died froma brain hemorrhage caused by a blow to the head.

Mrs. Axelson wrote the Broadway play, "Life Begins," which was later made into a film starring Loretta Young. Her first novel, "A Child Is Born," was published in 1940.

She was admitted to the hospital on Nov. 11, suffering from leukemia - an often-fatal blood disease.

To Move Or Not To Move

Room-choosing for the Spring Semester will be held the week of December 3-7, 1973. The following general schedule will be followed by residence halls. Check with the head of residence of the residence hall you wish to reside in for more complete room-choosing information.

Monday, December 3 - Students who wish to remain in the rooms they are currently occupying may sign up with their heads of residence on this day.

Tuesday, December 4 - Students who wish to move to available space within the residence hall they are currently residing in may sign up with their heads of residence on this day.

Wednesday and Thursday
December 5 and 6 - Students currently residing on campus who wish to move to available space in residence halls other than the ones in which they are currently residing may sign up with the heads of residence of the residence halls to which they wish to move on this day.

Friday, December 7 - Students currently residing off-campus who wish to live in residence halls for the spring semester may sign up.

All people interested in living in Greenough House for spring 1974, please note: Application forms will be available at Greenough on Wednesday, Dec. 5 and Thursday, Dec. 6 from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. A lottery will be held Thursday evening.

Experts Gather For Prison Conference

One of the country's most innovative prison rehabilitation programs will be the subject of a two-day conference in Pittsfield, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1.

The conference will bring the National Advisory Board of the Model Educational Rehabilitation Program to the Berkshire County House of Correction for a series of workshops and other sessions that will evaluate the program, which has the Berkshire Jail as an education laboratory.

The program includes the development of vocational training for residents and guards at Belchertown State School, a master of science degree program in criminal justice at American International College and study programs at Berkshire Community College.

Among those attending will be: Massachusetts Commissioner of Corrections Frank Hall, Director J. Douglas Grant of the Social Action Research Center in California; Vernon R. James, chief of the New Careers Training Branch of the federal manpower training program; and Leonard W. Stern of the National Association of Social Workers.

Practical Engineers Program

A new experimental engineering curriculum built around solving actual problems in industry is being developed by the mechanical and aerospace engineering department at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Called Practice-Directed Engineering Education, the program's central feature is an engineering extension service to industry. "Through this we get real engineering problems and we use these problems as vehicles for educating the students in how to do engineering and how to learn engineering science," according to Professor John R. Dixon.

Called ESIC, the Engineering Service to Industry and Community, the extension service has received cooperation from Kollmorgen in Northampton, Excel Manufacturing of Springfield, Hardig Industries of South Deerfield, Union Manufacturing of South Hadley, Northampton Cutlery, Monsanto of Springfield and others.

"Industry has been cooperative and we are able to perform a real service for them. We find we can do work that companies need done and can't get done any other way," Dr. Dixon commented.

The course content stresses two main areas — learning to learn and learning to do engineering. Students learn to learn by studying the engineering science fundamentals. They learn to do engineering by tackling a series of real problems for industrial clients, and with faculty audit, finding solutions.

"In our final examination, the student must take a whole, new, real, industry-type problem, learn what he needs to know to solve it, and present and defend his solution before a panel of industry and faculty people," Dr. Dixon explained.

Students are told that graduation will be not only when they gather 128 credit hours but when they can satisfactorily pass the final problem examination, he added.

There are now six students in the program, with plans to expand to 13 next fall. The six, two sophomores, two juniors and two seniors, are Diane Bradford of Southwick, Steve Kalenik of Peabody, Dave Miles of Northborough, Steve Rider of St. Louis, Mo., David Stamps of Chesterfield and Ron Wormser of New Milford, N.J.

Sheiks & Shortages

The TV is on the blink. The lights seem a trifle dimmer. The toaster is aggravatingly slow. And the sub-70 degree room temperature seems a little unreasonable.

You can drive on Sunday, but you probably won't get very far. And there won't be any decent Christmas decorations. You are annoyed at all of this, but it seems to be nothing more than a temporary inconvenience. After all, Japan and Holland are on the verge of economic collapse, so things could be worse. But you are told that this is a major crisis, and as soon as a good cold snap comes, you'll come out fightin' mad. But at whom?

Many are pointing the finger of blame at Big Business, for conspiring along with the major Oil companies in order to rake off the consumers. And after all, Industry uses up more oil than anybody else. But then come the cutbacks and layoffs. Better to find another villain. A recession hurts "little folks" as much as Big Business.

Others are blaming Nixon. So what else is new? Or perhaps the birdwatchers and Caribou lovers who allegedly held up construction of the much-needed Alaska pipeline. The list of scapegoats goes on and on until we reach one name which we didn't expect to see there on the list. And that name is Israel.

Most Americans aren't about to join in any witch-hunts for Fuel Shortage Conspirators. But the shrill cries of the opportunists who seek to exploit our inconveniences for their own political advantages will be heard increasingly. And if the Arab Oil Boycott against the United States continues, there are bound to be more and more attacks against Israel as the source of energy woes.

Israel, after initially faltering in the face of an unpredicted assault, successfully drove back the Arab armies to an even greater distance from the Israeli heartland. And since the Arab governments have never formally retracted their long standing policy of seeking to destroy Israel, the Israelis are not likely to allow the Arab armies to get any closer to Israel. At least not without some recognition from the Arab governments of the legitimacy of Jewish nationhood.

But negotiations with the Israelis is not something the Arabs relish. Certainly, a return of the territories now occupied as buffer zones by the Israelis would be a desirable goal, but apparently the Arab leaders feel that a recognition of any sovereignty of Israeli nationhood would be two great a concession. For someone who hasn't followed political developments in Israel, such intransigence on the part of the Arabs may seem irrational. But that is not necessarily the case.

The current appearance of Arab unity is a very infrequent occurance. In fact, there really never has been any all-encompassing unity of purpose in the Arab world. But there is one issue that evokes unanimity. Israel is the only issue. But even that unanimity is suspect.

The Arab nations which share common borders with Israel have nothing to gain by continued hostilities. Israel can't be driven into the sea. Unfortunately, any sense of moderation with regards to Israel is swiftly and resoundingly supressed. There is, has been, and will always be a power vacuum in the Arab world. And only by keeping the hostilities going can the vacuum be filled. Nationalist fanatics view the Oil boycott as a means to inherit the throne that was briefly held by the late Gamal Abdul Nasser. And the Soviets look on gleefully as the Americans are isolated from their allies in Europe and Japan.

The fanatics who seek to use oil as a weapon may achieve some initial success in causing tensions in U.S. — European relations. But the much hoped for backlash against Israel in the United States might backfire against the Arabs. After all, Israel isn't cutting off oil shipments. The Sheiks are.

The U.S. still has considerable leverage in the Middle East. The Israelis and Arabs are now being convinced by Secretary of State Kissinger that the big winner in the event of prolonged hostilities will be the Soviets. Certainly, the Israelis are aware of that danger. And there is a growing segment of influential Arabs who are concerned over Soviet ambitions. Even some of the militant Arab leaders would like to avoid dependency on Russia. The price of such dependency is dangerously high.

Waiting Time

Waiting is probably one of our favorite pastimes here at UMass. By the time you leave you're an expert at waiting for food, classes, money and elevators. Recently with the aid of Russell Zub I conducted a survey on just how long UMies do wait and it's almost eight days in a four year period. In an average week, according to the survey, Joe or Jane Umie will wait about an hour and forty minutes. Ove a thirteen week semester this comes out to about a day.

The principle offender was the Dining Commons. On the weeks we measured, more time was spent waiting for meals than all other things combined. Dinner was the longest wait — about six or seven minutes a day — and when turkey was served the wait was even worse. Lunch was next, with about a five minute endurance test, followed by breakfast with barely a two minute delay. One of the factors attributed to the long lines is the system of collecting meal tickets twice. It takes a worker out of circulation and makes collection more time consuming. People wouldn't mind waiting in line so long if the food was worth it.

Surprise, surprise! Professors keep us waiting the longest after the DC. Almost seventeen minutes was spent in one week waiting for profs to begin classes after their starting time and end them at finishing time. The new library with its express elevators and instant answer telephones came next. In two trips to the library almost eleven precious minutes were wasted. Most of the lost ime was due to the elevators. Finally, check cashing takes five minutes on Friday (this day was chosen because my pay check came out). Last year the men who run the check cashing service promised to change the system so they would not run out of money on weekends. They simply reduced the hours you can cash checks. This was no solution to the problem; it was more of a way of ending an administrative hassle than providing students with service.

It's no major crime that we wait five minutes to cash a check or five minutes for a class to begin. What's a shame is that when you add it all up you've wasted days. Unless you've been doing something while you stood in line that time is really wasted. We did not include registration, waiting for Student Senate busses, or going to the Infirmary which would make the wait even longer. I suggest that on the application form to UMass potenial students be warned that they'll spend part of the "best four years" of their life standing in line.

Some people don't seem to understand how the fifty m.p.h. speed limit works. Gas mileage doesn't increase the slower you go; it peaks around forty or fifty m.p.h. Since it is not feasible to ask motorists to increase their speed on secondary roads to fifty, we have to lower the speed limits on highways to save gas. Next you will notice a savings in gas but it will not be a tremendous savings, which means that our individual efforts will only save gas if everyone slows down. Driving at fifty is safer than higher speeds. At fifty you have more time to react and brake; accidents are not as fatal at slow speeds either. Disadvantages are numerous, but not serious enough to revise the maximum speed. First, there will be more cars on the road because traveling times will be lengthened which would result in traffic jams. This can be solved by car pools. Anyway the threat of massive traffic jams will not be realized because the places that have tie-ups are places where people don't travel at fifty. If we slow down maybe we can avoid rationing and high gas prices. After Watergate, can we trust the Nixon administration to run a fair rationing program?

Vaseline Junkies

The energy crisis is not the fault of the car owner who takes his Sunday drive at 65 m.p.h., nor the home owner who keeps his house at 72 degrees, nor the factory owner who keeps his plant open 24 hours a day. No, friends, the present energy crisis is not the fault of the every day person trying to survive in our modern if - you - don't - want - to - do - it - yourself - a - machine - will world. It is the fault of that grease loving maniac, the Vaseline freak.

Yes, friends, it's Vaseline, our favorite brand of petroleum jelly with its 1001 uses, that is depleting our vital resources. A chapped lip here, a rough elbow there, a-God-knows-what-else where. If things keep at the present speed, not only will the demand exceed the supply, but there might not be any Vaseline left by next Wednesday.

Do you know who the real culprits are? Well, contrary to popular belief, they are not your average apple-pie and mother-loving upstanding citizens. No, the real criminals behind this whole energy crisis are the babies of the world. Oh, they may look quite innocent and naive to you. I was once fooled by them myself. But it is the babies of the world that are our natural resources' natural enemy. Those assholes. They are at the bottom of this mess. Or should I say, this mess is at the bottom of them?

Stop babies and we will be able to stop the energy crisis. But the problem goes deeper than this. There is one man who must be stopped in his work to stop the growth of the baby population. That man is the Pope. He's at the bottom of this crisis and his plan is obvious. The Pope wants to see more male babies in this world so they too may grow up to be Popes. If there is such a thing as a female child born, her only purpose is to bear other children in the hope that they will be males, to grow up and become Popes. Those males who aren't Popes will become Bishops or Priests to advocate that more babies should be produced. So what do we end up with? Armies and armies of Priests and Bishops, all old Vaseline junkies. There will be so many of them, using so much Vaseline that the supply will soon run out.

But where do they go from there? Once the Vaseline supply becomes extinct, those grease junkies will start dipping into our other vital resources. Once the petroleum jelly is gone what's left? Butter? Lard? Crisco? Ohmigod. Pretty soon they'll be using peanut butter as their last resort. And when that's gone we'll all be gone, to that great greaser's palace in the sky. That's the Pope's ultimate goal, to see us all in Heaven. How cruel.

Don't fall for this plan. Don't support a man who won't even go out of his way to do his own dirty work. Don't have or be the cause of male babies. After all, you don't see the Pope having any of his own. If we really want to nip this problem right in the butt, we shouldn't have babies at all. We should definitely screw the Pope and his ideas.

Maybe then we can return to a more normal way of life, like driving down the highway at 80 m.p.h.

Revise And Conquer?

We are in the midst of the blooming of a creature known as the revisionist historian. He is the fellow who takes up where the history books leave off, and proceeds to rewrite events. He may appear in the form of an author, or a commentator, a book reviewer, or even a full fledged historian. He can usually be detected by the cynicism in his speech. He is often articulate, always challenging, and for the most part, convincing. He is all of these things because he relates historical events to present day developments. Things are much easier to understand if we take the consequences and work backward, noting all the mistakes along the way. It is easier, also, to avoid these mistakes when using this method, and harder to understand how anyone could have been so stupid to have made them in the first place.

The current best seller, Burr, by Gore Vidal, fits into this revisionist category quite nicely. The author has attempted to make the events of an historical period more understandable by placing them in the modern mind. No longer, supposedly, are the men of the past strangers in the vacuum of time, to be viewed through a bell jar in the museum. No, they are living beings, that history has designated major figures in the rise of our republic. They were subject to many of the distractions and limitations that plague modern man. What makes them great, supposedly, is the myths that time has attached to them. Once removed from their environment, they are reduced to mortals, to rank with the Haldemans and Ehrlichmans. Thus, they become vulnerable to the criticism of modern times, and this, to some at least, is too tempting a proposition to pass up. The revisionists, while working under the guise of humanization, are in fact de-humanizing history, and in many cases to an irresponsible degree.

But we do not have to return to the days of Aaron Burr to catch a glimpse of the revisionist historian in action. We need only go back ten years, to that brief period when American became young again. The Kennedy years have fascinated the revisionists for quite some time, and there they stand, pen in hand, typewriter at the ready, publisher's advance payment in their pockets. Write a book, or a series of articles, about the Kennedy Presidency, minus Camelot, and you've got an instant audience. Last week marked the tenth anniversary of a tragedy. Many took advantage of the remembrance to "put in perspective" the Kennedy contribution to history. Newspapers and magazines ran articles by close friends, and published "never before seen photos", remembering the man, and not the policy maker. Television went a step further, and joined the ranks of the Halberstams, Laskys, and Vidals. CBS News showed a documentary titled "JFK: One Thousand Days and Ten Years", narrated and written by John Hart. It was probably the best example of the revisionist approach that has appeared on the tube to date. According to Mr. Hart, the legacy of John Kennedy is little more than a man on the moon, a test ban treaty, and the inevitable...Vietnam.

There are those among us, I am sure, who do not really remember the Kennedy years. And there are also those among us who would agree with the assessment of Kennedy as the instigator of the Vietnam War. But there also exists those who know better. The road to our involvement in Asia cannot be defined accurately enough to place the ultimate blame on any one man. But that is what this cult of revisionism has come to, the never ending search for blame-worthy men of our past. Start with the present problem and work your way back. The procedure is like checking a complicated math problem, to see if the answer is correct. It sounds good, but it is not that simple, because about half way through the problem the language changes, and it keeps changing the further back we go. And as the language changes, so do ideas, and so do we. But we cannot chide the past, simply because we know better now. If we hadn't lived through the past, then there would be no basis for knowing better. To reduce John Kennedy to unfilled promises, is akin to saying that Ted Williams is just another ball player, because he didn't break the Babe's record. And anyone who has ever seen number nine swagger to the plate, and with grace and precision send the cowhide flying to Kenmore Square, knows better. Don't let anyone kid you, you can't tell what someone was like by just looking at the record book. It's that feeling you get deep inside when you experience greatness, nobody has to come along and tell you, it's just there, and you know it.

I wrote to John Hart at CBS, and discussed this problem of revisionism. I received a letter in return, and a transcript of the documentary in question. In going over the transcript, I came across a statement that is interesting in light of the conclusions that Mr. Hart arrived at. It reads: "The trouble with the past is that from a distance we can organize it, whereas at the time, events in progress were still subject to caprice. No picture of the past is accurate, no judgement fair. And our reflections of the Kennedy years are in a trick mirror corrugated by Vietnam."

The Kennedy years will perplex historians for years to come, for there can be no definite answers. And this uncertainty is the fodder on which the revisionists feed. It's just too tempting for them to resist. And at the risk of sounding too too Bostonian, what those years meant to the people who lived them is more important than what they become in retrospect. You cannot feel young, proud, or hopeful in retrospect. You cannot wish with all your heart that you could do something for your country, in retrospect. You cannot be willing to follow a man anywhere, in retrospect. And you cannot watch grown men cry in the streets, in retrospect. The revisionists can do what they please, but they can never take away those brief years, They can never rekindle the flame, or recapture the past, as it truly was, to those who lived it.

Recession Or Progression?

By ZOE BEST

The oil shortage resulted from the Arab-Israel War and the U.S. government's immediate aid to Israel in weaponry, supplies, ammunition and money, all unauthorized congressionally and undisclosed publicly regarding amounts. On "Face the Nation" October 7, Senator J. William Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee noted how an "utterly unprecedented" action took place when Senator Jackson offered an amendment giving $500 million to Israel "without hearings of any kind," two years ago. U.S. cargo planes during the recent war made daily flights to supply Israel until some European countries objected to the stop-overs within their boundaries. Most of the Arab states (except Iran who suffered a Dulles designed, CIA coup in 1954 and still remains under jurisdiction of Washington) have countered the intrusion of U.S. money and supplies into the conflict with the current oil embargo.

Nixon, who needed a cover-up issue grabbed the oil embargo to promote an "energy crisis" to deflect public attention from his boycott of the "public interest" in the "tape crisis." In addition, he has nullified years of effort from conservationists to prevent off-shore drilling, the laying of the Alaskan pipeline and the lifting of air pollution controls. The energy crisis has revealed a hierarchy of energy users, comprised of military, industrial and civiliam sectors. As to the military, on November 1, invoking a provision of the 1950 Defense Production Act, the Pentagon ordered 300,000 barrels of oil a day to be taken from the civilian share. On November 15 Arthur I. Mendolia, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Installations and Logistics announced that the military requires 650,000 barrels a day, half of which has been cut off by the Arab oil embargo. It was not until November 28 that the New York Times reported this action of the Pentagon: "The Defense Department ordered 22 oil companies to deliver 826 million gallons of fuel to the military by January 16...Thus far, officials said, the oil shortage had not interfered with 'essential operations' of the military."

Singapore is the third or fourth largest oil refinery center in the world. The Arab countries have refused to supply Singapore with oil for two reasons: First, to enforce an effective oil embargo against the U.S., oil shipments to Singapore would have to be stopped as the U.S. is the major user of Singapore oil. Secondly, it could be assumed that the Arab countries took this opportunity to act on behalf of those forces in Indochina that are seeking political-economic independence, free from U.S. intervention, or in more concrete terms, to force the U.S. to suspend its military operations in Vietnam.

Don Luce, who recently returned from a month's journey throughout Vietnam insists that the Saigon government conducts several hundred bombing missions everyday and personally witnessed the bombing of a market area in a PRG town. On page 2 of the New York Times, November 28, is printed charges from a PRG official concerning the Saigon attacks. Who supplies the fuel for these bombing attacks, pays for the fuel? We do! Saigon has a million-man army. Who supplies it, moves it (by vehicle, by air), feeds it, clothes it and pays for it? We do! Saigon still holds more than 200,000 political prisoners and who pays for the maintenance of the prisons? We do! Since the Paris Peace Accords over 50,000 PRG soldiers (not including civilians) have been killed. Saigon has waged this post-war war with the advice from 20,000 U.S. advisors still in South Vietnam and Thieu expects continuance of U.S. funds and supplies on top of the $100 billion U.S. taxpayers have already invested in Vietnam.

Before looking at the method of oil allocation to the industrial sector, it is important to note the following: The Gross National Product, total U.S. production output, will total $1300 billion this year. This country has 6 percent of the world's population and uses 60 percent of the world's resources and must control 60 percent of the world to perpetuate this pattern. In response to the Arab oil embargo, along with other Wallstreet Corporation interests, David Rockerfeller, Chairman of the Board of the Chase Manhatten Bank is seeking a formalized gas and oil rationing system. This proposed rationing would cut into the civilian share of fuel again, in addition to the cut the military took. To counter reduced supply of fuel to the industrial sector, rationing would guarantee industry their fuel requirements to maintain production and profits. The industrial sector will utilize lay-offs, slow-downs and cut-backs in production if rationing is not enacted. Even though production may be reduced resulting in massive unemployment, corporations still can maintain their current profit rates by continuing to raise prices.

Thus the civilian sector is subject to having their fuel quota portioned to the military and industrial sectors to sustain their "essential operations" while the masses of people are requested to stay home on weekends, to endure the cold, to accept unemployment and food shortages, higher costs, school closures and a "recession." However, some civilians appear to be exempt from the repercussions of the oil embargo.

Ronald Reagan, governor of Cailfornia, was to visit Australia to make a fund-raising speech for the Victoria State Red Cross. According the the New York Times, November 28, "On short notice last week, he persuaded Mr. Nixon to furnish him a government jet to take his party of 14 to Australia and to Singapore and Jakarta on a 'trade mission'". This trip will consume an estimated 65,000 gallons of jet fuel.

Nixon himself, to escape inquiries into tape erasures, campaign contributors, his income tax records, can fly 475 mph to San Clemente (meanwhile we are driving 50 mph) which would use over 14,000 gallons of jet fuel, the equivalent of which could heat a dozen homes all winter.

If the civilian sector were to act in their own interests and demand that the U.S. withdraw military aid from Thieu, demand compliance by the U.S. government to the Vietnam Peace Accords, the outflow of tax money as well as fuel would be greatly reduced. Congresspeople should be written insisting that they seek from the Pentagon, figures of present-day appropriations in fuel to the Saigon government.

It is just and timely that we accept reapportionment of resources to initiate a more ecologically balanced standard-of-living. The military has already made its move to insure its cut of civilian fuels; the industrial sector will push for enactment of rationing to also insure its cut of civilian fuels and 1 to 2 percent of the civilian sector will continue their luxurious living fed by excessive profit rates. Nixon, who is dependent on these sectors as Watergate proves, then asks us to voluntarily accept "hardships" when it is highly doubtful that the advocates of rationing will ration voluntarily in their sectors, i.e. to de-monopolize the economy and to de-executize domestic and foreign policy. The real "energy crisis" is the lack of alertness and active pressure from the majority of people. The oil embargo can initiate a recession or a progression. It is up to us.

Broadening Horizons

Asian Studies Program

A UMass student who is not majoring in either Chinese or Japanese but would like to receive recognition for the inter-disciplinary work he completes in the field of Asian Studies may enroll in the University's Asian Studies Certificate Program. The Certificate Program does not constitute a major, but the student who fulfill the requirements of the Program will be awarded a Certificate in Asian Studies attesting to his attainment in area studies. The Certificate Program requirements include the successful completion of 24 credits selected from the Asian Studies course list, although no more than 6 credits in an Asian language may be counted toward the necessary 24 credits. Relevant information about the Certificate Program, as well as the B.A. programs in Chinese and Japanese, may be obtained from the Asian Studies office, 809 Thompson Hall, 545-0886.

Winterim: Ski For Credit

Dartmouth Outward Bound Center announces a 17-day Winterim Course (January 3-19, 1973) suitable for the January Term requirements of participating colleges. The Course will be conducted in the northeast region of Vermont and the Connecticut Lakes-Dartmouth College Grant areas of New Hampshire. Activities will include light ski-touring, expeditioning on skis, winter camping snow shelter construction, basic emergency care, orienteering, and solo. The Course will conclude with a seminar at the Dartmouth College Grant focusing on academic areas related to the experience. The seminar in addition to a bibliography of suggested readings will assist participants in developing topics for papers required by the Non-Resident or January Term program. Credit arrangements must be made with the participating institution.

Outward Bound is an educational process of self-discovery and an intense experience in group living. Participants are presented with a series of progressively difficult challenges and problems, wherein nature, self, companion and professional instructors combine as interrelating to.

Cost for the course is $350. For further information contact DOBC.

Culture Around Amherst

Guitars Unite

The Second Meeting of the Amherst Classical Guitar Society will be held Sunday, December 2, at 21 Massasoit St., Northampton (located off Rt. 9 near Smith College).

Activities at this meeting will include an informal recital by Guitar Society members and the first in a series of workshops entitled "Music Theory for Guitarists" taught by Kevin Collins.

The purpose of the Classical Guitar Society is to promote the tradition of the guitar, provide support and encouragement to beginners and amateurs, and to give the Amherst community access to the classical guitar.

To be put on the Guitar Society mailing list, for directions and rides to the December 2 meeting, and for further information call Steve Toplitz at The Guitar Workshop, 549-1728.

Recorder Soc.

The Amherst Recorder Society is sponsoring a Recorder Workshop to be conducted by La Noue Davenport on Saturday, December 1 in the Academic Lounge, Academic Building 1 at Hampshire College. The workshop will be held from 9:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and will concentrate on ensemble playing with lecture demonstration. The last hour of the workshop will be devoted to more advanced music and techniques. A registration fee of $4.00 will be charged participants registering by November 28. On December 1 the fee will be $5.00 Checks should be made payable to Deborah Hendel, R.R. No. 1, Amherst, Mass., 01002. Participants are asked to bring instruments and music stands. Music will be available for purchase at the workshop. Attendance at the workshop is open to anyone interested. Those desiring more details and-or music in advance may call Deborah Hendel at 253-5751 or Inge Ackermann at 253-2735.

Art Lectures

The Mount Holyoke College Department of Art and the College Lecture Committee will be sponsoring three art lectures during the Arts Weekend. On Thursday, November 29, Mrs. Susan Bush will speak on "Literati Paintings in China." On Friday, November 30, Mr. Philip Pearlstein will talk about "Paintings in Progress;" and on, Monday, December 3, Mr. John Rewald will talk about "Forgeries in Modern Art."

All of the lectures will be in Gamble Auditorium at 8:00 p.m., and are free of charge.

Larry Coryell

Larry Coryell, regarded as the leading Jazz guitarist in America today, will perform on Sunday, Dec. 2 in the Amherst College Alumni Gymnasium.

The event is part of the Amherst College Entertainment Committee's Music for a Sunday Evening series.

Tickets at $3.50 each for the concert can be purchased at the door and in advance at the following locations: in Amherst at the new record shop, Faces of Earth, the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Book Store, and Hampshire College's Uroboros Book Shop; in Northampton at Del Padre Music.

Piano Recital

On Sunday evening, December 2, at 8:00 o'clock, The Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a piano recital by Eugenie Malek in Sage Hall on the Smith campus. The public is invited to attend, free of charge.

It's The Tax Man!

The Internal Revenue Service today advised holders of tax-free sales registrations, issued prior to January 23, 1970, that the registrations have been declared null and void.

District Director William E. Williams said that anyone holding this registration must re-register using Form 637 before January 1, 1974.

Persons affected by the revocation must obtain from the District Director a numbered, validated registration form in order to sell or purchase articles tax-free after December 31, 1973.

Attorney For Students:

On Cars And Avoiding Plows

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Today's column is aimed at the prudent and perspicacious UMie who would like to try to survive the winter in Amherst and (1) keep his or her car, (2) sleep each night in their own bed (exceptions understood) and (3) enjoy Christmas dinner other than in local jail.

Cars and Winter in Amherst

Last year I reported on the IAPOB My CaWa To Chowder and Marching Society for which the signs have been posted all over town since early this month. The signs read that ALL CARS PARKED OVERNIGHT IN TOWN STREETS BETWEEN DECEMBER 1 AND APRIL 1 MAY BE TOWED! The Society (whose initials stand for "I Am Pissed Off Because My Car Was Towed") was founded by a part-time graduate student in Botany who resided in downtown Amherst earlier in the century. Members meet to commiserate weekly in an open field in North Amherst. They walk to the sessions barefoot (a penitential devotion) and drink iced coffee while munching on frosted bagels.

Historically, it seems, horseless carriages presented a problem to New England communities when they impeded horsedrawn fire wagons or were abandoned in ruts caused during the Spring thaw. Towns organized a quasi militia of horseteams to draw the chariots out of the way and the owner was made to sit in the stocks until the temperature rose above 50 degrees. When cattle were banned from grazing on the town common another ordinance was passed which attempted to deal with the snow problem. By its tenor, vehicles which would block snow removal on town streets, if left there overnight, WHETHER OR NOT IT snowed, could be towed to a place in North Amherst any night between December 1 and April 1.

This year the IAPOB My Ca Wa To Chowder and Marching Society is waiting for a solid frost before its first meeting. Recent estimates suggest that there will be thousands of new members from the University Community. Suffice to say that if you don't like being towed at home at least note the warning and never leave your car parked in downtown Amherst or on a main street overnight between now and April. Unless, of course, you are into long barefoot walks, a $15 or $20 towing fee, iced coffee and frosty bagels at midnight in an open field in North Amherst.

Guardians of Christmas

The Boy Scouts of Amherst support their operations by the sale of Christmas trees which they vend at the triangular intersection of North and East Pleasant Streets. Many trees are stuck into the ground awaiting the warm hands of little children in their parent's arms come to purchase and pluck them away.

Each year (in the past) University of Massachusetts men and women covet these very same trees! So much so, in fact, that they have been known to liberate not one or two but several from the frosty ground that blinds them - and trees are hard to hide.

Now the several Chiefs of Police, the Respectively Honorable Francis Hart, Red Blasko and Donald Maia are known to be jolly gentlemen in whom virtue veritably sings. For the first few nights that the much prized trees adorn the grassy green locked in icy firmness, the Boy Scouts and dutiful police officers maintain a careful watch to see that all is well.

By the third or fourth night their job is done. University students apprehended in their first full flight of liberated evergreen have taken up the posts vacated by the scouts who sleep at home in warm and adequate beds. The first students arrested have, heretofore, been permitted to do penance as guards of the trees from midnight to morn rather than to celebrate Christmas as inmates of the Commonwealth. Stealing the evergreen is, in the eyes of some, no unlike stealing Christmas. I hope the message is not lost.

Purchases Not For Value

The last unhappiness visited this time of year is the woe of stale bail and hale jail bestowed upon the hapless who Christmas shop without benefit of purchase. The temptations arrayed upon the counters of the merchants in the Amherst area are surely great. There is little that can be done to dissuade the purposeful and deliberate shoplifter who plans the crime and methodically carries it out. Perhaps the high number of court appearances by shoplifting defendants is a clue to the efficiency of the store detectives maintained by most merchants.

Many other people are stopped and charged with shoplifting who do not plan to do it or honestly never meant to do it. There are several suggestions which may help to avoid the hassle.

1. If shopping with children, keep an eye on them and prevent the necessity of a mad sprint through the check out counter to stifle peril to their limbs and lives.
2. NEVER PUT AN ARTICLE OUT OF SIGHT UNTIL ITS PAID FOR AND BAGGED BY STORE PERSONNEL. The crime of shoplifting is completed in several ways. Obviously, removal from the store constitutes the crime as does passing through the checkout counter without paying. It is also completed even if you never get near the checkout coumter, merely by putting an article of merchandise out of sight in a bag, pocketbook, pocket or inside other merchandise. IT IS LAWFUL FOR A MERCHANT TO CAUSE A PERSON TO BE STOPPED AND DETAINED IN A REASONABLE WAY ON APPROPRIATE GROUNDS.
3. Upon entering a store where shopping baskets or carts are provided, use them. This way you will not be tempted to jam more than you can carry into pockets or other bags.
4. Avoid as much as possible carrying earlier purchases into other stores so that you don't have too much to carry.
5. Carry enough money or credit systems that you can readily pay for what you intend to buy.

Being charged with shoplifting is usually a harrowing first experience. Avoid the charge by being aware of the kind of conduct which suggests the crime. Avoid the resulting criminal record and all that entails by not engaging in the conduct in the first place.

I sincerely hope that everyone will enjoy both the winter in Amherst and Christmas at home.

Summer Studies In France

The University of Massachusetts is sponsoring a summer program of studies in French at Pau, in southwest France. The 1974 academic program will run from July 7 to August 18. Up to six undergraduate or graduate University of Massachusetts credits in French can be earned for the six-weeks course of studies.

A year of college French or the equivalent is the minimal prerequisite on the undergraduate level, and an undergraduate major in French (with the B.A. or equivalent degree) for the graduate level. Students will be placed according to their background, competence in French, and interest. Courses are offered in language, stylistics, literature, and civilization. The courses are taught by professors from the French University system, particularly from the faculties of Pau, Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Paris. There are, in addition, series of lectures (optional attendance) on, for example, French music, politics, regional culture.

The academic levels are premier degre: elementary, degre moyen: intermediate, degre superieur: advanced, and hautes etudes: graduate. In addition, there are courses in pedagogy and phonetics (for advanced and graduate students).

Pau is situated at the foot of the spectacular Pyrenees Mountains. Tours of the city and the environs are provided as well as excursions to Lourdes, the Basque country, Northern Spain, and the Atlantic coast (Biarritz, Bayonne, Saint-Jean-de-Luz). The city of Pau is well equipped with facilities for sports and entertainment, as well as museums. Libraries include the resources of the Centres d'Etudes Universitaires de Pau, the Municipal Library, and the Departmental Archives of the Lower Pyrenees.

Cost to the student is approximately $700 (the cost may fluctuate somewhat depending on the value of the dollar). Included are tuition and textbooks, medical services during the school period, room and board for the six weeks at Pau, and excursions planned as part of the program. Not included are the costs of international and independent travel and miscellaneous personal expenses. (Advice will be provided on arranging for travel.)

The deadline for submitting completed applications is February 28. Early application is recommended.

Application forms and further information are available from French Studies at Pau, Department of French and Italian, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Good Vibes!

At a recent meeting of the so-called "Meditative Corridor" in Project 10, discussion of plans for next term revealed that several places would probably become available. For information call 6-4572.

This term the corridor has not sponsored any group meditations or programs, but has, according to some residents, had "vibes" which do not undercut efforts to meditate or to engage in creative activity requiring silence and solitude. The Corridor Meeting early in the fall voted to make their lounge available for meditation. There are plants, pillows, and SPACE.

Accounting Dept. Receives Gift

The Accounting Department of the School of Business Administration has received a gift from Ernst & Ernst for support of student and faculty programs in public accounting.

Anthony Krzystofik, Chairman of the Accounting Department received a check from Mr. A.M. Schuyler, partner in charge of the Hartford office of Ernst & Ernst.

Ernst & Ernst, a "Big Eight" accounting firm has been providing support to the accounting program at UMass not only financially but also sponsors student visitations, provides educational materials for students and faculty use and speakers for the student association.

Tax Course For Assessors

The Institute for Governmental Services at UMass in cooperation with the Department of Corporations and Taxation is offering a course entitled "Massachusetts Property Tax Laws" for local assessors and their staffs.

Classes begin this week at 12 locations throughout the Commonwealth. The course will be conducted for eight weeks.

The course is to provide information and refresh the memories of local assessors and their staffs concerning the various aspects of real estate taxation, personal property taxation, assessment administration and procedure; as well as protests, appeals and betterments.

Various state and community colleges throughout the Commonwealth have accepted the offer to host the course for the local assessors in their respective areas. Among them are Cap Cod Community College in Barnstable, Bristol Community College in Fall River, Bridgewater State College in Bridgewater, Massachusetts Bay Community College in Watertown, Lowell State College in Lowell, Worcester State College in Worcester, Fitchburg State College in Fitchburg, Greenfield Community College in Greenfield, Holyoke Community College in Holyoke, Berkshire Community College in Pittsfield, and Salem State College in Salem. A course will also be conducted on Martha's Vineyard.

The Institute for Governmental Services at the University of Massachusetts, under the directorship of Maurice A. Donahue and Arthur W. Eve, is able to sponsor this course through a grant provided by the Intergovernmental Personnel Act of 1970, U.S. Civil Service Commission activity administered in Massachusetts by the Bureau of Personnel and Standardization.

'Nuclear Power'

The next lecture in the University of Massachusetts Mechanical and Aerospace Seminar Program will be on "Nuclear Power" Thursday, Nov. 29, at 4 p.m. in Gunness Lab 10.

The speaker will be Robert A. Evans, manager of mechanical and nuclear engineering for Northeast Utilities, and the talk is co-sponsored by the civil engineering department. The next talk in the series is on freeze-drying, to be given by MAE Department Head J. Edward Sunderland Thursday, Dec. 6 at 4 p.m. in Gunness Lab.

The series is supported by a grant from the Eastman Kodak Company. The public is welcome at all lectures.

Be A Cheaper Eater

"How to Eat Well on $1.50 a Day" is the topic of a noon discussion today in the Colonial Lounge.

Speaker will be Fergus Clydesdale, professor of the very popular Food Science 101.

The program is one of the contemporary events series, "The First Amendment," sponsored by the United Christian Foundation (UCF) as a means of giving the UMass community a chance to discuss major public issues with expert opinion present.

"It seemed like a timely topic," according to Thomas Lindeman, UCF staff member. "Right now, between Thanksgiving and Christmas, everybody is thinking about the price of food."

Clydesdale's opening remarks on the subject will begin at 12:15, and a discussion and question and answer period will follow until 1:15.

Classics & Slavery

Prof. David Wiesen, chairman of the Classics department at Brandeis University, will speak on "Ancient Classics and the American Slavery Controversy," Thursday, Nov. 29, at UMass. The talk, sponsored by the UMass Classics department, will be at 4 p.m. in room 106 of Thompson Hall.

Prof. Wiesen graduated from Harvard College in 1957, then studied in Munich on a Fulbright grant, and in 1961 earned his doctorate in Classics from Harvard University. He has taught at Cornell, Swathmore, and Brandeis.

He is the author of "St. Jerome as a Satirist" and has translated St. Augustine's "City of God," books 8-11, for the Loeb Classical Library, published by Harvard University Press. He is working on a book entitled "Ancient Classics and the American Slavery Controversy."

Travel To Puerto Rico

From January 2 to 24, the UMass Department of Hispanic Languages will offer Five-College students an opportunity to travel to Puerto Rico and to earn three credits for the work done while on the Island. Entitled "Field Study in Bilingualism and Biculturalism in Puerto Rico," the course offers participants a chance to get a first-hand look at many aspects of the Island's people and their culture. The students will spend some time in San Juan but will also visit many other parts of the Island on a five-day bus tour; also included in the program are visits to various types of urban and rural schools as well as a lecture series by Puerto Rican experts in such fields as language, history, politics, art and public health. The group will also be received by several leading political figures, including the Governor of Puerto Rico.

The program fee of $325 covers round-trip travel, accomodations and travel while on the island (it does not include food or other personal expenses). Some scholarship aid is available. For further information and application procedure, contact the Director, Mrs. Fresia Bradford, 422 Herter Hall, UMass (tel. 545-0541). Application deadline is December 5.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries who surprised me most by knowing something about American literature: George Jessel. Greatest Capricorn I know: Henry Miller. Most beautiful Pisces celebrity I know: Anais Nin. Most personable Leo: Buddy Rogers. Most pleasant Capricorn: Fernando Lamas. Leo I know with most mystique: Mae West.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are able to separate practicality from wishful thinking. You can see what is real, what must be discarded. You can draw line now between being open-minded and being gullible. Pisces could play significant role.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Responsibility and prestige are featured. You do more and you get more in return. Capricorn could play significant role. Money comes your way--but you earn it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with long-distance communication, travel and education. You round out project. You appeal to more persons. You succeed with institutional advertising. Your humanitarian instincts will be appreciated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Creativity, special relationships are emphasized. Questions regarding money, investments, savings, co-operative efforts will surface. Be direct. Get to heart of matters. Reach understanding with mate, partner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain low profile. Means don't be too obvious about plans, motives, game procedure. Defer to wishes of one close to you. Gather information. Develop philosophical concepts. Those who seem to oppose you may actually love you!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spotlight is on health, work, routine, pace. Forces tend to be somewhat scattered. You may be socializing to extent that rest and diet are neglected. Remember resolutions. Don't try to be everywhere at once and all things to all persons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Love makes appearance. It is welcome but perhaps may be bittersweet. You have to revise some plans--and eradicate some illusions. You have to be grown-up. Obtain hint from Virgo message. If true to yourself, all will work favorably.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent is on home, property, the conclusion of matters. You exchange ideas with family member and emotional sparks could fly. Maintain balance and control. Make no promises--or threats. Be practical, not stubborn. Be firm but also fair. You will understand.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Settle family dispute. Harmonize domestic relations. Accent is on clash of opinion. You need not feel all is black or white. There is an in-between area. You can make intelligent concession without abandoning principles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One who approaches with tax dodge scheme may be honest but misinformed. Get head out of clouds. Don't give up money for fast talk. Protect assets. Review schedule. See proposition in realistic light. Avoid wishful thinking.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your position is strong. Take lead. Highlight independence, initiative. Definite gain is indicated as you put across your case. One in authority lends support. Express views in unique, original, creative manner. Take a chance on yourself!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get rid of losing proposition. See through bragging claims. Check files. Peek behind the scenes. Clear clouds of deception. Insist on facts, not rumors or allegations. Presence before court or organization may be requested.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher, sensitive to needs of others. You have way of ingratiating yourself with public. Domestic adjustment made this year, especially in September, proves beneficial. You seem to attract persons born under Aquarius. You are due for inner revolution--and revelation. It will be good.

Women: You Can Be Anything You Want To Be

"The World Out There" is the theme of the upcoming women's weekend to be held in the Northeast Area this weekend, Dec. 1 and 2. The weekend is sponsored by the Northeast Area Women's Center. There will be three workshops each day and three short films on Saturday night.

The following is the schedule of the weekend:

SAT., Dec. 1.

10-12 - Self Defense - Salle Hamilton (Knowlton)

1-3 - Feminist Counseling - Jan Levine (Johnson)

3:30-5 - Alternative Lifestyles - Allison Rossett (Hamlin)

6:30-10:30 - Films: - "Got To Push" (about working conditions for women in the Boston Garment Industry.) - "Anything You Want to Be" ("When I was a little girl I wanted to be a fireman, a cowboy, a mommy, a doctor...my parents bought me dolls...they said I could be anything I wanted to be." - "Sisters" (in trying to warn her younger sister against the emptiness of female roles, a woman recognizes some of the patterns in her own life.)

SUN. Dec. 2.

10-12 - Career Awareness - Terry Rumpf (Thatcher)

1-3 - Faculty Women Forum - Ula Motekat (SBA), Mary Barber (SBA), Irene White (Bio-chemistry), Dee Appley (Psych), and Emma Cappelluzzo (School of Ed.) - (Mary Lyons)

3:30-5 - "Rape" - Diana White (Leach)

Women, Art & Realism

A gallery talk on "Women and Realism" will be held at the University of Massachusetts Art Gallery in Herter Hall Thursday, Nov. 29, at 8 p.m. in connection with the current exhibition on women realist artists.

The speaker will be Cindy Nemser, editor of Feminist Art Journal and the talk is open to the public without charge. The exhibition, featuring eight women realists, runs through Dec. 16.

The Rick Pitino Show

By MIKE BROPHY

Rick Pitino was the guest of honor and his cohort, Al Skinner, didn't even make it out of a meeting with his advisor in time to make the luncheon. Such was the luck of the captain as he missed the show of his life.

Coach Jack Leaman introduced Pitino and the stories from within the depths of the team's past started flowing forth over the menu of hot meatballs and Italian salad. Pitino talked of his great popularity on the campus as he has been mistaken for the likes of Paul Metallo. Leaman intervened that they must all look alike. And then Pitino continued.

He talked of how close-knit the ball club was and made reference to th fact that "We don't go after each other with lead pipes like some guys on this campus do. The ball team lives and plays together all through the year and this is why we are so close through the long season."

Leaman and Pitino both said that they were pleased with the progress the team has made and felt that they were ready to handle Harvard on Saturday. "We have a lot of work ahead before the NIT is going to be coming at us," said Leaman at the luncheon.

Coach MacPherson won the tickets for the Rhode Island game after walking to the back of the room to retrieve his ticket from the coat at the rack.

For those of you who like to attend the Wednesday meals...the affair is moving to Chequers where there will be a hot buffet and drinks will be available. The move has been made to solve the parking situation that has netted nearly twenty parking tickets at Newman Center throughout this semester.

Kings Name Johnson New Man On Throne

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Phil Johnson, an assistant coach and scout for the Chicago Bulls, was selected Wednesday to take over the head coaching chores of the slumping Kansas City-Omaha Kings in the National Basketball Association.

Johnson, 32, signed a contract for the remainder of the season and the next two years. Terms were not disclosed.

General Manager Joe Axelson announced Johnson's appointment at a news conference.

Johnson succeeds Bob Cousy, former superstar at Holy Cross and with the NBA Boston Celtics, who resigned recently, saying he was quitting for personal reasons.

Johnson, taking over the Kings, who are in an eight -game losing streak, said his first objective would be to "try to make an attitude change" in the Kings, who are 6-18 and in last place in the NBA's Midwest Division.

No Lights

ANAHEIM (AP) - The California Angels, acting to conserve energy, said Wednesday they had reduced by 12.3 per cent the number of home games requiring lights at Anaheim Stadium for the 1974 baseball season.

The American League team said it had eliminated 6 p.m. PDT late-summer Sunday starts, added a mid-week afternoon game and a Monday doubleheader beginning at 4 p.m. PDT.

The Angels list 64 dates with starting times at 6p.m. PDT or later and 15 starting at 1, 2 or 4.

Celts Streak At 12

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics streaked to their 12th consecutive National Basketball Association victory by belting the Capital Bullets 111-104 Wednesday night, spoiling former Boston star K.C. Jones' return to the Garden as a head coach.

Jones, one of the Celtics' all-time greats and favorite among fans, was saluted in halftime ceremonies, but his former Boston team left him wilted as Capital's coach.

The Celtics, now 16-3, spurted to a 24-8 lead in the first seven minutes, shook off a Capital rally which closed the gap to within 42-41 in the second period and then pulled away.

Jo Jo White ignited a 12-point outburst and the Celtics charged to a 58-45 halftime lead. Boston outscored the Bullets 32-22 in the third period for a 90-67 advantage and Capital couldn't catch up.

Avenging a 96-87 upset by the Bullets in Maryland last month, the Celtics employed a balanced attack. John Havlicek scored 22 points, White 21, Don Chaney 20, Dave Cowens 18 and Don Nelson 16.

The Bullets, dropping to 10-9 as leader in the NBA's Central Division, were led by Elvin Hayes with 23 points and Archie Clark with 22.

Bumbry Top Rookie

By GORDON BEARD

BALTIMORE (AP) — Al Bumbry appreciates his selection as the American League's Rookie of the Year for 1973, but he's already working to improve himself for next season.

"It's a motivation point for me to do better," Bumbry said of the award Wednesday in a telephone interview from Venezuela, where he is playing winter baseball. "Once I do well, I want to do better."

The speedy outfielder, a left-handed batter, hit .337 last season while playing mostly against right-handed batters, and stole 23 bases. He hopes by next year the platooning will be dropped.

In Baltimore, Manager Earl Weaver applauded the vote by the 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America and offered some long-distance encouragement for Bumbry in 1974.

"He more than likely will get a chance to play both ways next year," Weaver said.

Pitchers George Medich of the New York Yankees and Steve Busby of the Kansas City Royals, and Milwaukee catcher Carrell Porter each had two points.

Campy Mad

NEW YORK (AP) — Bert Campaneris of the World Champion Oakland A's believes he should have been named the World Series hero rather than teammate Reggie Jackson.

"I played seven good games. I expected to win it. Most of my teammates told me I would win it, so it was the biggest disappointment of my life," Campaneris, who hit .258 in the series and scored six runs, said Wednesday.

The World Series hero award is made by Sport Magazine. Campaneris' two-run homer off Jon Matlack in the final game of the seven-game series with the New York Mets started the A's on their way to a 5-2 victory.

The 29-year-old shortstop said he would like to renegotiate his 1974 contract with the A's.

Fem-Track

The UMass women's track club is busily preparing for the coming indoor season. Their first meet will be December 8th in Burlington, Vermont and the second will be the Eastern USTFF meet at Dartmouth College on January 5th.

The squad will field a two-mile relay team for the Eastern Invitational event, (4x880 yards) where they hope to break ten minutes for the distance. This event has never been held for women in the east before.

There are still many openings on the team for the high jump, long jump, shot put, and sprints. Any interested women are invited to contact Judy Kline at 546-5841 to find out details on practice times.

Bruins Tie

CHICAGO (AP) — Dale Tallon's second goal of the game at 13:46 of the final period pulled the Chicago Black Hawks into a 3-3 tie with the Boston Bruins in a National Hockey League game Wednesday night.

The goal, which came off a rebound of a shot by Chico Maki, touched off a violent argument in which Bruin defenseman Bobby Orr was given a 10 minute misconduct penalty.

The Bruins claimed that the puck had gone over the blue line before Maki gained control of it and fired on Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert.

The tie left the Bruins six points ahead of second-place Montreal in the Eastern Division while Chicago moved within two points of the Philadelphia Flyers in their race for first place in the Western Division.

Phil Esposito's 24th goal of the year on a power play got the Bruins out front, 1-0, at 7:36 of the first period. Ken Hodge and Dallas Smith got the two other Bruin goals. Jim Pappin was the other Chicago scorer.

Jets-Colts Sellout Denied On Local TV

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time this season, a local television station is blacking out a sold-out National Football League game in order to give armchair fans a chance to see a game with the "greatest viewing interest."

Carl Lindemann Jr., vice president of NBC Sports, said Wednesday that Sunday's Baltimore Colts-New York Jets game, starting at 1 p.m. EST at Shea stadium will be blacked out in the New York area so home viewers will be able to see the Cleveland Browns-Kansas City Chiefs game at 4 p.m. EST.

"The Browns-Chiefs game is the most significant contest on our schedule Sunday since it matches two title contenders," Lindemann said.

"We would like to present both games to the New York audience, but our contract with the NFL requires that we choose between them."

Lindemann said NBC "continues to endorse the congressional legislation which allows the boradcast of local home games which are sold out.

He also noted the decision to telecast the Browns-Chiefs game will give New York fans a chance to see two games in their entirety. Both the Jets and the New York Giants, who play the Redskins in Washington, begin play at 1 p.m. Thus the New York fans will be able to see the Giants' game at 1 p.m. and the Browns-Chiefs at 4 p.m., rather than having to choose between two 1 p.m. games with none at 4 p.m.

Icemen Drop Opener

By BILL BALLOU

Those rumors going around about UMass being long on offense and short on defense aren't rumors any more.

They're the truth.

The Minutemen were woefully short on defense (last night, anyway,) as they dropped an 11 (that's right) to 7 opening night decision to Salem State at Orr Rink.

The Vikings fired 52 shots, including 26 in a third period that saw the two teams combine for 11 goals, in giving two UMass goalies seeing their first varsity action a rude introduction to Division II hockey.

Salem State scored five straight goals in the first ten minutes of that wild third period and ran a 5-2 second period lead to 10-2 before UMass came back with five meaningless goals of their own.

The State attack featured four goals (including three in a row and all in the third period) by center John Griffin, two by defenseman Rich Lamby (one a shorthanded goal with the score 4-2 that broke all UMass resistance), and two by Tom Tabb.

UMass got two goals each from freshman Carl Burns and Mike Ellis, a junior defenseman who just missed a hat trick late in the game.

Jack Canniff employed two goalies, Jeff McReynolds who started, and John Binkoski who came on after State had built their lead to 8-2 in the third period.

While both McReynolds and Binkoski had their bad moments, both could make a killing suing the people in front of them for non-support.

The young Minutemen had an obvious case of opening night jitters as they stood around a good portion of the time, gave the puck away near their own net, and had trouble getting the puck out of their defensive zone.

To make matters worse UMass lost defenseman Dave Alesandroni with an arm injury in the second period. He was one of the four regular defensemen and the extent of the injury wasn't known immediately after the game.

For a while it seemed as though the Minutemen, though badly outplayed, might be able to make a go of it. Despite being outshot 15-10, they only trailed 2-1 after one period. McReynolds was sharp, getting beaten by Lamby and Tabb, but looking good on several tough shots from Salem people parked in the slot.

UMass counted on a fine individual effort by Billy Harris, but that was as close as they'd get.

Tabb and Mark Boudreau made it 4-1 halfway through the second period before Jim Lyons scored with the Vikings two men down. But just 25 seconds later, with State still a man short, Lamby stole the puck away from Robbie Quinlan at center ice and beat McReynolds badly on a breakaway.

The roof came down in that final period. Griffin scored three goals in the first six minutes, and Jim Baldassaris and Hal Lahey added a couple more before John Muse tucked one home to make it 10-3.

Ellis followed with his first, but Griffin hit again for the final Viking goal. Burns got his two and Ellis his second within a span of 39 seconds and that was it, thank goodness.

The final period was marred by a lot of stick swinging between the two teams, including one potentially explosive duel between UMass' Tim Howes and Salem's Jay O'Leary that sent four players to the penalty box.

INCIDENTALLY: The win was the first ever for Salem State over UMass, making the series now 2-1......Rich Lamby, probably the best State player, almost came to UMass. He said he had "a lot of problems" concerning his admission, so chose Salem State....Counting the 9-3 drubbing by Bowdoin in the last game of last season, UMass has now given up 20 goals in its two most recent home games....The Minutemen's next opponent is Merrimack, in Andover on Saturday. Merrimack has already beaten Providence College and Vermont.

Curt Gowdy Saluted At Boston Luncheon

BOSTON (AP) — Curt Gowdy was honored as "the nation's No. 1 sportscaster" Wednesday by the Greater Boston Council of Boy Scouts at a luncheon attended by sports and civic leaders.

Gowdy, former voice of the Boston Red Sox and now a national television sportscaster, received the annual "Good Scout Award" at a luncheon attended by more than 500 persons who contributed $25,000 to the Boy Scouts.

Gowdy also received a citation along with several other former well-known sports figures from the Boston area. Gowdy is a resident of a Boston suburb and owner of radio stations in New England and Wyoming.

Also honored Wednesday were Red Sox General Manager Dick O'Connell; Celtics President and General Manager Red Auerbach; Celtics Coach Tommy Heinsohn; former Red Sox Don DiMaggio, and Charley O'Rourke, leader of Boston College's 1941 Sugar Bowl champions.

Former heavyweight champion Jack Sharkey and former defenseman Eddie Shore of the Boston Bruins were honored but could not attend. Sharkey's wife was ill and Shore is recuperating from the latest in a series of heart attacks.

Others introduced included Billy Sullivan, president of the New England Patroits, and former Bruins star and General Manager of the Washington National Hockey League franchise, due to start play next season.

Wanna Make A Bet?

By RICH SEVIERI

Football is the big action sport for Jim. Football betting cards entitled Touchdown or Las Vegas Bowl, or whatever the office issuing them desires have fallen in popularity. Many bettors have voices dissatisfaction with the cards as wins pay considerably less than a few years ago and the least amount of picks has risen from 3 to 4 winners for a payoff. The placing of Thanksgiving high school football games on the card last year turned many bettors off. "The office or the bookie never loses money on the card," said Jim.

Jim also covers such football bets as the tease, the parlay, the action bet, and the reverse action bet.

"The two team 'tease' is a good bet," says Jim, nodding from his shoulders up. "It's the best bet," interrupts Larry. The tease works like this, you like the Redskins who are a six point favorite over Detroit and Miami who is a two point underdog to Dallas. The bookie gives each of your teams six points, making the Redskins even and the Dolphins a 8 point underdog. Both of your teams must win for you to collect on this even money bet. There is also a three team tease where each of the three teams you pick gets 9 points and a 4 team tease where each gets 12½ points.

Jim observed that in football betting, Kansas City goes off the board quite a bit since the Dawson investigation, that USC seldom beats the spread, and that few people bet on Houston.

If you wanted to make a bet on Tom Seaver to beat Holtzman in the series you might have been quoted odds by the bookie, something like 5½ to 6½. This means on a fifty dollar bet you'd have to put up sixty-five bucks on the Mets to make fifty.

"In baseball," explains Jim, "the best bet is to go with the iron, guys like Palmer, Seaver, and Hunter."

The amount of money wagered on the daily number pool has gone down since the Record American discontinued publishing it, according to Jim. The four digit number for Boston is figured from the seven race mutuals at Suffolk Downs except on Tuesdays and Thursdays when it is closed and Acqueduct results are used. The first digit is taken from combining the mutuals from the 1, 2, 6, and 7, the second from the 1, 2, 3, 5, and 7 and the third and fourth from the combined mutuals of all seven races.

Why do people bet?

"Some people like to go on the roller coaster", said Larry. "It's excitement and it gives you something to watch the game for."

I have different types of bettors, said Jim. "Some guys are smart bettors and others are compulsive gamblers. They'll take every different line you offer them. It's a sickness."

Jim surveyed the bar and tables around us and said, "the more they have to drink the more they want to ber," and with a slight grin on his face said, "in the long run the bookie will always win."

Pick A Sport

UMie fans are licking their chops again as they look over the '73-'74 Winter Sports schedule. You see, this is the best time of the year for the sport lovers on this campus: the time to stand in line in the bitter cold weather waiting for the doors of the Cage to open for the start of the J.V. basketball team; the time to start griping about the lack of a hockey rink of our own so we don't have to go all the way down to Amherst College to see UMass play.

Maybe its the bad weather that drives so many people into these sporting events. Or maybe it's because these sports get underway towards the end of a long, one-sport Fall season. — that disappointing football season.

But the most logical reason seems to be that the winter season offers the greatest variety of high level athletics.

There's basketball and hockey for the rowdies from the football stands to move into.

The basketball team always draws a large crowd and will certainly be big on campus again this semester since their fine showing in the NIT last year. Hockey will draw their share also; they're usually tough in Division II.

There's gymnastics for the lover of the fine arts, the so-called sophisticates, and even a few body lovers. The women's gymnastics team is only the defending National Champions. So if you want to see some gymn routines around this area you'll have to settle for this team. And the men's team isn't bad either. One of the most exciting sports events on this campus last year was when the gymnasts beat Temple here. The meet was nip and tuck all the way with UMass coming back to win it on the very last event before a very enthusiastic crowd at the Cage.

For the curious, there is the New England championship wrestling team to check out. They get tougher every year. They weren't around campus too much last year because their schedule made them travel all the time. Too many people associate this sport with the All Star Wrestling we've all seen on T.V. at one time or another. Collegiate wrestling is not like that at all. (Alright, don't refer me to the photo of the three UMass wrestlers with a combined weight of 840 lbs in the Sports Special, wise guy!)

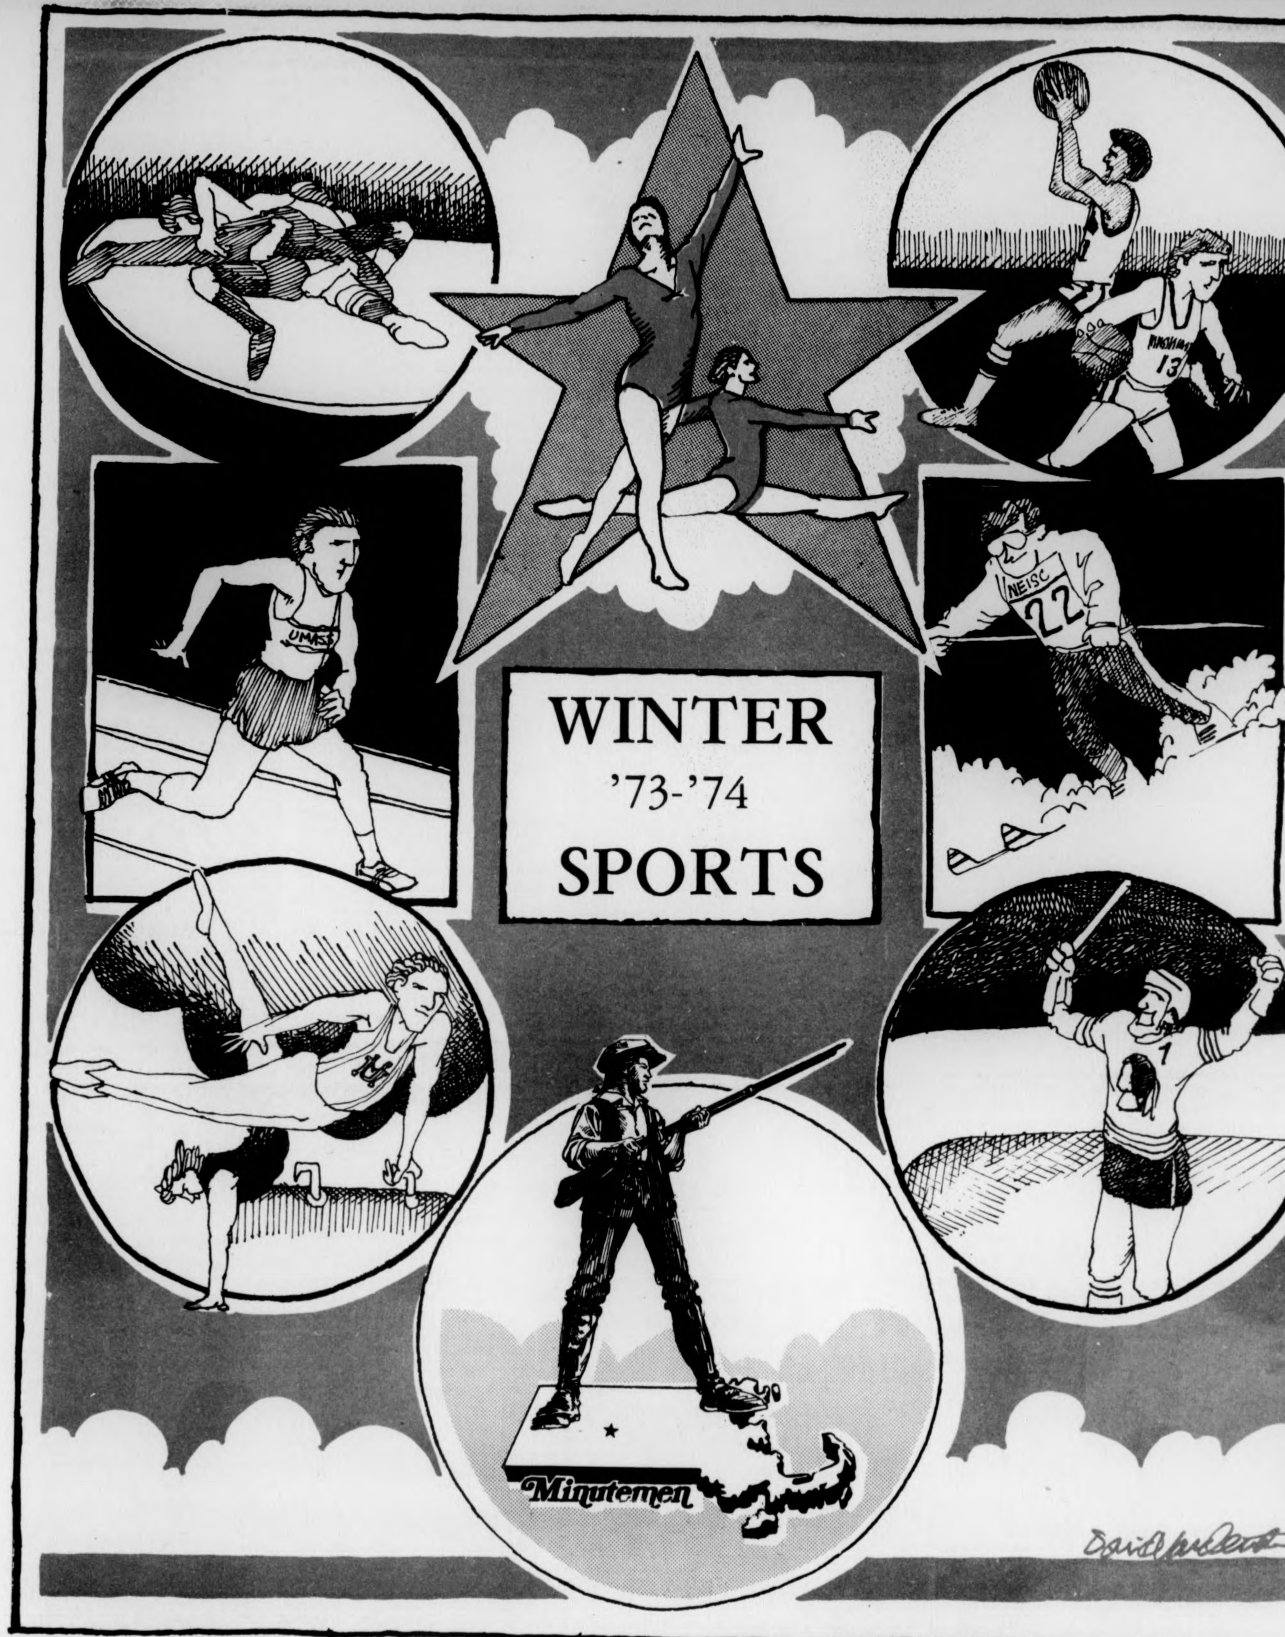
And for the whole family, the UMass athletic department presents the swimming teams and the women's basketball squad. Unfortunately, up until now that's the only group that's been attending their meets: families, friends, and former performers. But, it must be noted, that these sports are also on the rise and with a little promotion, could be attractive spectator sports — especially swimming.

There are some sports however, that only the die-hardest of sports fans could follow: indoor track and skiing. The track team doesn't have a facility of its own, there's never been one except for that "sidewalk" around the inside of Curry Hicks Cage.

The ski team goes up north to compete. That's where all the big slopes are, and even if there were the slopes around here, they'd still need snow — which hasn't stayed around this area for long in the past couple of years.

Take a look at the Winter Sports Special in today's Collegian and pick a sport — any sport — and make plans to go see some competition.

Whether you're just looking for a relief from the '73 Fall of Pennington, Thomas and Coburn; Or you need a break from you demanding school studies...Whether you're a jock, a fine arts freak, a freak freak, mom or dad, there's got to be something in the UMass Winter Sports Schedule that appeals to you.



Winter Season Offers Most For UMass Fans

This Winter '73-'74 Special is a composite survey of the teams and individuals that will be part of the UMass sports scene in the upcoming winter season. It is the culmination of an effort by the sports staff of the Daily Collegian to bring its readers the best possible coverage of UMass athletics.

In this special issue, you can ponder the outlook for your favorite team as presented by the writers who will basically cover that team in the months ahead. In addition, you get an inside view to some of the outstanding individuals you will see competing, plus some general comments relating to people, places, and the feeling that sport can generate.

WHERE TO FIND IT

BASKETBALL — The Minutemen have been to three NIT's in the last four years. Their goal this season is a fourth appearance in the tourney. Pages 2-3

HOCKEY — The second seeded team in Division II last year, the pucksters face a rebuilding season in which they could surprise. Pages 4-5

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS — Last year's national champions have everyone returning in an effort to repeat. Pages 6-7

Curry Hicks: A Love Affair

By MARTY KELLEY

A Love Affair - It will never rival what Romeo and Juliet had. With strength of heart she should be able to stand the pressure of divorce. Her affection can't be scaled with a warm kiss. But Curry Hicks Cage has an emotional feeling all its own...And neither time nor decadence can take it away.

She's an emotional orgasm. The Cage sleeps with no one in particular. She identifies with the motley mob of basketball parishoners who have given her a reputation that will far exceed and outlive the crumbling of her red bricks. Born out of need and now stalling for time, Curry Hicks has taken many wanderers into her bosom...Her scent is too appealing.

She's like a home for the homeless, an oasis for the thirsty. She's a playground and her constituents are there to perform more than enjoy. Unlike a sandbox the stage is much broader, like a theatre, so liken her to such. The actors perform and the gallery applauds or whatever. But at Curry Hicks Cage the audience is indeed part of the cast of characters...About 10 points worth.

Watching a basketball underneath the fish nets and tarnished beams of Curry is a night on the town. It's a festive event. There's pomp and pageantry to it. The environment is as scintilating as the endline to endline saga itself. The product, UMass basketball, is worthy of attention. But it's the people that haunt the caverns that have the Cage...and that's the love affair.

The Cage has character. It's like an ol' man waiting making his peace with God, but willing to hang on. Curry Hicks has outlived expectations, Her lights are blue, her forehead leaks, her blood pressure rises, especially when 18 straight points are run off against UConn. In a way Curry Hicks is an ungracious, rude, and down right insulting host. But her tenants love it. It's part of the show.

The Cage drama is like lying next to someone you love. You're constantly on top of the action. You're part cf a phalanx that's all but mesmerized Jackie Leaman, the mass hypnotist. For the hours that you wait in line and from the time you're within you're entranced by the mystique and the aura that the Cage exudes. You become part of that group mind. But you don't mind losing your identity for that hour, for you're caught up in that emotional trap...that eternal love affair of Curry Hicks Cage.

It's something you shouldn't miss. You really don't have to be into sports to appreciate it. It's a time to let one reach the extremes of emotion that we so often desire within a structured, troubled society that we operate within. Next to your fellow student shoulder to shoulder you feel at ease and you have a tendency to forget...It's too unreal.

But neither time nor decadence can take it away...

The Feeling That Surrounds the Game

By STEVE DECOSTA

Basketball is at the heart of the UMass campus. It's the downbeat: the pause between strokes where one can relax and enjoy the exploits of those athletes more gifted than himself.

There is an aura that surrounds the game; a feeling that encompasses the athletes, the coaches, and the fans.

You can see it at the Cage, the Civic Center, or even Madison Square Garden.

It is Jack Leaman getting a standing ovation when he walks onto the floor at the start of each contest. It is the rise in the crescendo of the crowd when the first Minutemen breaks through the paper hoop on the way to warmups. It is Al Skinner twisting and finessing his way past men that seem twice his size on the way to the hoop for what you know will be a sure score. It is John Murphy setting up on the baseline for one of those soft, lazy jumpers that always seem to find their way through the twine. It is Bill Endicott putting up one of his long range, sure fire bombers from that left-hand launching pad of his. It is Rick Pitino free-lancing his way to a behind-the-back assist. It is Jim Burke coming off the bench to do a job on the opposition's top scorer. And, it is the cowbell, that ultimate symbol of the type of basketball that seems to be played only at UMass.

That type of basketball has led to three NIT appearances in the last four years for the Minutemen. And you can bet that Leaman and his charges will be shooting for another shot at the big one.

While the three invitations in four years is impressive, the overall tournament record is not. In their three NIT appearances, the Minutemen have twice been eliminated in the first round, and have beaten only one team - Missouri in last year's tourney-in the annual classic. It is true that UMass has drawn the iron early in every tournament, but to be one of the big boys you have to beat the fellows who are already there.

But the NIT has had its advantages in the UMass basketball program. It has heightened the interest on campus to the point where an estimated 7,000 UMies made the trek to New York to follow the exploits of their beloved Minutemen in last year's classic.

It has made the name of UMass basketball known outside the friendly confines of New England. Believe me, they remember Skinner, Murphy, Endicott and company down in Missouri.

It has made it easier for Leaman and assistant coach Ray Wilson to attract some of the better ballplayers from not only Massachusetts but New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and throughout the East as well. Certainly the NIT appearances have helped to attract the talented torsos of such sought after players as Skinner, Pitino, Endicott, and the presently ineligible Jim Town.

Jack Leaman has only two arms, but he already has three NIT watches. You can bet that he won't have any trouble finding someplace to wear the fourth.

John Murphy launches a long, lazy jumper that you can bet is headed straight for the net.

Everything Normal In UMass Basketball

BY EARLE BARROLL

Jack Leaman is an optimist and therefore revels in the shroud of pessimism that usually escorts his basketball team into post-Julius Erving seasons. "I guess we're not overly impressive in the eyes of the basketball experts," he was saying earlier this week. "But we like it this way. Now we can sneak up on them."

Basically, then, everything appears to be normal with UMass basketball. And likewise all is well in the entire scope of New England hoop.

Providence, of course, is number one in New England and depending on your poll and magazine somewhere between sixth and tenth in the nation. Boston College preens excessively over its stockpile of "see you at the NCAA finals" talent. At UConn, they're still trying to convince people that they can finally play with one basketball at a time.

And here at UMass the players practice daily, the coaches toil at their trade and the best fans in the region believe in their team. The magazines, the polls, the preseason forecasts, the hoopla over the "bona-fides" really don't matter. What counts are the 20 wins at the end of the season, the 6000 crazies who frequent the Cage and a coach who candidly says, "don't worry, we'll be alright."

Leaman is 117 wins, 62 losses and three N.I.T.'s worth of coach as he enters this, his eighth season at UMass. He has a solid five man veteran nucleus to work with, a sophomore who's small in size and big in talent, a puzzling junior who, if he learns the system, could be something, two seniors with talent and smarts and a couple of freshmen with potential.

The schedule, on paper, doesn't appear to be as difficult as last year's, but nevertheless when you consider the studs and the horrors that await on the road, i.e., home court advantage, that doesn't leave much room for calculating perspective schedules.

The Minutemen will face two teams in Sports Illustrated's top twenty — P.C. (tenth) and Syracuse (12th) and one other among the five to watch after the top 20 — Boston College. All these are on the road, not to mention a season ending trip to Fordham and the annual road excursion around the Yankee Conference.

Then there's the super talent they'll be up against: P.C.'s Kevin Stacom and Marvin Barnes, Syracuse's Dennis (Sweet D) Duval who's supposed to be the sweetest thing this side of citrus juice. There's Andy Walker of visiting Niagara, touted as the best pro prospect from that school since Calvin Murphy. And, of course, the Boston over the rim three: Bob Carrington, Bill Collins and Will Morrison of B.C. not to forget the best player on that team, Mel Weldon of junior college All-American and World University Games (in Moscow) fame.

During the course of this season, you'll get your share of Leaman's talented bunch. They play patented basketball accented with a fast break and a ferocious full court and half court press. They're not big this year up front but rely on positioning and superior conditioning which over the years has proven more than once that it wins ball games.

Individually, there's Al Skinner who in Leaman's opinion is the best basketball player in New England, an All-East pick, possibly an All-American and smooth as silk when he lets his 6'4" frame unwind. John Murphy is a 6'8" center who shoots and handles like a guard, frequently dishing out some of his stuff from 25 feet or better.

That's two thirds of the front line. "The problem for us this year," Leaman admits, "is finding the third guy who can do the job." Translated: Situational play revolving around the idiosyncracies of Greg Duarte (the junior), John Olsen (the senior) and the two frosh, Joe Semder and Steve Mayfield.

The backcourt is the best in the region for quantity with quality. Right down the line, Rick Pitino, Bill Endicott, Jim Burke and Mike Stokes (the sophomore). "No problem," says Leaman. "We might even use Burke up front if we want to press with a speedy third forward."

And finally, Peter Trow, who apparently had given up basketball for football, returned to the team on Monday of this week. Another body, a talented one at that, someone who can help if he gets his repetoire back. "He looked pretty good on Monday," said Leaman. "But couldn't practice on Tuesday because of blisters." Everything is, indeed, normal.

Exhibitions No Clue To Skaters' Ability

BY ROY LYONS

Pre-season scrimmage games have always been what one might call kibitzer's delight. Armed with enough exhibition stats to choke a computer, the oft' heard but seldom seen "experts" can always give you the straight poop before any team opens the season officially.

Well, almost always.

Consider the UMass hockey team's two pre-season tune-ups. Trying to predict anything on the basis of those outings would be enough to give Jimmy "The Greek" more gray hair, Jeanne Dixon an ulcer, or Howard Cosell a chance to think instead of talk.

For openers, Jack Canniff's Minutemen journeyed to upstate New York to lock horns with RPI, a perennial Division One also-ran. They left town licking their wounds on the very short end of a 9-4 route.

Now it only remained for Boston College to chase them unceremoniously out of McHugh Forum in a match-up that took place last Saturday afternoon and we could all start to bemoan the loss of Pat "Red Light" Keenan — UMass own number four.

To be sure, the stage was set. The Eagles had just blown the doors off the football team, so, BC rooters had to be thinking, why not make a day of it? And if the thought of seeing UMass trounced twice in one day wasn't enough of a draw, the UMass-BC hockey scrimmage featured a couple other enticements — it was a freebee and the rink abutted the stadium. Besides, the hot dogs that went for half a buck in the stadium were only two bits in the rink.

Enter the icemen from Amherst and exit part two of the game plan. Oh, BC won it, 6-5, but think about it for a minute. The tradition-rich Eagles were among the top four teams in the country last year and have been one of the greatest shows on ice in college circles since the day Snooks Kelly agreed to build the Jesuits a hockey machine.

UMass, meanwhile continues to play the role of rinkless vagabonds, its confinement to Division Two virtually assured unless — someday, some how, some way — it can get a rink of its own.

At any rate, the team's abrupt about-face at the Heights means you can throw the pre-season gauge out the window. The questions marks, big enough before the RPI game, now loom even bigger. And on the eve of the '73-'74 season, no less.

ONE MAN TO BEAT — Billy Harris slows briefly to grip the puck, fakes a pass — and seconds later, scores. Harris was a linemate of record-setting center Pat Keenan last year, and finished third on the team in scoring.

(Staff Photo - Al Chapman)

TRIPPING, THE BEST DEFENSE — Pat Keenan was hard to stop last season, and his absence leaves a hole in the UMass offense as wide as the goalmouth. Lonnie Avery (5) looks on as a defenseman's tripping attempt backfires.

The JV's: Up And Down In The UMass Program

BY MIKE BROPHY

For the junior icemen the season starts in the middle of October and will not end until the waining days of March when the final switch is thrown at Orr Rink to melt the ice.

Yet they are not the varsity skaters of Pat Keenan fame. They are, perhaps, the most underrated group of hockey players west of Boston and yet they continue to play throughout the entire winter and have a five week layoff while on intersession. Then they have to come back and skate right into a pair of games with only three practices under their belts since before Christmas.

Well why don't they practice over the intersession? one may ask. The answer is simple. To do so, the ice would require renting and the dorms would have to be opened early for the athletes and there simply is not the money to do that in the hockey budget.

The J.V.'s have played two scrimmage games and have yet to lose while boasting a 1-0-1 record. They were tied 6-6 by the Wesleyan University varsity after having a 6-4 lead with less than two minutes to go in the third and final period of play. Three days later they battled the Fitchburg Wallace Wallopers of the New England Junior Hockey League (NEJHL) and came out 13-4 winners as Jon Archer, a product of Amherst High School, tallied seven points with four goals and three assists. Archer also had two goals and one assist against the Wesleyan Cardinals while playing both the center and wing slots for Coach Russ Kidd.

"Most anyone of these men could move up to the varisty at any moment they are called upon," commented Kidd, "They are that good." "Seven Freshman are now up with the varsity," he continued, "and will come down when I need them to round out my squad."

"It should be a good season for us as we have a returning group from last year mixed with some good skating newcomers," he said.

The goalie situation for UMass in the future seems to be in good shape as there are four on the J.V. squad and Kidd would not hesitate to use any one of them in the nets.

In the nets Kidd will have John Riley, Dana Redmond, Andrew Pelley, Douglas Janik, and Lawrence Tympanick as he needs them.

Stephen Dee, who led the JV's in scoring last season will return to lead the first line at the center post. Dee had ten goals and seven assists on the season last year that saw the Minutemen play 17 games without ever filling Orr Rink.

Untried Freshmen Key To Hockey Season

By BILL BALLOU

Only God knows what to expect from UMass in the 1973-74 hockey season, and he isn't telling Jack Canniff.

Canniff is faced with a monstrous rebuilding job, and much of the season is going to revolve around how well a slew of untried freshmen perform.

The key to the year lies somewhere in the six games before the Merrimack Christmas Tournament. The schedule, which includes two games with Merrimack and a two-game trip to Vermont, is tough as it stands, but to make matters worse the Minutemen will be playing the six games without one, and maybe two, of their best players.

Defenseman Brian Mulcahy, a junior and the best of last year's defense, is on academic probation and can't play until the Merrimack Tournament. Goaltender Chick Rheault, who might very well be the best in the East when he gets back in shape, is recovering from a shoulder operation and it's going to be a day-to-day thing as to when he's ready.

So, if the rest of the team doesn't pull through, they could find themselves spicing their Christmas eggnog with six losses. A realistic hope for the first six games, though, would be a 3-3 record, since UMass is playing three at home. Anything better could auger well for the future; worse and the Minutemen may have dug a hole too deep to escape from.

The Hockey Newsletter, which is the major publication in college hockey, picks UMass for third in Division II behind Vermont (their last year in the Division) and Bowdoin.

Don't bet on it.

A more realistic prediction would have them behind Vermont, Bowdoin, Merrimack, St. Anselm's and Norwich. However, a healthy Rheault and a studious Mulcahy could boost their hopes.

Off an early season 3-2 win over Vermont, Merrimack would appear to be the team to beat in the Division. Vermont won't be as strong and Norwich could be a sleeper.

Here's a position-by-position outlook:

GOAL--Rheault is obviously the number one man when he returns, and when he does UMass will be solid in goal. Until then either senior John Binkoski or sophomores Jeff McReynolds and Bruce Gledhill will have to do the job. From pre-season performance Binkoski would seem to be the man.

DEFENSE--This is where UMass seems the weakest. Canniff has just two skaters, besides Mulcahy, that he can count on. Junior Mike Ellis played well last season and will be a mainstay and freshman Tim Howes has looked impressive in pre-season. But after these guys is a gaping hole that no one has yet been able to fill. Dave Alesandroni, Dave Keough, Bill Mintiens, and Robbie Quinlan have been trying. Canniff will only dress five, so after Mulcahy returns only two of those four will stick. Quinlan, who has some varsity experience, and Alesandroni seem the best bets.

FORWARDS--There will be five--count'em--five freshmen in the four lines Canniff plans to use. The fourth line will be composed entirely of freshmen. Another line is composed of three sophomores and looks like UMass' best. It's centered by Billy Harris, a high-scorer as a freshman on Pat Keenan's line, Scott Stuart, who played varsity last season, and Jim Lyons. Another line has junior Kevin Conners centering John Muse, a junior, and freshman Mark Sullivan. The only senior forward, Jim Lynch, plays on a line centered by freshman Jim Dillon with Steve Nims the other winger.

Conners and Harris are potentially high scorers, as is Lynch. Dillon, Sullivan, and Lyons are unproven and Nims, Stuart, and Muse are particularly strong defensively.

The Minutemen are definitely going to miss the 43 goals of Pat Keenan and the leadership of Don Riley. And with only two seniors playing (Lynch and Rheault) they'll definitely make mistakes.

But it seems certain that they will score plenty of goals. They're just going to have to allow fewer, and that could be a problem. Rheault and ???, the two goalies, will see plenty of rubber and will have to be tough if the Minutemen are to do anything.

Names To Watch For

- Chick Rheault, goalie & key to play-off hopes
- Mike Ellis, most experienced defenseman
- Tim Howes, freshman defenseman
- Billy Harris, 3rd leading scorer

(Staff Photo - Al Chapman)

SHOT....SC...SAVE! — Mike Ellis whirls to pounce on the puck after goalie Chick Rheault's save. A late season accident spoiled an outstanding season for Rheault as goalie: This year, a bad shoulder makes the senior a question mark.

(Staff Photo-Al Chapman)

HIGH STICK — But no penalty. Jim Coleman gives the crowd the goal salute. It could have been one of his last, because the junior forward has left school.

Call Her Anne Or Ms. Vex; Her Routine is Amazing

BY JOHN BOCK

Some people call her Anne, some people call her Vex, but if you watch her on a floor rountine you would call her amazing. Last year Ms. Vexler finished fourth in the All-Around, fourth in the Floor Exercise, seventh in the Balance Beam, ninth in the Uneven Bars, and was named to the All-American Women Gymnastics team.

She is back this year for one more performance as an amateur collegiate gymnast and she desperately wants to help her teammates repeat as National Champions.

As a participant in the 1973 World University Games, held last summer in Moscow, Anne learned some things that might help her achieve that desire. Characterizing it as "the best thing that ever happened to me in gymnastics," Ms. Vex went on to say, "I learned a lot about gymnastics from everybody. I learned about how they work out, their routines, and other ways of doing things all over the world."

Were the gymnasts treated well on their visit to the Soviet Union? "Were we ever, it was like we were movie stars in this country." In a more serious vein she talked about the fact that the U.S. team's passports were mysteriously "lost" and they were confined to a hotel where they had to practice beam routines in the hall. By the time the passports were found they had hardly any time to practice.

Early in the fall Anne hurt her shoulder working on some vaulting routines and it is only recently that she has been back at close to full strength. This year she plans to keep the same routine on floor exercise, but will add some new tricks to her bars and balance beam activities.

Besides participating in gymnastics, Anne teaches it in Amherst and at her mother's school in East Brunswick, New Jersey.

As Co-captain, along with Thanne Poth, Ms. Vexler is known to be a good motivator and very conscientious about problems that women have with weight and routines. Yet she can always be counted on for comic relief as she purposely botches a floor routine or just bursts out laughing at a really serious moment.

Dedicated and delightful — that's Ms. Vex.

Women Gymnasts Defend National Title

By CANDY GROSS

"California here we come!", so says the UMass women's gymnastics team. Being the reigning AIAW National Intercollegiate Champions of 1973, and UMass's first national team in 50 years, they have every expectation of maintaining that title this spring at the Nationals in Sacramento, California. Coach Virginia Evans says, "The entire team is working to accomplish this goal, having been training and improving since the first day of classes in September."

According to assistant coach Michael Kasavana, "This year the level of performance has increased, and the routines are more exciting with higher level tricks. This is the most talented team in the history of UMass." And who could dispute these words, knowing that of the fifteen women on the team, four are All-Americans, eleven are returning members and the four 'new faces' are not so new to competitive gymnastics, having earned various state and national honors in recent meets.

As Ms. Evans puts it, "Massachusetts residents won't have to go to Munich or Moscow to see international quality routines, it's right here in Amherst!" Co-captain Anne Vexler adds some of this International flair to the team, having travelled to Moscow this summer as a member of the Women's World University Games team. She's one of the four All-Americans, as well as having finished fourth all-around in the Nationals at Iowa last spring. Keep your eye on Ms. 'Vex' this season.

All-Americans Margie Combs, Betsy East and Jeanine Burger are also back, and they should be better than ever. These three women had superb performances at the Nationals, Margie placing tenth all-around and second on the uneven bars, Betsy earning seventh on bars, and Jeanine capturing sixth all-around, fifth balance beam and seventh vaulting.

Rounding out last year's National team were returning gymnasts Heidi Armstrong, Marion Kulick and Alicia Goode, three strong contenders who will add depth to the team.

This year's other co-captain, Thanne Poth, has recovered from a reacurring ankle injury which prevented her from participating during much of last season's competition. Thanne's distinct and pleasing style will once more be displayed for the pleasure of all attending. Contributing to the strength of the uneven bars event are Gail Hannan and Gail McCarthy. These two gymnasts have some new and unique moves which should really 'razzle-dazzle' the audience.

It may be recalled that UMass's downfall last year was the balance beam and it is hoped that two new arrivals will be of particular help in this area, as well as in other events. In past meets, Diane Cantwell has copped top honors on beam and Jodi Hitt exhibits some fine poise and control which should get UMass off the ground. Completing this year's team are specialist Jill King and two fine freshmen, all-around competitor Linda Nelligan and specialist Carol Rogers.

Ann Vexler sums it all up, "I feel we're a lot better than last year and more exciting to watch. I'm going to love beating Springfield this year!"

For those who would like a preview of the excitement to come, the team will be performing at a televised exhibition on Dec. 8th in Westminster, Mass. Also, it should be noted that the first meet for the women will be against Trenton State College, at home in the Cage on January 26th. So, if you'd like a break from Intersession, come back to school a few days early to see the highest ranked women's gymnastics team in the nation.

Defending New England Champs

Wrestling "Coming Into Its Home"

By JOHN BOCK

Last season was one of the most successful for Coach Homer Barr's Minuteman wrestlers as they finished 10-4, were ranked in the Eastern Top 10 and won the University New Englands. The problem was that they accomplished most of that on the road and to many people were somewhat of a mystery team as they only appeared in Boyden gym three times.

Coach Barr begins his eighth season at UMass and on December 1 will take the wraps off of his 1973-74 team that will wrestle ten out of seventeen matches on the home mats in Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

And this year the fans will be treated to some of the finest teams in the East as the Minutemen host among others, Yale, Harvard, Hofstra, and Wilkes College. Coach Barr calls the schedule "representative" because "there are teams in there that can beat us as well as we can beat them and these are schools like Yale, Harvard, and Springfield."

The home mats will be a definite advantage because there are cases where an away match would mean an exhausting trip to Pennsylvania or Long Island. Plus there are two weeks where the mid-week dual match has been cut out. This is important because when a team like UMass, that pulls a lot of weight, wrestles twice a week it is almost impossible to have a wrestler make that weight twice and still be able to function off the mat.

The attrition rate in the wrestling room this season has been worse than the past few years, bearing out the addage that when the going gets tough the not-so-tough are asked to close the door behind them when they leave. The ten weight classes that have to be filled will see returning veterans in six of the weights. Senior Larry Reynolds, runner-up in both the Yankee Conference and the New Englands in 1973 will be back at 126 despite a slight shoulder separation. Russel Chateauneuf, 1972 New England Champion will rejoin the squad after a year's absence due to a knee injury and he will start the season at 142. Sophomore Cliff Blom, runner-up at 150 in the New Englands and Yankee Conference will return at 158 this season. At Heavyweight will be George "Showboat" Ireland, a senior and defending Yankee Conference and New England Champion. New England Runner-up at 177, John Connolly, will move up to 190 this season in hopes of winning the Championship that has eluded him.

Team Captain is Senior Steve Benson from Valley Stream, Long Island. Steve is Yankee Conference Champion and New England Runner-up at 158. This year he has moved up to 167 where he feels a good deal stronger. He placed a very strong second at the recent East Stroudsburg State College Open Tournament, which is perennially one of the nations toughest pre-season tournaments. Muscle and finesse characterize this transfer from New York Maritime and this could be his year to go all the way to the NCAA's.

About those other four weight classes. "We are going to have trouble at the lower weight classes, and we might have freshmen in three out of four," said Coach Barr. The Minutemen aren't settled yet at 118, 134, 150, or 177. The recruiting year was good. "I believe that the recruiting I did last year has resulted in getting wrestlers that will help keep our balance."

At 118 sophomore Steve Ruggeri will really be hustled by two freshmen standouts. Gene DiObilda out of Coatesville, Pennsylvania and Peter Sachon from New York have been pushing for the spot. At 134 Long Island freshman Bob Schab has looked very respectable and has been pushing junior Dick Muri, who sat out last year after incurring a serious knee injury in the early dual matches. These two might be joined by another junior in the form of Alan Elmont, who saw limited varsity action last year, but is one of the more physically bruising wrestlers on the team.

The 150 pound class is where the real competition is going to come. Right now two freshmen are battling it out for the December 1 opener. Larry Cecchine, Connecticut State Runner Up, and Sean Cronin, an Indiana regional titlist, have been beating each other up. Steve Jabout, another freshman and the fourth placer in his class in the New York State Tournament, will be joining these two after a brief rest from football. At 177 Tom O'Connell, a junior college transfer from Suffolk Community College on Long Island, will see competition from freshman Bob Kenny and another frosh, Bob Spaulding.

"It is going to be a big year for us in several ways; first, Rhode Island and Boston University have programs that are most likely going to peak this year and if they do and we can manage to break their back a little then we should be able to maintain a dominant position in New England wrestling. Second, we have to do well with a schedule like this so we can continue to improve it. And we have to do well in the New Englands."

Coach Barr continued by saying "The New Englands this year will be won on a break. The team that stays healthy is going to win. Rhode Island is wrestling one of the best schedules a New England team has ever wrestled (Navy, Clarion State, Montclair State, AIA) and if they come through it healthy they are going to be a little tougher than we are."

Wrestling is going to be on campus this year: the matmen are going to wrestle really good teams, and UMass is helping forge a place for New England wrestling in the national scene. That is a tall order to carry off successfully, but to paraphrase the U. S. Wrestling Federation's slogan, "Teams that wrestle with their problems come out on top."

(Staff Photo - Peter Manera)

Junior John Connolly, New England runner-up at 177, has moved up to 190 this season and will be putting the wood to opponents in much the same manner as this.

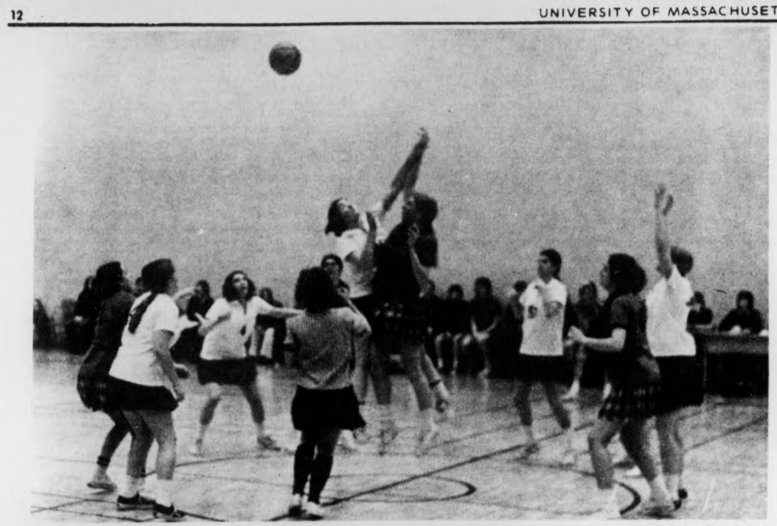
Hoop Women Are A Seasoned Team



Staff photo — Kevin Mack

The Women's Basketball team tips off its '74 season on January 31st with four of its last five starters returning.

BY LINDA MACKLER

"We expect a winning season with an improvement on last year's record and tournament standing." Those were the immortal words of Jane Farr expressing her optimism for the upcoming women's basketball season which begins January 31st.

In a league which includes all of New England and New York, UMass was chosen last year, with a 7-4 record, to go to the Regional Tournament. Sixteen out of an approximate eighty-five teams are elected each year, with the two top teams continuing to a National Tournament.

Last year UMass lost their first game at the Regionals and subsequently lost in the consolation semi-finals. The winner of the National Tournament was Immaculata College of Pennsylvania. It was the second year in a row for the small women's college. Queens college of New York placed second and Southern Connecticut, third.

UMass Coach Jane Farr, however, expects Southern Connecticut is a better team than Queens because they have been one of the top five contenders for the past five years, while Queens was consistently knocked out until last year. Last year UMass fell to Southern Connecticut by 13 points.

But UMass did have a winning season. The starting lineup had Pat Glispin at center; Jenny Edminster and Beth Fay at forward; and Marilyn Ritz and Joanne Smith at guard. Ms. Edminster was the leading scorer, averaging 14.4 points a game and also the leading rebounder averaging nine a game. Pat Glispin scored 8.2 points a game. Marilyn Ritz, a co-captain and Jenny Edminster will return to the team this season. Coach Farr also expects to bring up her leading junior varsity scorer and rebounder - Ann Foley. Ms. Foley averaged 11 points and 9 rebounds a game.

The major weakness on the team this year will be the same as last year - a lack of height. Pat Glispin is only 5'7''. She will have to face many other centers who are over six feet tall. Coach Farr is hoping to gain some height through in-coming freshmen.

The team will not be picked until December 1st, which leaves a week and a half of practice before intersession. The season will then begin at home on January 31st at 7:30 p.m. against the University of Connecticut. UMass will also play its traditional rival, Springfield College, at home on February 11th.

Brother Combos Could Bolster UMass Track Attack

By SCOTT HAYES

This year's Indoor Track team may not have another brother combination like a Gaylord and Jim Perry, but it does have three outstanding pairs of brothers who should help the team improve on last year's 1-4 record.

UMass finished third in the Yankee Conference last season, behind UConn and Boston University. The team didn't fare as well in dual meets, losing to UConn, Dartmouth, Northeastern and Adelphi while managing a win over UNH.

This year the 60-yard dash will be led by Pendleton once again. The only difference is that Tony Pendleton, who set more than one school record, graduated last year. His two younger brothers, Marshall and Anthony hope to take over where Tony left off. Anthony, a freshman, was the Massachusetts' state champion in the 100-yard dash and the long jump.

Bob and Ken Adamson should help the team this season. In a recent practice meet, the brothers (Bob, a sophomore and Ken, a freshman) finished 1-2 in the 50-yard dash. Both were timed in a speedy 5.4 seconds.

The Beland brothers help bolster the sprinting corps. Tom, a junior, was third in the 220 in the New England meet last year. Larry, a freshman, took second in the state in the 220.

Steve Crimmins will return to the 600-yard dash this season after a one year layoff. Crimmins ran a 1:12.4 in the 600 as a freshman, two years ago.

Hurdling is one of the strong points on this year's UMass team. Top hurdlers in the 60-yard high hurdles are sophomore Kurt Stegerwald and senior Jim Hennessey. Stegerwald and Hennessey finished second and fourth respectively in the Yankee Conference meet a year ago. Freshmen Bruce Stearns and Alan Supernault will serve as back-up hurdlers.

The 1,000-yard run will be one of the strongest events for UMass. Four runners who hold the school record in the two-mile relay will compete in this event. Senior Jack Maloney, junior Weeden Wetmore, sophomore Peter Byron, and Junior Devin Croft. All four runners have run 1:55 or better in the 880-yard run. Freshmen Harry Kelly and Chet Mysliwicz hope to challenge the experienced runners.

The team is strongest in the distance events. Cross Country runners Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, and Tom Maguire join Jack Maloney in the mile. Thomas ran the event in 4:11, Gillin in 4:12 and Maguire in 4:15 last year. Maloney was timed in 4:15 also. Chris Farmer, who has bettered his best mile time of last year already in practice, might be used as a swing man for the team. Farmer may be running two or three different events.

In the two-mile, Randy Thomas once again leads a fine group of harriers. Thomas' best time last year was 8:58, while Bill Gillin was timed 9:08. Tom Maguire ran the two-mile in 9:10 a year ago. Freshman cross country runner John McGrail and junior Tom Wilson will also be competing in the longest distance event. Last season, UMass placed three runners in the top nine in the New England two-mile.

In the field events, the long jump and triple jump look to be the strongest, as they were last year. Bob Adamson was the top New England jumper. He jumped 48'3 1/2'' in the triple jump and 23'9 1/2'' in the long jump. His brother Ken was the Class A high school champion for Massachusetts, while Anthony Pendleton was the state winner in the long jump in high school. Junior Mike Geraghty was ranked eighth in the triple jump last season.

Junior Mark Hughes leads the high jumpers. He was sixth in the New Englands with a jump of 6'5''. Conrad Gees, Ron Harris, and Bruce Stearns are three freshmen who should see their share of action this year. Gees and Harris jumped 6'4'' in high school, while Stearns' best jump was 6'2''.

This year's team is weakest in the pole vault and the weight events. Mark Bordne threw 13'6'' in the 35 pound weight throw which is about the same as the hammer throw in outdoor track. Shot putters include senior Bob Bocash and freshman Tom Lonergan who have both topped 35' in practice. A 35' throw in the shot put was the best throw last season. Freshman Scott Hermann rounds out the group of shot putters.

UMass opens its 1973 season with a meet against Maine on December 1. Assistant coach Mike Muska explained that Maine is going to be tough to beat, and that they're usually a well prepared team. Muska admitted that last year was a disappointment for UMass, but he is looking forward to this year's schedule. Muska feels that the team will get a lift from cross country, since the distance runners form the backbone of the team.

(MDC Staff Photo)

Phil Broughton finishes one of his best races of last season. Broughton and his teammates hope to improve on last year's 1-4 record when they open their season Saturday at Maine.

Women's Swim Team Working to Improve

By MDC STAFF

Every afternoon the swim team takes over the North P.E. building pool...as the Naiads leave a "swim team warm-up with a four hundred" can be heard from third year veteran Coach Pat Griffin. A determined UMass Women's Swim team appears to have set goals, starting training back in September, swimming and working out five days a week as well as weight training and conditioning in preparation for their meets beginning in February.

The team, last year, won in the Albany Invitational and in regular meets held a 2-4 record, defeating Middlebury College and URI, and losing to Southern Conn., UNH, Mt. Holyoke, and touch contender Springfield College.

Four swimmers represented UMass in the Eastern Championships last year in Westchester, Pa. where UMass placed nineteenth. Sophomore Mary Ellen Dash finished 7th in the East in the 50 and 100 yard fly and 11th in the 100 yd. free-style and junior Laurie Seluk, also in the Easterns finished 23rd in the 100 free and 50 fly. It is expected that a much stronger contingent will be sent to the Easterns this coming March.

As the competition improves so will UMass as Ms. Griffin states, "the team will be definitely stronger than last year, hoping to qualify as many swimmers as possible for the Eastern and National Championships in March." Most of last year's team has returned, including sophomore diver Carol Canterbury. Newcomers of promise include Cindy Whiting, a Western Mass. high school champion, Karen Johnson, Diana Perry, and diver Karen Fedora.

The team started the season officially Nov. 28 in the Wellesley College relays away, and will continue their season, after training over the January recess, on Feb. 7, in a tri-meet with Wellesley College and Conn. College at home.

MARY ELLEN (MELON) DASH competes in the butterfly. Last year she placed seventh in the East in the 50 and the 100 butterfly stroke.

New England winters can be cold — windy — snowy — in a word, unpredictable. So Blyda Ford has opened an additional display area inside the Mt. Farms Mall in Hadley. When it comes to innovations in the displaying & selling of new cars — in this area Blyda Ford has always been the leader. The first with the "Big Lot" concept displaying HUNDREDS of new cars — and now the first in the area with a complete automobile showroom INSIDE a shopping mall. And Blyda Ford invites you to stop in any time you are strolling by. More than a dozen brand new 1974 Fords are on display. There is a wide choice of video-tapes available to view at your convenience. And of course, the friendly Blyda Salesmen will be there, too, to answer any of your questions.

Just one more step to bring more meaning to the phrase.

Gymnasts Look Strongest Ever

By JOHN BOCK

One thing that the UMass men's gymnastics team has not done this year is just hang around, tumble around and vault around Boyden Auxiliary gym waiting for the season to come. They can't afford to because "this should be the strongest team UMass has ever had," according to Coach Tom Dunn.

In his first season as head Coach last year, Coach Dunn led the gymnasts to a 9-3 meet record and a fourth place finish in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League. UMass is one of ten schools in the EIGL and they represent the cream of the crop in Eastern Gymnastics. At the top of the ladder is ever present and always powerful Penn State, the 1973 runner-up. Temple, Springfield College, Pittsburgh, Army, Navy, Syracuse, Southern Connecticut and Cornell are the rest of the member schools.

The Minutemen have every one of these teams on the schedule this season. Last year UMass was tied for second on the basis of its dual meet record.

Six events plus an All-Around competition make up the program for gymnastics and each man chooses a specialty or elects to become an All-Around performer in which he competes on the parallel bars, floor exercises, pommel horse, still rings, long horse, and horizontal bar and tallies a score.

The 1973-1974 team has its two best All Around men back from last year and they look to do well this year. Gene Whelan, a junior from Bedford, New Hampshire and Steve Scuderi, a senior from Springfield will lead the team. They are joined by senior co-captains Rich Seikunas and Jay Thomsen. Seikunas is an All Around competitor and Thomsen a vaulting and horizontal bar specialist. He was the best floor exercise man on the squad but a recent operation on both knees leaves his participation in that even doubtful. Other veterans and their events are Bill Brouillet and Roy Johnson on the All Around. Johnson suffered a severe dislocation of the elbow in a recent intrasquad meet and will be out until next semester.

The freshman recruits will help balance the team and provide a push to the upper classmen. UMass will be able to brag about its Marks brothers, but will be referring to Paul and Steve Marks. The brothers are from Long Island and they have Paul on the All Around and Steve competing in four events. They are good prospects for a varsity berth along with Peter Lusk, a frosh from Burlington, Mass. and the man who has to replace All American Jay Aronstein on the still rings. The starters are picked on the basis of four intrasquad meets and if scores are close, Coach Dunn goes with the most consistent scorer.

Coach Tom Dunn is very optimistic about his team's chances this season. "I believe we will be closer to Penn State this year than we have ever been." If anybody knows how Penn State works it is Tom Dunn. A 1971 Penn State grad, he was twice named to the NCAA All-American team and won the NCAA parallel bars championship in 1971 as the team captain. He is assisted this year by Bob Koenig, a teammate at Penn State.

The Minuteman gymnasts hope to see Hicks Cage almost as much as Boyden Gym as the place their meets will be held. They have their toughest meets at home this season and enjoy the room that the Cage affords.

Penn State, Southern Connecticut, Springfield and Navy are "Home" and none are pushovers. Penn State lost All American and Olympian Marshall Avener to graduation but they will have someone quite capable of filling his shoes and a full house at the Cage might psyche out the Nittany Lions. Last year a strong Temple team was upset as much by the crowd at the Cage as the stellar performances given by the Minutemen.

For UMass it is an uncertain season that lies ahead, but the balance of experience and depth plus the confidence the Minutemen have will help reassure them and just might be the downfall of some opponent.

INTENSE CONCENTRATION marks the face of one of UMass' finest on the parallel bars as the Minutemen try to improve on last year's 9-3 record. They hope to land feet first at the top of the EIGL, which would put them in a prominent position for an NCAA try.

JV Hoopsters Shoot for Winning Season

By STEVE SARACENO

The three players flash down the court in a near-perfect rendition of a three-man-weave. Sharp passes. Fancy footwork. Precise timing...until they get to the layup. The basketball carreens sharply off the rim into the shooter's face. JV Coach Chuck Olsen frowns and says, "Try it again". This is what JV basketball is about.

Coach Olsen is in his first year as a basketball mentor. He's working with a squad that is composed solely of walk-ons. That is, thee are no scholarship players on the team. With a team like that, the layups aren't always going to be made. The JV's can be very good at times, but the words "Try it again" are bound to be used alot, too.

It's hard to put together a good JV team when the emphasis is on the varsity program. Two of the expected starters are not even practicing with them. Billy Santos, a guard, and 6'7" center Arnold Johnson are working out with the varsity at the moment, but will most likely be playing for little Minutemen when the season opens December 1. Rounding out the lineup for the Rockwood Academy opener will be forwards Gary Kapinos and Dave Tewhill, along with Mike Reedy at guard.

"We're shooting for a .500 season," says Olsen. "It's my first year, and I'll be learning along with my players". Last year's squad was less than .500, so a winning season would be quite an accomplishment in Olsen's premier season.

The three man weaves, fast break drills, foul shooting, and grueling wind sprints will be standard practice procedure until then for the JV's ...and so will the three-word-phrase Coach Olsen directs to the budding hoopsters--"Try it again".

New England Alpine Champs

Strong Skiers Hope To Repeat

BY WALT POWERS

Coach Bill MacConnell hopes his ski team doesn't get off to a flying start.

"Right now, I think our greatest hazard is peaking in our first race," he said.

His fear is well-founded, though hardly pessimistic. Last year UMass opened its season avalanche-style, placing eight skiers in the top eleven (out of eighty competitors). They slalomed through the rest of the season less spectacularly, but still wound up with their fourth straight Osborne Division Championship, their third NEISC title in three years, and the first National Collegiate Alpine Invitational tournament ever held. And barring a snowless winter or a moratorium on gasoline sales, UMass is headed downhill toward a repeat.

MacConnel, entering his thirteenth year of coaching, offered a simple explanation for his success.

We dominate our division simply because we train harder and are much more prepared than our opponents."

The reasons are more complex of course. For some unfathomable reason, good skiers gravitate to UMass. This year MacConnell will choose a twelve-man team from thirty candidates, and this team will be one of the largest and deepest in New England.

Kurt Syer is the team leader. A co-captain and team manager, he joins Dick McWade, Steve Tonelli, and co-captain Dave Rutter in a group of potential race-breakers. Two brother combinations, Dave and Ben Ferris and Larry and Gary Peck, along with Bill Nebesky, will give the Minutemen the deepest team in the division. It is this depth, along with rigorous training and a finely honed espirit de corps, that should cement UMass at the top of the New England hill.

MacConnel sees his toughest competition coming from Amherst, Northeastern and BU. All three teams beat the Minuteman at one time or another last year, but none did it consistently. All three have outstanding individuals, and Amherst trains three weeks in France. None of them have quite the training program UMass does, though, and this training involves a lot more than keeping the muscles toned.

"Our long intercession is largely responsible for our success" MacConnel pointed out. "Because during it, we're able to train at Haystack Mountain five days a week. During this time, we live together, eat together — and ski together. By the time the season opens, we have thousands of slalom gates behind us. We have timed slaloms and dual slaloms, and a funny thing happens here. Going against the stopwatch, everyone falls into their seeds. But in head-to-head dual slaloming the rotation breaks up. This gives the lower seeded skiers a chance to move up, and gives everyone a chance to work out their nervousness BEFORE competition. By the time the season opens we are in excellent, competitive condition, and this has a demoralizing effect on our opposition. Our opponents gradually make up their training disadvantage during the season, though, and that's why I don't want our skiers to peak so early."

College Ski Explained

B.W.J. POWERS III

UMass is the defending Osborne Division, NEISC, and National Collegiate Alpine champion.

That all sounds pretty impressive and confusing, especially if you're unfamiliar with intercollegiate skiing. Basically, here's what it all means.

There are two varieties of intercollegiate ski competition, carnival and alpine. Carnival involves three types of skiing: jumping, cross-country and alpine events, such as slaloming. The better New England schools, such as Dartmouth and Middlebury, concentrate on carnival competition.

Most New England schools compete in alpine competition. These consist of slaloming or giant slaloming. Each team enters six skiers in the day's event. Each skier makes two runs and his score is the sum time of the two runs. The sum of the lowest four individual scores are added to make the team score.

NEISC stands for the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference. This conference is divided into three divisions, and UMass is a member of the Osborne division. To win an Osborne division race, a team has to post a lower score than all eight opponents.

The NEISC championships, unlike the division, are a one-shot affair involving all three divisions of the conference.

The national Alpine Championships race is an invitational meet involving college teams from across the country. It was instituted last year, and held in conjunction with the New Englands.

Still confused?

TIGHTROPE WALKING AT 100 MPH — Competitive skiing is an unforgiving sport. Wasted inches around the slalom gates translate into seconds behind at the finish line, cut the gates too close, and you fall. Here Larry Peck begins his turn on a rutted course.

(Staff Photos - Dave Ferris)

A NOT-SO-CANDID-SMILE — Ben Ferris, last years ski-team photographer, poses as he rounds the slalom pole.

I READ YA, COACH! — Sophomore Steve Tonelli leans toward the slalom gates as coach Bill MacConnel radios instructions to his captains in last years NEISC championships. Tonelli is an experienced sophomore who has trained in France; MacConnell is one of the most successful ski coaches in New England.

Returnees Bolster Women Skiers Hopes

by MDC Staff

For the women of Haystack Mountain the winter season appears to be one of forthcoming wealth as they are loaded with six returning veterans including captain Heather MacConnell who is noted for her combination of endurance and speed skiing on the northern slopes.

The team finished third in the league last year, but they were not as deep a team as they appear to be this year. To date Coach Marcey Wertz, a graduate student in exercise science, doesn't even know who is on the squad. The team had a meeting last week to get organized. "All the veterans and a few newcomers showed up. But I still won't know until we actually hit the slopes in January when we start training for the big slalom matches," said the coach.

"This is the year we will do it. Just wait and see," the coach said, "as we mop up the league with the great skiers we have this year." And mop up well may, because the other New England schools were all hit heavily by graduation.

The season opens on February 2nd for the women and will continue through the latter part of March with a total of about eight matches plus the championship course races.

New Look, Coach May Lift Swimmers From Lower Depths

By ROSEMARY WESTON

Rising out of the depths of the Boyden lagoon comes the UMass swim team with a brand new look and philosophy. And after last year's disasterous 1-5 season, there's no where to go but up.

The new look is sparked by the confidence of the new coach, Mahumed "Bey" Malamed, an Israeli swimming veteran of the 1972 Olympic team.

Team confidence seems to be the key to this year's start. Team co-captain George Kwiecien sighted the season's goals as being one of "no miracles but we are aiming to do well at the New Englands in March."

Coach Malamed added, "We have no pretentions about putting UMass on the swimming map of the USA at this point."

Perhaps entering the season with established strong points in diving, freestyle, and back stroke will influence victories in the other events. This is what the coach is hoping for.

Top diver Jeff Crouse could break the top 5 in New England this year. He is backed by Paul Lilito and Earl McAllister.

Co-Captain Dick Blaisdell and Jeff Crooker will lead the freestyle event this year. Blaisdell was the only UMass swimmer named to last year's All-Yankee conference team.

Back strokers Scott McNabb and Kwiecien should be the best performers in this event.

Also part of the team's new look is assistant coach Larry Lammbert from Vienna, Austria and three women managers: Gale Forman, Jane Loudermilch, and Pat Magnifico, who should boost the overall morale of the team.

The team has doubled the number of meets this season to twelve. Their number one goal: to beat arch rival UConn.

Coach Malamed points out that dedication is what keeps his swimmers going. "The men are striving for self-improvement at this point," he said. "They utilize their time as best they can and they receive no scholarships and little recognition. The only men that are here are those who are interested in swimming."

And it's this new philosophy that just might bring them up from the depths of that lagoon.

(Staff Photo - John Neister)

Carl Zulick nears the finish in the 200 yard butterfly event last year. This finish was one of many first recorded by Zulick. The longer butterfly races are some of the most physically testing events of swimming as a good butterfly man or woman uses every muscle in his or her body.

Jean-Pierre Debris

The Horrors Of Vietnam Still Exist

By SHERMAN BOYSON

"I was driving my motorcycle through a road in Vietnam one day, when I saw two bodies lying in a rice field. I stopped, and started to take pictures so I could show my friends the atrocity of the war. A group of Vietnamese women mistook me for an American taking a body count, and they started to insult me. Before I could explain what I was doing to them, a Saigon policeman pulled a gun on the women and started pushing them away. Then he spoke to me in English and told me to keep taking pictures. I was so ashamed," said Jean-Pierre Debris, a former political prisoner in Vietnam.

It was that feeling of shame, and a general disgust of the cruelties he saw, that drove Jean-Pierre to openly protest the Thieu regime in Vietnam. That protest resulted in his arrest and two and a half years imprisonment.

Speaking last night to a crowd of over one hundred as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program, Debris gave vivid personal accounts of the tortures he saw inflicted upon political prisoners of the South Vietnamese government. A Frenchman by birth, Debris taught in Vietnam between France and Vietnam. "It didn't take long," he said, "to learn of the corruption of the Thieu government." As an example, he told of how he was offered as much as three thousand dollars for copies of the national exams by generals and senators who wanted the exams for their sons.

Jean-Pierre Debris

In his first two years in Vietnam, Debris learned how the Thieu government works. "You have been told", he said, "that the refugee camps are filled with communists from the north. The truth is that they are Vietnamese villagers that have been driven out of their homes by the American army. Because the villagers help the Viet Cong, the army forces them to leave their villages and move to the camps near the city where the army can watch them.".

Debris went on to say how the men ended up joining to get money for their families; and the women end up in prostitution. "There are 300,000 prostitutes in Saigon, some as young as 14 or 15, selling themselves for the price of a pack of cigarettes."

It was witnessing these events that finally drove Debris into protesting the Thieu regime. He and another Frenchman passed out leaflets denouncing the corruption of the government. They were quickly arrested and imprisoned in Chi Hoa prison in Saigon. It was in Chi Hoa that Debris learned of the torture that political prisoners undergo. He said "the prisoners are tortured for information and confessions, and even to get them to salute the Saigon flag."

Talking last night, Debris proved himself to be a forceful speaker who really impresses his listeners. He conveyed his horror and intense desire for reform to the audience. Having been traveling in the United States for only three months, his French accent was still very prominent. But his audience had no trouble understanding him, or grasping his desire for a change in the present Vietnam government. They listened intently as he recounted stories of the tortures used in the prison. Needles placed under fingernails, rape, electric shocks, burns, — all are used to get the political prisoners to cooperate with the government.

The political prisoners are not all communist men. "Anyone who is against Thieu is labeled as a communist" Debris said, "but that isn't true. Many are students, lawyers, women, monks, and even children." He told of how one seven year old boy was tortured to get information about his father's friends.

Debris was not subject to as much torture as the native prisoners were. This was due to the fact that "Thieu did not want westerners to learn of the tortures going on inside the prison" he explained. Debris also thinks that this was part of the reason that finally convinced Thieu to release him in 1972. He was immediately sent out of the country and will not be allowed back in.

Debris emphasized that "while the prisoners of war have been released, 200,000 political prisoners are still in Saigon jails and prisons. They are bound with handcuffs made in Springfield, Massachusetts; gassed with grenades made in Lancaster, Pennsylvania; and held in cages made in Houston, Texas."

American involvement doesn't stop there, though. Debris reports that "90 percent of Thieu's budget comes from the United States."

Since September, Debris has been traveling with the Indochina Peace Campaign trying to garnish support for political reform in South Vietnam. He explained that the American citizen can contact the IPC at 2 Brookline Street in Cambridge if they want to help. The IPC will supply a list of addresses to write to. "Public pressure is a very powerful weapon" Debris explained. "When letters started coming in for my release, the beatings were quickly stopped. Writing is very effective. They depend on America for money, and if it is taken away then will have to stop."

Outward Bounders in the mountains.

36 To Brave Winter

By MIKE KNEELAND

When some 36 students and faculty members return from the Outward Bound's course Jan. 27, they might be able to impress a lap reindeer herdsman.

After completing the 21-day course in north-central Maine, the participants will have received extensive training in map and compass work, cross-country skiing, winter camping, snowshoeing and first aid.

A. Donn Kesselheim, Professor of Education, aid the course is not designed to "see how tough you are", but to provide experiences designed to promote insight into the nature of one's personal strengths.

Group harmony is also stressed. "You can't make it alone," says Kesselheim.

Both men and women will attend the winter course which will cost them $450. Some will receive academic credit.

By finding strengths not known about, Kesselheim feels educators and administrators will better perform their jobs. Instructors feel that such a training course can help develop an individual's self-confidence in handling various circumstances in life.

Outward Bound began in 1941 in England as a means for training young merchant seamen who faced hazardous maritime service. Today there are 28 Outward Bound schools operating in five continents.

Janitorial Cutback Attributed To Orchard Hill Garbage Problem

By ED GORMAN

Orchard Hill residents have been complaining of a "garbage problem" in the dorms and two Heads of Residence have attributed the problem to a janitorial cutback which was approved by the Rents and Fees Committee last spring.

The problem is evident in the overflowing trash rooms in the "links" of the dorms and the ever increasing piles of recyclable paper that also adorm the links.

According to Steven Stoia, head of residence in Webster the problem of too much garbage has resulted from a cutback in the number of janitors assigned to service the four dorms on Orchard Hill. The cutback followed passage of a bill by the Rents and Fees Committee last spring that cut the number of janitors per dorm from four to three and ended weekend service.

Joseph Santuro, head of residence of Field House, said "Dorms are designed to be worked by five janitors not the four that were assigned and certainly not three as is the case now. With sick leave and vacation leave we actually only have two and a half janitors and no service on weekends."

Cindy McGrath, Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) said that OHAG has a group of people investigating the possibility of using the reserve funds to hire another custodian to relieve the "janitorial crisis." The emergency reserve funds are normally used to finance the caulking of windows or leaking roofs during the winter and spring.

The janitorial cutback is most evident at the end of a weekend. The garbage has not been collected for three days. However "weekend garbage" is diffferent from "weekday garbage." With the dining commons closed on weekends, many students cook for themselves and add food waste to the problem of the overflow.

Santuro said, "The University, by not answering to the needs of more janitors, adds to the health, energy and fire problems."

He said the smell of the trash rooms at the end of a weekend gives a good indication of the health problem involved and that piled up recyclable papers is a fire hazard. He also said University rule prohibits hot plates and other electrical cooking utensils in the rooms but because the dining commons are closed students use them thus contributing to the energy problem.

"Let's face it. The Physical Plant can't help it. The University grew faster than the Physical Plant in the past 10 years. They are two or three years behind on some problems," said Santuro.

Another problem facing Orchard Hill is the accumulation of recyclable paper in the links. Paper has accumulated in the link corners for as long as a month. They have been one of the major eyesores on Orchard Hill.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) alloted funds for a recycling bin located behind Field House a few years ago. According to Santuro the bin is filled every three days and many times the paper is piled all around the bin. He said the problem is so great that at times residents of fields are forced to throw recyclable paper in the regular garbage.

Santuro said that CEQ and the Physical Plant are responsible for the problem. When the bins were installed, CEQ was told by the Physical Plant Grounds Crew that they would remove the recyclable paper every Wednesday "if they had the time."

Physical Plant really can't find the time some weeks because of the work overload resulting from the rapid growth of the University, according to Santuro.

Santuro said the problem can be solved by installing more bins but CEQ has failed to allot any funds to buy them despite appeals from many influential Hill people.

The unclean environment affects student's pride in the dorms and may be a cause of some of the vandalism in the dormitoris, said Stoia.

Students in Webster have complained of "filthy corridors and dirty sinks" and one student mentioned "fungi growing in the showers."

There also have been cases of elevators being filled with the recyclable paper and practical jokes where a person's room was filled with the papers.

Other times the links resemble the sides of buildings following a blizzard with "drifts" of paper stacked up to the ceiling.

Fac-Sen Votes Support Of Intersession Classes

With coal and oil supplies to the University being cut, appropriate responses to the energy crisis at UMass were discussed at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

Also debated were the Appley Report reviewing graduate programs and a study to determine how graduate student quotas are established.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery addressed the senate on the UMass/Amherst campus' response to the fuel shortage.

"Coal deliveries are not guaranteed and the oil supply may be cut, too," stated Bromery.

"Presently we are responsible for heating and lighting eight million sq. ft. of space including academic and residential areas. Yet we must find ways to reduce our fuel consumption by 15%," he continued.

"A four day work week would be impossible," Bromery said, "in view of our previous commitments." As alternative solutions, the Chancellor proposed lowering thermostats and possibly shortening lunch hours for employees so that offices on campus could close at an earlier hour.

But these measures would not lower energy consumption a full 15%. To meet this figure, Bromery said, "We are considering cutting the proposed intercession activities from Jan. 7-28 to Jan. 14-28."

By shortening the January term to two weeks, Bromery hoped that residence halls and certain academic areas could be shut down lowering the fuel and electricity usage by the University during the holiday recess.

Presently the University relies largely on coal fired furnaces but is in the process of converting to a oil burning system. Such a change will be delayed according to the Chancellor, pending the approval of continued coal burning by environmental interests.

A motion by the Rules Committee called for the suspension of all special educational activities planned for the 1974 January break.

Bromery responded to this motion, saying that a total shut down of the University would still be impossible. "Some faculty, staff and students would still require access to the University due to ongoing projects," replied the Chancellor.

The Rules Committee motion was defeated.

In othe business, a motion by Joseph S. Larson to study the procedures of establishing graduate quotas was passed.

Also passed were two motions calling for further review and study of the Graduate Program Review (the Appley Report) before its implementation.

Watergate: Nixon's Repression Of Political Moderates?

By ROBERTA McCANN

Is Watergate an unique development in American politics?

William Connelly, a professor of Political Science at UMass, said last night at a Watergate Teach-In that political intimidation and repression of leftist groups has prevailed throughout the history of the U.S. The only difference, according to Connelly, is that President Richard M. Nixon has moved repression and intimidation to centrist more moderate groups.

Connelly, speaking to about 40 people at the Teach-In organized by the Radical Caucus of the Political Science Department, explained Watergate said, "Our history of intimidation and repression of leftist groups has created the possibility of intimidation and repression of people in the middle. Watergate is like the other break-ins but this time, it was against the Democratic Party, not the Black Panthers. The targets have only changed under Richard Nixon."

John Powers of the Young Socialist Alliance attributed Watergate to the anti-war movement. Powers, like Connelly, said Richard Nixon acted against the Democratic Party because of its connections with the anti-war movement Powers said the movement "petrified Nixon".

"I am in favor of impeaching Richard Nixon. He is guilty of many crimes. Watergate is just a part of those crimes.", Powers said.

The impeachable crimes of Nixon, according to Powers, include the repression of leftist groups, Vietnam, U.S. involvement in the overthrow of Allende in Chile, and the war in the Middle East.

Pat Rector, a graduate student in political science at UMass, told the audience that "Women can take some comfort in that we have not been specifically involved in Watergate."

Speaking on "The Immorality of Politics: a counter strategy for women.", Ms. Rector offered a "Guerilla strategy" for women finding themselves in a male dominated and defined society.

"Women must blow the whistle on injustices, make them public, and sacrifice dog-like loyalty to moral principles.", Ms. Rector said.

Ms. Rector noted that women such as Emma Goldman, Sojourner Truth, and Angela Davis had to move out of the dominant system to effect that system.

Professor Connelly said that the U.S. political system provides for intimidation and repression of dissident groups in several ways.

1. The use of established police institutions to "terrorize the left".

2. The use of laws that are established for one purpose for the role of intimidating the left. Connelly cited as an example, the use of anti-trust laws against labor groups.

3. The infiltration of groups by "agent provocators".

The presence of "moderate" journalist on the "Enemies List" can be explained, according to Connelly, by the collapse of the Cold War Ideology. Journalists who adhered to the ideology in the past would have covered up some U.S. activities. Many liberal journalists without the Cold War ideology have not been maintaining the past secrecy.

Connelly cites support for this theory in the purported reasoning behind the "Enemies List" — "To get the message to them."

The Flags Are Coming For Winter Ice Fishers

By WILLIAM WIGMORE

"Ice is nice."

Thousands of winter sportsmen think so, who cut six inch holes in sheets of ice to lower their lines through.

Ice-fishing is a love.

From the boot-deep cranberry bogs of the Cape to the depths of reservoirs in western counties, Massachusetts is a beautiful state in which to slip and slide on the ice. In many waters where the ice is at least 4 to 6 inches thick, anglers will redden their fingers, this winter, in pursuit of pickerel, bass, perch, and sunfish.

The catch from under the ice is usually large. Recent surveys by the states of Connecticut and Rhode Island have shown that fishermen are two to five times more successful in this season than in the bug-bitten days of summer.

But it's surprising how little success is determined by the number of pounds of fish that are put on the ice.

I've gone ice-fishing on days when two or three flags were sufficient to give rise to a small celebration.

A flag is a colored piece of felt, atop a thin, metal band, attached to a crude reel. When a fish bites, the reel spins, the band springs upward, and the flag waves. Thus, a bite is called a "flag."

The excitement a flag causes is comfortably warming. And two or three flags at the same time is hot fun. Which is the way this kind of fishing usually goes — in action-filled spurts.

So there is waiting. This is the time to get together some fire wood to keep the flames peaking. By the time you get on shore a flag is usually waving you back.

But if one isn't, I like to sit down by the campfire or hibachi and take my hands out of their gloves.

If there isn't a tip-up by now, it is a good time to begin a meal.

My friends and I usually take a pot of heavily-spiced chili and a long roll of bread (a few feet) for roasting. This combination with lots of strong coffee is probably the best deterent to cold that there is.

Before we can get our fill, we usually have to make several runs. A cup of coffee can freeze before you have time to drink it, once the action has started.

The long green and yellow chain-pickerel, fierce in the chill water, telegraph thrills up the line. Fat bass can send you cursing when you can't get them through the small hole in all the excitement and you bump them free. But then there's another flag and you forget about the one that got away with the next one that you have on.

It can be fast sport.

But when it isn't, there's much more to enjoy.

On a glacial surface at Billington Sea in the middle of Cape Cod, we had an almost fishless day, one winter. But it was a June in January kind of day. A glazy sheen on the ice, seeming to melt, reflected large seagul-shapes over head. A gliderport nearby targeted its sailplanes above us in the almost breathless air.

We watched the quiet spectacle for hours. Skaters who came by occasionally to check our catch moved on to look for others who might have fish.

I remember that day as happily as many that produced a row of wide-jawed fish.

Fish or no fish, it was a great time out-of-doors.

Correction

An article appearing in Wednesday's Collegian on the Finnish Exchange Program, said that the University of Helsinki has two professors on its staff. Actually, there are two professors for each department at the University. Also, the room and board at the University is $800.00, not $600.00. The article also said 80 to 90 percent of the students study English as a foreign language. This is at the elementary and high school levels, not the University level. The exchange was made possible by the UMass Office of International Affairs, directed by Mrs. Burn. The exchange program was initiated by Professor Paul Saagpakk.

DC - No Free Ride

Food Services Investigated
Part Two

The University Dining Commons has been compared to a low class hamburger joint, but at least you can get a free ride to MacDonal's. Most students feel that the only ride you get at the Dining Commons is the $300 it costs to eat there.

While student sentiment against Food Services mounts, suspicion and accusations fester. Actions and reactions have culminated in the dismissal of Food Services Director Joel Stoneham.

Dissatisfaction takes many forms-doubt over the nutritional value of the product, poor service, inefficiently scheduled labor, spiralling meal tickets costs, a questioning of the entire Dining Commons operation.

Students have even mobilized support calling for an all-campus boycott against the "poor conditions" at the Dining Commons.

Charles Goodreau, student organizer of the drive, has drawn up a petition "because students pay for this University; if we say something changes, then change it must,"

Director Stoneham told the Collegian that his responsibility was "to operate within a budget...When board price increases were proposed, we expected unpopularity. We don't like them any more than the students do."

He continued by saying that the boycott's effect was questionable, "I don't know what effect it'll have on the Board of Trustees."

According to Nick Apostola, Student Government President and Trustee, the Board has taken no action in this matter.

Countering objections that the menu selections are not to students' taste, Food Services has established an innovative test panel headed by Marie Cappadona, a registered dietician. By this panel, all foods considered for purchase are submitted for product acceptability before their purchase.

Students rate the products. Once a product has been accepted by the students, bids are sent to various wholesalers.

"Quality evaluations through our Test Kitchen have shown that only 25 per cent of products submitted for testing are deemed acceptable, "stated a report from the division of Research and Development, a branch of UMass Food Service.

"Test panels are scheduled twice per week and 6-8 products are considered each time," said Stoneham. "We've tested between 500-700 products per year with countless retests."

"After our initial testing program for utilization of mostly pre-prepared products, a cost analysis of these products vs. on premise made products was done," read the division's report. "The food costs of the various pre-prepared items were easily calculated by dividing the number of standardized portions into the quoted price for the product.

"These figures were then compared to the food and labor costs for identical products made conventionally from our standardized recipes. The cost analysis showed that by purchasing pre-prepared products, the over-all costs would at least remain constant and would decrease depending on the wage rate." It concluded that, "The ability to decrease staff from 405 to 316 and increase services illustrated the cost savings that have been made by this system."

Pre-prepared products have been purchased since 1967 because consistently "they have proven to to highly justified for large mass feeding services," said Stoneham.

"Because vastly different results existed between all the Dining Commons when we were using standard recipes, we switched over to mostly pre-prepared, pre-portioned, pre-seasoned foods. We've tested and purchased over 195,000 different products," said Stoneham.

A partial listing of these products in comparison to the products used in 1966 follows:

1966

soups made on premise potatoes peeled on premise french fried potatoes on premise casseroles made on premise salads made on premise ice cream bulk served coffee made on premise puddings made on premise pies made on premise bacon in bulk

1973 canned & dehydrated soup prepeeled potatoes

preblanched french fries over ready roasts casseroles pre-prepared salads pre-prepared ice cream prewrapped & sliced coffee frozen concentrate puddings canned pies pre-prepared bacon pre-prepared

"The product, if it has received an acceptable rating, goes on a bid list," continued Stoneham, "then we bid by brand names and take the lowest price. It's the only way to guarantee the quality we have to have...if a product receives an unacceptable rating we don't say it's a lousy product. We say it's unacceptable to our standards."

Buying is done 3-6 months ahead of time to accommodate the yearly menu. This purchasing method has its drawbacks as food prices can't be predicted ahead of time.

"We don't know what it'll cost 6 months from now. It's hard to predict," said Stoneham.

For example, Stoneham found himself in a bind when he was forced to buy when prices were extremely inflated. Below are those items most relevant to F.S. operations experiencing drastic percentage increases:

Soybeans 167.5 per cent
Broilers 158.9 per cent
Eggs 132.1 per cent
Sheep 106.2 per cent
Hogs 101.8 per cent

Because of this factor, the seconds policy for entrees was discontinued amidst student uproar.

Nutritional questions were then raised by irate students. Peter Manning, of the Hotel-Restaurant department, told the COLLEGIAN that any institutional food, by virtue of its definition, is okay nutritionally.

"If students aren't receiving their nutritional requirements, then they're not eating all of their meals," said Manning.

"Nutritional value is lost when food has been so overheated or so overcooked that it's unpalatable, therefore being inedible," said Manning. "I really don't think the Dining Commons has reached this point."

In a study conducted by M.B. Crossmon and E. Ready in 1968, the nutritional value of UMass food was studied for 7 days, using less than 12 students. This study was done before implementation of the no seconds policy.

They found:

average number calories recommended-males 2900, ave. 2745; females 2100, ave. 2130 protein recommended-males 70 gm., ave. 112;females 58 gm., ave. 100 calcium recommended-males 500 mg., ave. 1189;females 400 mg., ave. 625 iron recommended-males 10 mg., ave. 11.1;females 15 mg., ave. 10.3

ascorbic acid recommended-males 70 mg., ave. 140;females 70 mg., ave. 68 fat recommended-males 78-93, ave. 162;females 55-67 gm., ave. 98

vitamin A recommended-males 5000iu, ave. 5293;females 5000iu., ave. 3756

It should be noted that different nutritional experts disagree over recommended intakes.)

"The food here sucks," many students exclaim. "The peas don't taste, the meatloaf looks and smells like cardboard, the salad's wilted and the potatoes are cold. The milk's not bad..."

And with these feelings, students think that they're being ripped off; even though Stoneham is gone the situation will remain the same. Food Services will be working with the same inherent problems in the system.

As Stoneham puts it, "The place is just too damn big."

"We can't appreciably do with less manhours and have the same standards," explained Stoneham.

In Stoneham's October report to Vice-Chancellor Thomas B. Campion:

Overview of Services Rendered in 1966

The following services were rendered by this department to the University community in 1966:

1.) 7,000 meal ticket holders-405 employees
2.) No choice menu
3.) Each meal ticket holder was assigned to a specific dining commons
4.) Meal hours per day of five (5) hours
5.) 15 meal ticket only option offered to boarding students
6.) Two (2) snack bars in operation
7.) Board rate of $220.00 per semester-$440.00 annual

Overview of Services Rendered in 1973

The following services are presently rendered by this department to the University community in 1973:

1.) 9,930 meal ticket holders-314 employees
2.) Multi-selective menu
3.) Seconds on all menu items except entrees with option to purchase second portions of entrees
4.) Complete intertransferability of serving lines and dining commons
5.) Meal hours per day of ten and a half (10 1-2) hours
6.) Option of 10 or 15 meal ticket for all boarding students
7.) Three (3) snack bars in operation
8.) Three (3) retail mini-mart grocery stores in operation
9.) Basic Foods menu offered in two dining commons
10.) Introduction of dorm dinners-200 annually
11.) Butterfield living-learning food service co-op 12.) Introduction of extensive catering services
13.) 5 day-breakfast, lunch, dinner tickets for community 14.) Board rate-10 meal ticket $569.50 annual, 15 meal ticket $643.50 annual.

The Dining Commons' employment has been reduced from 405 to 316 workers with the advent of pre-prepared foods amidst the growth of the University.

By contract, AFL-CIO union employees cannot be replaced by students. Also, there's a high turnover rate with student employees.

"A lot of students don't like to work and there are more students than regular employees," said Stoneham. There are 400-500 student employees, working approximately 10 hours-week.

Stoneham has said that union contracts do not inhibit any profit-making abilities. More specifically, "most employees take the summer off; we haven't hired persons in a long time," said Stoneham.

"It is my opinion," said Stoneham, "that the manhours and the meals served are not out of balance or out of line and productivity per manhour is exceptionally good."

Back at the Dining Commons there are two employees...one is handing out the meal stubs which the other one collects. One is a full time union worker, the other a student. Says the student, "Yup, I think they can do without me. But I'll just sit on my ass and collect the tickets that she hands out."

The energy crisis

(AP Wirephoto)

Gas pumps at a discount gas station in Unionville, Ont., just north of Toronto, are covered up Tuesday after the tanks ran dry. John Bulnes, head of a company which operates four such stations on Toronto's outskirts, says Gulf Oil Canada Ltd., from whom he has purchased gas for 14 years, told him they had no gas to sell him.

Economy Down, Unemployment Up

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The energy crisis will push the nation's economy down to near-recession levels next year and force the unemployment rate up to nearly 6 per cent, President Nixon's chief economist said Thursday.

Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said the economy will grow very slowly in 1974, with the fuel shortage directly causing a 2 per cent cutback in economic output.

Stein said his predictions assume that the Arab oil cutoff continues next year.

Reporting on a high-level assessment of the assessment of the shortage's economic impact, Stein told newsmen that Americans can also expect sharply higher fuel prices. But he said the inflation picture is too cloudy to make a prediction.

If the jobless rate does rise to the almost 6 per cent level forecast by the administration, it means that more than a million more workers will lose jobs. The unemployment rate is now 4.5 per cent of almost 90 million workers.

The government had predicted the jobless rate would have exceeded 5 per cent without the Arab oil cutoff.

As Stein reported the administration's view of the economic impact of the crisis, the White House disclosed that President Nixon will meet with his Cabinet-level energy group Friday.

Such a move usually means that a decision is near. The energy group is studying whether gasoline rationing, a stiff increase in gasoline tax, or both should be imposed to dampen demand.

Stein said no decision had been made either way but sources said that the energy group is leaning heavily toward recommending rationing to Nixon. The President, however, views rationing as a last resort.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said contingency plans are being drafted for rationing but added that Nixon hopes the steps he has already taken will eliminate the need for that move.

The economic assessment, besides accounting for the Arab cutoff, assumes that Nixon's energy-saving programs would work, said Stein.

This means that the burden of the shortages must be borne mainly by consumers, who must cut down on nonessential driving and on thermostat setting in their homes, he said.

Clash On Troop Withdrawals New Talks Postponed

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Egypt broke off crucial truce talks with Israel and accused the Israelis yesterday of evading the troop-withdrawal issue. Fighting erupted between soldiers of the two sides not far from the conference site.

An Egyptian government spokesman, Ahmmed Anis, said Egypt has decided to halt military talks with Israel as a result of Israel's evading "implementation of the second point" of the six-part Nov. 11 ceasefire agreement, Cairo's official Middle East News Agency reported.

Under point number two, the opposing armies would pull back to positions held Oct. 22, the date of a cease-fire declared by the United Nations Security Council.

Israel's top negotiator said he thought the negotiations would continue despite the impasse on repositioning the armies along the Egyptian front.

The Israeli negotiator, Maj. Gen. Aharon Yariv, told an Israeli state radio newsman: "I expect that the talks will continue, and I hope we shall be able to solve problems and to improve the mutual understanding reached until now."

Mortar shells thudded and machine guns chattered only about two miles from the site of the talks on the Cairo-Suez road.

The Israeli military command reported the Egyptians opened up with small-arms fire and antitank missiles in three other places along the Suez Canal front. One Israeli soldier was wounded, the command said in a Tel Aviv communique.

In London, Saudi Arabia's oil minister promised that Britain, France and Spain would be exempt in January from a 5 per cent increase in a cutback of Arab oil production.

The announcement by Saudi oil minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani told a news conference the three countries were among the nations the Arabs view as "friendly." He said African countries which broke relations with Israel would get the same exemption.

The Arabs cut back oil production 25 per cent last month and said they would reduce production an additional 5 per cent a month.

While it was apparent the Arabs felt they were getting some results with their oil restriction, there was no indication of a break in the Egyptian-Israeli standoff in the desert negotiations.

The negotiators met for one hour and 20 minutes. They were unable to agree on pulling troops back from the area of the October war along the Suez Canal front, U.N. spokesmen said.

The generals did not schedule another meeting, according to one of the spokesmen, the commander of the U.N. emergency force, Gen. Ensio Siilasvuo of Finland.

"The situation is very, very bad," Maj. Gen. Mohamed elGamasy of Egypt was quoted as saying in a pool news dispatch from Newsweek newsman Arnaud de Borchgrave.

The mortar and machine-gun fire erupted shortly before Gamasy and Ma. Gen. Aharon Yariv of Israel started their talks at Kilometer 101, 60 miles east of Cairo.

A U.N. spokesman did not say which side started the shooting. Newsmen could see that both Egyptians and Israelis were firing.

Success in the talks is generally regarded as necessary for a more-lasting solution to the Middle East crisis. The Arabs say they will continue to use cutbacks in oil production and embargos of petroleum until the Israelis get out of captured Arab territory.

Informed sources said the negotiators are focusing on how far the two armies should pull back and what kind of weapons the forward elements of the repositioned armies would be allowed to have.

Yariv has proposed that both sides pull back to positions they held before the war broke out Oct. 6. That would leave all Israeli forces on the east side of the canal and all Egyptian forces on the west bank.

Buzhardt On Tapes

"No Innocent Explanation"

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt said Thursday he thought there was "no innocent explanation" for an 18-minute voice-killing buzz in one of the Watergate tapes until he succeeded in nearly duplicating the sound.

As the testimony on the flawed tape contined in federal court, special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski said he was studying the possibility of asking that all White House tapes — recorded continuously for more than two years — be turned over to the court for safekeeping.

"I think if I were the White House," Jaworksi said, "I would like to see them placed in custody so that there couldn't be anything happening to them."

The White House said later that Jaworski's suggestion that all tapes be placed in custody was "just nonsense."

Seven of the tapes required by a subpoena because they are though. to bear on the Watergate cover-up — and three submitted voluntarily by the White House — already are in custody of U. S. District Judge John J. Sirica, who has expressed fears about their safety.

A White House spokesman said, meanwhile, that all seven tapes are intact and claimed that the staff Jaworski inherited from fired special prosecutor Archibald Cox, but not Jaworski, display "ingrained suspicion and visceral dislike for this President and this administration."

Buzhardt said he ran the recorder used by President Nixon's secretary, Rose Mary Woods, next to her switched-on electric typewriter and a high-intensity lamp and "we got a very similar sound" to the 18-minute buzz.

The White House claims the segment was obliterated when the recording button on the machine was depressed while it was in the proximity of the typewriter and lamp. Miss Woods testified she may have accidentally pushed the record button, but for about five minutes and not 18.

Experts selected by the White House and the Watergate prosecutor will begin examining the 10 tapes Monday for possible alteration, at the same time seeking the cause of the gap in the Sept. 20, 1972 tape and new conversationless spots disclosed by Buzhardt Wednesday.

The White House spokesman, Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, noted reports of the conversationless spots in saying the seven subpoenaed tapes are intact. He attributed some of the White House problems in handling subpoenaed materials to an overworked White House staff and also to "somewhat sloppy" work on the part of the prosecutor's staff in preparing subpoenas.

The buzz in the June 20 tape — a time when the prosecutor believes Nixon may have discussed the Watergate affair with aides John D. Ehrlichman and H. R. Haldeman — is in two distinct levels.

Jaworski's statement was made outside of court after assistant Watergate prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste brought out in questioning that Miss Woods had nine tape recordings in her possession as late as Monday of this week. Buzhardt said he hadn't known about that.

His testimony indicated he was equally in the dark about many other times when tapes were moved about from one office to another in the White House.

He said he took it upon himself to conduct the tests on a fresh reel of tape even though, three nights before, the panel of experts had met for the first time to discuss their forthcoming tests.

Experts Clash Over Hodgkin's Disease

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A widely known study in Albany, N.Y., suggesting that Hodgkin's disease may be infectious was challenged Thursday by a new study of that form of cancer in Oxford, England.

"There is no evidence at the moment," a scientist reported, to support the idea that a "cluster" of cases of Hodgkin's disease in one area necessarily means the disease is passed from one person to another.

Hodgkin's disease is a cancer of the lymph system.

The cluster may be due merely to chance, Dr. Malcolm C. Pike of the University of Southern California School of Medicine told the National Conference on Virology and Immunology in Human Cancer, sponsored by the American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute.

One of the Albany researchers, Dr. Nicholas J. Vianna, said the two studies were in agreement that Hodgkin's disease was not an infectious one in the classical sense — it is not transmitted directly from person to person such as measles or chicken pox.

Vianna defended the evidence suggesting infectiousness when factors such as carriers not themselves ill, host vulnerability to the illness and variability in contagiousness are taken into account.

He said he did not think the new study upset the Albany findings but endorsed the idea of further study.

Scientists in the New York State Health Department found 31 cases of Hodgkin's disease among persons who were related or who were friends or somehow in contact. The total of 31 cases was called far above what would be exptected in a grouping of that size.

100 Killed In Japan
In Department Store Blaze

KUMAMOTO, Japan (AP) — Fire and smoke stampeded thousands of panicky shoppers in a department store Thursday, and police said more than 100 were killed and 100 injured in the worst such blaze in Japan's history.

There were conflicting reports, but police said 107 persons, including 67 women were killed.

The fire raged for eight hours through the seven-story building in the center of this southern provincial city of 480,000.

Ironically, the fire occurred on a day when the store normally would have been closed and when sprinklers weren't working because they were under repair for Fire Prevention Week, officials said.

Smoke and fumes continued to hamper rescue work as building materials used in remodeling the 20-year-old Taiyo Department Store still smouldered.

"It was like an inferno, full of cries of fleeing mothers and children," said Junko Nagai, a waitress who survived. "I am lucky to be alive."

Masatoshi Tsuruya, 22, a university student, said: "I was almost overwhelmed by smoke before I reached a window from which I escaped by a ladder." He said he saw many people tumbling down a stairway like an avalanche.

The store was open for the beginning of the pre-Christmas and year end sales season and was filled with about 10,000 shoppers. Witnesses said the shoppers stampeded when someone shouted "fire" at the sight of smoke.

The fire broke out in the bedding sales department on the third floor around 1:20 p.m. and quickly raced up the stairs.

Drinan Votes Against Ford Confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rep. Robert F. Drinan, D-Mass., was one of eight Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee Thursday to vote against confirmation of Gerald R. Ford as vice president.

"The priorities of Mr. Ford are neither mine nor those of my constituents," Drinan said afterwards. The Massachusetts Democrat also cited Ford's 1970 attempted impeachment of Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas and Ford's "ambiguous position with respect to secrecy in government" as reasons for voting against confirmation.

The Judiciary Committee voted 29 to 8 in favor of Ford with overwhelming approval assured when the House takes final action on the nomination next Thursday. The Senate confirmed Ford last Tuesday.

In a lengthy statement outlining the reasons for his opposition, Drinan cited a long list of social legislation he said Ford had voted against, including food stamps, the anti-poverty program and Medicare.

Drinan also said Ford had a "negative record on environmental issues."

According to Drinan, Ford also voted against the voting rights law and fair housing legislation.

Drinan called Ford's effort to impeach Justice Douglas "strange and shocking." Ford merely repeated charges....furnished him by the Justice Department, Drinan said.

On secrecy in government, Drinan said Ford was one of the 14 members of Congress who was informed of the secret B-52 raids over Cambodia in 1970. It was the revelation of those secret raids last summer which first prompted Drinan to call for the impeachment of President Nixon.

House Judiciary Approves Ford

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Judiciary Committee voted 29 to 8 Thursday in favor of House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford's nomination to be vice president.

Overwhelming approval is assured when the House takes final action on the nomination next Thursday. The Senate confirmed Ford 92 to 3 last Tuesday.

Speaker Carl Albert said it has been tentatively planned to hold a joint meeting of the House and Senate immediately after next week's vote to swear Ford in as vice president.

The post has been vacant since Oct. 10 when Spiro T. Agnew resigned after pleading no contest to a charge of income tax evasion. President Nixon nominated Ford Oct. 12.

Ford will be the first vice president ever nominated by a president and confirmed by Congress under the 25th Amendment, which went into effect in 1967.

The eight Democrats who voted against Ford's nomination objected to his generally conservative voting record, particularly in the area of civil rights, and to his leadership of a 1970 impeachment move against Justice William O. Douglas.

But Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said under the 25th Amendment "the President has an unquestioned right to select a vice president he can work with both ideologically and politically."

The 60-year old Michigan congressman has been House leader since 1965.

Sun, Wind And Rain House

By RICHARD O'REGAN
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) - A Cambridge University research team plans to build a house next year that will be run solely by the sun, the wind, the rain and the waste of its occupants.

The team believes the world faces huge new energy shortages. So they hope to create a house for the future that can exist by itself, generating its own sources of power from nature alone. The house - they hope - will be entirely independent of outside systems of electricity, gas, oil, water and sewage.

"We are trying to create a house that will allow us to maintain our present standards of living with no more sacrifices than we will have to make when we run into future energy crises in 20 to 30 years," says Alexander Pike, head of the team.

Pioneer 10 Probes Jupiter

By WILLIAM STOCKTON
AP Science Writer

MOUNTAINVIEW, Calif. (AP)- If you had a compass on Jupiter its needle would point south instead of north.

Pioneer 10, the unmanned space probe hurtling toward man's first encounter with Jupiter, has confirmed the giant planet's magnetic field points toward the South Pole, controllers said Thursday.

That's completely opposite the direction of earth's magnetic field, which is at the North Pole.

Pioneer scientists said the discovery by the 570-pound spacecraft is significant because it confirms the theories of earth-bound astronomers.

"We consider this to be probably the first piece of evidence confirming that the inferences about Jupiter radio astronomers have drawn over the years probably are correct," said Dr. E.J. Smith, the scientist in charge of Pioneer's magnetometer. The magnetometer is a sophisticated compass that measures magnetic field.

At 4 p.m. PST Wednesday, Pioneer 10 was 3 million miles from Jupiter, traveling at 26,200 miles per hour. When the spacecraft sweeps within 81,000 miles of the planet at 6:24 p.m. PST next Monday, its velocity will be 73,600 m.p.h.

The spacecraft is sending color photographs to the Ames Research Center here across five million miles of space. Controllers say they are growing steadily more revealing.

Nitric Acid Caused Pan Am Crash

WASHINGTON (AP) - Some of the nitric acid bottles carried by the Pan American World Airways cargo jet that crashed in Boston earlier this month apparently were loaded on their sides, the National Transportation Safety Board said Thursday.

All three crewmen were killed when the aircraft, its cockpit filled with smoke, tried to make an emergency landing at Logan International Airport.

The Federal Aviation Administration said the pilot had radioed the airport that he had smoke in the cockpit and fire light indicator was on for the No. 4 hold.

The safety board said tests showed that spillage from the nitric acid packages would cause smoke within 13 minutes and a fierce fire within 16 minutes.

The acid, the board said, was packed in one-pint, plastic-capped glass bottles. The bottles were packaged inside wooden boxes and cushioned with combustable material similar to sawdust.

Energy Man To Assess N.E.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy chief John Love will visit New England "as soon as possible" to assess the region's energy crisis, U.S. Rep. Robert H. Steele, R-Conn., said Thursday.

Steele met with President Nixon for about 40 minutes Thursday afternoon. He said Nixon agreed to dispatch Love to make further recommendations on the northeast energy plight.

Steele said Nixon expressed "deep concern" and pledged to consider "every possible step to see that New England does not suffer more from the energy crunch than the rest of the nation."

Steele told the President that New England could take the brunt of the energy crisis because 70 per cent of its buildings is heated by oil and 70 per cent of its electricity is generated by oil.

Steele said Nixon also agreed to consider visiting New England himself. Nixon also said he could discuss New England with his White House Energy Policy Office on Friday.

Steele recommended that New England's oil allocation be reduced less than that of warmer areas. He also suggested diverting electricity from southern states and shipping more coal into the area.

Steele said mid-Atlantic states depend on oil for only 30 per cent of their electricity, while 23 central and southwestern states depend on oil for less than 3 per cent of generation.

Edison Seeking Nuclear Power

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Edison Co. is to file an application Friday with the Atomic Energy Commission for a construction permit to build nuclear generating units 2 and 3 at Pilgrim Station in Plymouth.

The units are to be pressurized water reactors and would have a capacity of 1,150 megawatts.

An Edison spokesman said Thursday that construction would not begin until completion of environmental and safety hearings and said the projected completion date for unit 2 is 1980, with unit 3 to be finished several years later.

DeSalvo Buried

CHELSEA (AP) — Private funeral services are to be held here Friday for Albert DeSalvo, who once claimed to be the "Boston Strangler."

DeSalvo, 42, who was serving a life sentence for assaults on four women not connected with the stranglings, was found stabbed dead in his room in the hospital at Walpole State Prison Monday.

DeSalvo later retracted his statement that he was the "Boston Strangler," responsible for the deaths of 13 women between 1962 and 1964.

No one has been tried for those killings.

Co-ed Sports

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — The Brookline School Committee is seeking approval to allow freshman and sophomore girls to participate with boys in three inter-scholastic contact sports.

The school committee created a special study group several months ago to look into the feasibility of girls in grades 1 through 8 joining boys in contact sports.

The group recently recommended female participation in basketball, baseball and soccer in grades 1 through 10. Student sentiment in Brookline high school favored extension of the plan to grades 9 and 10, according to the committee.

Representatives from the school committee are now contacting the Massachusetts secondary school principals association for its official sanction.

Unhelpful Guide

Every semester the students of UMass are more or less forced to get ahold of a Course Description Guide for pre-registration.

Usually by the time it comes out we are so sick of our present courses, or so far behind, that we pour over the book like parochial school students do the Baltimore Catechism hoping to find something better for the next time around.

During the following semester we go to classes, get bored and behind, await the Course Description Guide and repeat the whole pre-registration process. And then it happens again.

Could it be that the Course Description Guide is about as helpful as a San Diego road map is to someone lost in Millinocket, Maine?

We think so.

The Course Description Guide as it exists now is a failure. The concept is viable but the end product of the writers in many cases does not at all represent the concept of mass information.

It has for many faculty turned into a Public Relations vehicle by which they can advertise their courses and gain enrollees.

The faculty write their own course description submit it to the Student Senate who compiles the writings. No one has the time to check on the veracity of the individual faculty writers so the material is presented just as they write it.

It is not inconceivable that a sticky fingered student get a hold of one of the forms meant for the faculty, concoct his own course and sit back to have some fun.

Imagine reading:

Cinema 100: MWF Ass. Prof. Snodgrass.

Contemporary Cinema: A viewing of contemporary movies in Bowker Aud. three times a week from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. No papers, no exams. No requirements. Course limited to 3,000.

OSCAR would go to Bowker and find nothing there as anticipated.

All too often people are registering for real courses who have been touted by their teachers in a fallacious and misleading way. And when students have to get out of the course and into another one the real hassle begins. Replacements are oversubscribed or scheduled at times that conflict with a present schedule, or at (ugh) 8:00 a.m. If someone is lucky enough to find something more suitable to their needs they enter the course with the disadvantage of missing a few lectures.

There is no easy way to prevent teachers from bullslinging in the Course Description Guide now. It will continue. We are responsible to care for ourselves.

The Collegian invites letters from students who enrolled in a course based on what the Course Description Guide said, only to find out that they were mislead by pumped-up rhetoric. Perhaps between now and registration day we can save ourselves a lot of hassle and disappointment.

Take Down UN Flag

A lot of people have written about the United Nations this semester. It has been pointed out that the U.N. is useless, etc. I have taken another viewpoint. I say that the U.N. is dangerous. Last April 27, I wrote a column on U.S. State Department Document 7277 and the plan for the eventual surrender of our Armed Forces to the U.N. I also mentioned that the U.N. Department that controls any army is under the auspices of the Undersecretary General for Political and Security Council Affairs. This office has always been held by a communist. In his book, In The Cause of Peace, Trigvie Lie stated that this was agreed upon at the founding meeting of the U.N. Lie ought to know this, he was the first permanent Secretary-General.

Last October 19, I wrote a column saying that a U.N. is not needed and mentioned what world government means for this time. And last October 26, I mentioned why one should avoid UNICEF like the plague.

Unfortunately, there is more to the United Nations than just these three things. The following three items involving the U.N. show this.

The first is the Genocide Treaty which is in danger of being ratified by the U.S. Senate. This allows the U.N. to stop what it calls genocide. Thus, the treaty says that any citizen in any country recognizing this treaty may be prosecuted for doing any physical or mental harm to any member of any minority group. This wording is ambiguous as any single human being is a member of a minority group. But the treaty also says that the prosecution must occur in a country other than the one the defendant is from. A good example of this is that if a policeman arrests someone committing a crime who may be a member of any minority, he may be arrested by the U.N. and transported to the Soviet Union and tried by Soviet judges. And no mention is made of the Soviet persecution of Jews, the 6 million murdered by Communist China or any attrocities committed by Iron Curtain countries. It is the free world, especially the United States, that will be forced to comply with this ridiculous attrocity. If I were you, I would write the U.N. and ask for a copy of this treaty. Then, if you don't like the terms of this treaty, write your Senators and urge them not to ratify this treaty.

The next thing is the Seabed Treaty. Believe it or not, there is a treaty before Congress that if passed, would give the U.N. Control over all waterways, even inland waterways. This would give the U.N. control over ¾ of the earth's surface. This would include mineral rights and oil rights. With the structure of the U.N. as it is and with their past judgements regarding the U.S., you can be sure that Iron Curtain countries will get the lion's share of these. After all, they have gotten the lion's share of everything else the U.N. has done. Write your congressman and urge him to vote against this monstrosity.

The third thing is the Atlantic Union. This has been called the first step to regional government which will lead to world government by Henry Kissinger. This is also dangerous to the U.S. as it is the first step to the surrender of our sovereignity to the U.N. just as the U.N. Charter demands.

Of course the U.N. violates their own charter. They ignore the plight of people imprisoned in communist nations and they fight anti-communism. Look at what happened in Katanga in the early sixties. Look at the U.N.'s throwing Taiwan out of the U.N. and bringing in the Red Chinese. That,too, was in violation of the U.N. Charter.

On November 21, a letter to the editor was published in the Collegian written by Donald M. Austern. I agree with Mr. Austern wholeheartedly. In fact, there will be a box in the Collegian office with my name on it. I am asking those members of the UMass community who are against the U.N. to write a letter to the Amherst Town Council and ask them to reconsider their move that supports the U.N. by the placing of their flag on the town common. Please place the letters in the box with my name on it and I will deliver them to the town council. I want that flag taken down. The U.N. is the biggest anti United States organization in the world and no one who is a true American should support it.

Oil Blackmail

By DAVID EIBEL

In the modern world, we are seeing a strange evolution in morals and values. Criminals are revered to such a great an extent that compassion is extended more to the wrongdoer than the victim. The world is completely upside-down when one compares it with the world as it was a hundred years ago.

The so-called energy crisis has seen many nations throw honesty and integrity to the wind, in exchange for oil. The exchange can only be considered the vilest of recent times, almost as inhuman as the actions of the United States and other countries prior to World War Two, when they forgot the values upon which they had been founded and refused to admit the oppressed Jews of Europe in the face of imminent annihilation.

The United States, so far, has stood fast in the face of Arab blackmail, and has refused to weaken in the face of Arab threats. Unfortunately, virtually every Common Market State, plus Japan, have given in to the Arabs and their Russian directors and traded human decency for black oil.

In the period when life was simple and things were black and white, the evil were punished and the good were rewarded. The machinations of the Arabs can be called only one thing: simple, uncomplicated blackmail. The nations that have acceded to the blackmail threats are almost as guilty as the perpetrators themselves and both should be punished.

The United States has a moral obligation to force the Arabs and more importantly the Soviets to end their pernicious actions. Whether it is done peacefully or otherwise, it is clear that blackmailers-must not get off "scot free." To leave the criminal unpunished and the victim in ruination would be in direct violation with all the things that humanity infers. For to long, honesty, pride, and respect have been thrown to the wind in exchange for opportunistic hypocrisy. The tide must turn.

Infirmary Comfort

By SAMUEL P. HASSAN

Having made an appointment to do so, I dragged myself into the infirmary at precisely 10:25 last Monday. Although it was not my original problem, a slight attack of asthma immediately set in as I groped my way through the dust. How urgent is the remodeling that it can't be done during the weekends, intercession, or at night.

I had originally made an appointment to avoid waiting, and was relieved to know I wouldn't have to sit in the dust filled room. My relief slowly turned to dismay as I proceeded to wait 45 minutes to see the doctor. My initial intent was to have a prescription filled. "We don't carry that stuff. It's too expensive," said the doctor. He gave me a new bottle of the same old tetracycline I've developed an immunity to. "Listen kid, I've been in this business for 25 years," he said. "Well what about my wisdom teeth? I have 2 coming in sideways, and they're killing me," I said. "Are you kidding," he laughed! "Let me show you the bruise I have on my back. I've been keeping an antibiotic on it," I said. "Oh, no need to do that. Keep it dry and covered," he advised. Next day, my bruise took a turn for the worse. I continued applying Bacitracen and it's fine now.

What's really bothering me is my digestive system. I keep getting baby heart attacks in between constipation and the runs, and I passed out from gastric pains the other night. I though my appendix were bursting. Aside from a touch of colitis, I've never had any problems with eating. What I'm saying is that I can't continue my meal plan. How can I get off it? "Don't look at me kid. You make an appointment with another doctor if you want. Maybe he'll be able to help you," said the doctor. "Okay, sorry I bothered you," I said in departing.

I was so bullshit, stomping to the appointments desk, thriving on every throb of what became codine headache no. 151. I hadn't slept the night before, and the doctor must've taken me for a desperate junkie seeking a last resort before crime.

I'm only trying to make one point. If you've got a medical problem such as a tender bruise, aching wisdom teeth, or even digestive problems, save yourself mounting agony. Buy a half-pint of Southern Comfort, splash some on the bruise, slosh some around your mouth, and gulp down the rest. If anything, you'll at least become so sick that you'll forget your original problem. George C. Scott would be proud of you.

Letters To The Editor

Machiavellian Maneuver

To The Editor:

Joseph Frank, Head of the English Department, has demanded the impeachment of SGA President Nick Apostola, because Mr. Apostola supports the recent report of the Campus Committee on Communications Skills. Frank charges that Apostola's support of the report is "political expediency" and is inconsistent with the previous position of the Student Senate (for abolition of the rhetoric requirement.) Mr. Frank's assertions are, at the very least, unreasonable and unprofessional, and will only serve to cloud the fundamental issues surrounding the Rhetoric Program.

Last year, the Undergraduate Student Senate, led at the time by myself as SGA President and Nick Apostola as Academic Affairs Chairman, brought before the Faculty Senate a motion calling for the abolition of the rhetoric requirement. We presented that motion after extensive research had proven that the Rhetoric Program had failed in its objective of teaching effective communications skills to undergraduates. We argued that the goal could best be achieved by targetting the program for those who needed it, and not by forcing those who didn't need it into a program designed to give them skills they already had.

The Faculty Senate declined to abolish the requirement, primarily because they saw the Rhetoric Program, for better or worse, as the only way available at that time to insure that all undergraduates were relatively competent in communication skills by the time they graduate. However, realizing that the Rhetoric Program was not really capable of such a massive task, the Senate appointed a special committee that would recommend the most appropriate means for insuring competency. The student leadership, after many initial misgivings, withdrew our opposition to the requirement in the expectation that the committee report would be the best means of addressing the serious issues we had raised.

That committee, called the Campus Committee on Communication Skills, has issued its report after a year of careful study and deliberations. The committee recommends the retention of the requirement, but provides for the option of a competency exam as a means for fulfulling that requirement. Thus, students will not be forced to take rhetoric courses, rather they will be free to choose a variety of means for acquiring basic competency.

The report offers solutions to the issues raised by both the Faculty and Student Senates. It is a reasonable proposal that is a credit to the committee of deans, professors, and students who prepared it. Nick Apostola deserves praise, not impeachment, for his willingness to support it.

Joseph Frank, however, appears to have become a chameleon on the issue. Last year, he vehemently opposed the abolition of the requirement. This year, he says he favors abolition. And yet he admonishes Apostola for inconsistency!

Hopefully, the Faculty Senate will not be fooled by Joe Frank's shenanigans and will support the careful work of its study committee. The Campus Committee on Communication Skills represents one of the few occasions where students and faculty have been able to work together effectively toward the common goal of improving the quality of undergraduate education. To have that achievement lost because of Machiavellian maneuvers would be a discredit to the entire campus community.

Six Million Neurotics

To The Editor:

After reading a section in Wednesday's Collegian entitled "Maharaj Ji Says", I found it difficult to suppress a chuckle. There was one particular sentence declaring that "the concrete experience of inner peace and joy" that the Guru shares with his followers eradicates hatred, greed, and fear. I found it difficult to believe that the Guru has truly eradicated greed from his corpulent little self. This doubt on my part has its basis in the peculier financial status enjoyed by the little critter. The Guru's life style consists of Rolls-Royces, Jaguars and a $100,000 townhouse in London. Defying opulence, the Guru also has two estates in the U.S. Other worldly possessions include two airplanes, a quadraphonic stereo system, and a motorcycle. Guru's office building in Denver, rented for a paltry $3500 a month, houses an IBM computer used to keep track of converts and rented annually for $28,800. The Guru's conglomerate also operates two spiritual rock bands, a movie production company, and a monthly magazine. I'm waiting for the Guru burger to challenge the Bic Mac. Half of a four page personal questionnaire used for application for membership into the Guru's gang concentrates on the cash value of the applicant's insurance policies, mortgages, and trust funds. Inheritances are routinely signed over to the Guru's organization as are paychecks from "worldly" jobs. In 1972, in India, the Guru was caught looking by customs officials with $35,500 in undeclared jewelry and cash.

I have always considered the Guru to be an overweight conniving little charlatan who should have been put to bed long ago. I have to give the schmuck credit though. He had the foresight to turn fascination with the mysterious east into a profitable commodity. If it hadn't have been for the Beatles rescuing Ravi Shankar from obscurity, the Guru would probably today be herding cows through the streets of Calcutta. Guru certainly understood P.T. Barnum's maxim concerning the birth rate of suckers and as a result, has accumulated a following of six million neurotic screaming fanclub members. The majority of Guru's raiders seem to be mindless phenomenons who would follow most anyone as long as he spoke with a foreign accent, mumbles well, and used certain key phrases to make it all sound profound.

In essence, Guru-san I think that eradication of greed should start at home and that you should shuck your pack rat style of living and become a better fraud. Said without undue malice.

Student Court System

By TONY BATTISTA

Tucked away in one of the remote corners of the student union in room 422c, lies the office of the student attorney general where Jim Pappas and a group of advocates and judges have been working to revise the university judicial system and somewhat rescue this system from the low levels of credibility it has occupied in past years. The result of all this work has been a fair and efficient judicial system capable of coping with most any problem brought before it. The problem that remains however, is persuading the university-at-large, particularly undergraduates, that it is to their advantage to make use of this system whenever necessary.

Any case involving undergraduates may be brought before this court where a fair and speedy trial is guaranteed. All cases are heard and tried by fellow undergraduates trained in the procedures of this system. At no time will any judge be allowed to hear a case in which he or she is personally involved or had friends involved.

This revised system gives rise to endless possibilities. Heads of residence need no longer be forced to take on the burden of dishing out justice in the various dorms. When displinary action becomes necessary, as when there is damage done to the dorm, they can place the matter in the hands of the court. This court will take on the responsibility of determining a person's guilt or innocense and executing some sort of punishment, if necessary.

Anyone who is falsely accused of shoplifting in the university store can fight his case through this court system. Already this year, one such case has gone through this system where a student unjustly accused of shoplifting had the charges against him dropped.

At the beginning of the semester, each dorm on campus was visited by someone from the student attorney general's office to explain this new system. Since than there have been some articles and editorials written in the Collegian. Thus far, the response has seen disheartening. I hope that after reading this you realize that this judicial body is here to protect your own interests. For your own sake, if you ever feel you have a reason to use this new judicial system, stop in at room 422c student union and inquire about it. The system is here to work for you. Don't let it decline to nothing.

Tony Battista is an advocate working in the student attorney general's office.

Face The Facts

Dear McNamara House Council,

Do you know that according to a recent survey taken in McNamara, which covered about a quarter of the dorm, only 10% attend your meetings? More interesting, 52% of these people don't know who your leaders are. But that's not unusual because 85% of the whole dorm doesn't know who was elected moderator of the council either. Due to a crash advertising campaign, 55% of the people actually know where and when the meetings are held. I hope they remember.

On your recent decisions, 50% of the dorm was with you on the pool table, I hope some of them get to use it. Also 50% approved of the room search, too bad for the rest.

But rest assured, House Council, for 38% of the dorm thinks your doing a good job. However, 55% have no opinion on your work. Apparently these people don't know what you're doing.

I question, is it fair for about 40 people to make all the decisions and appointments for the dorm? I feel it is your job, House Council, to make an honest effort to make yourselves known and to encourage more people to take part in dorm government.

Making Concerts A Reality

To The Editor:

The last Cage Concert of the semester is over. The performers, Danny Hathaway and Chick Corea, John Mayall, Maria Muldaur and Bruce Springsteen, have all come and gone. They've left their mark on some in our community and have gone unnoticed by many more. I would like to take this opportunity to give much deserved recognition to a group of people who have gone unnoticed by virtually everyone: those who helped make the concert a reality. A lot of work goes into putting a concert on; most of us on the Concert Committee have found that out the hard way. It involves many, many people and I only wish I could list each and everyone of them by name. This is impossible, of course, but it doesn't really matter; they all know who they are.

To the UMass police, the Fire Marshalls, the Red Cross volunteers, the Amateur Radio Club, the stage crew, the Cage janitors, the Physical Plant workers and the Student Security force goes my deepest appreciation for jobs well done. I couldn't have asked for a better group of people to work with nor could I have asked for more satisfactory results.

I'd like to extend a special thanks to the 24 student marshalls of whom I am inexpressibly proud. These are the people who went through training to learn how to deal with crowds in concert situations. The proof of their success lies in the fact that all three concerts ran smoothly and trouble-free.

I believe that we have proven that Cage concerts can once again be a part of student life here at the University. All we need now is a lot more support from the student body. But without the aforementioned people, we couldn't have gone even this far. To all of you, thanks again.

Sally Gotschall
Security Committee Chairperson

Going Over 50

To The Editor:

Mark Vogler, in his article of Thursday "Motorists Ignore Speed Limits," forgot to mention one important point-how much people were speeding by. Were they going 60, 70, or 80?

When I drove from home last Sunday night (with 5 passengers) using routes 25, 495, and the Mass. pike, I noticed many people going over 50. But they were going 55-60. And this is when everyone is supposedly in a hurry to get back home. On that 150 mile trip, with holiday traffic, I noticed 3 vehicles going the former speed limit, 65, two cadillacs and one Ford van.

When one has been used to going 65-70 it is a difficult thing to slow down to 50. People have to get used to the idea. I think that people are energy conscious when the vast majority of them go 55 instead of 65 or 70.

FREE DELIVERY

Domino's Pizza Explains

Domino's Pizza in Amherst is one of 73 Domino Stores across the country. Domino's is growing and growing fast. The reason for this is that Domino's attempts the impossible; FAST - HOT - FREE DELIVERY of mouth-watering pizza. This is not an easy task. To accomplish this objective, we presently have FIVE DELIVERY VEHICLES, each equipped with PORTABLE OVENS. We employ more than TWENTY STUDENTS on a part time basis to assist us in pizza delivery. We attempt to be well organized, professional and sort of sophisticated in our field. We're not just another pizza joint.

Domino's Pizza explains:

In September we had a difficult time providing fast HOT DELIVERY due to the inexperience of our new employees. Pizzas arrived late, sometimes cold, and sometimes not too tasty. In the past few weeks we have been training people in the making and delivery of pizza. We are now able to provide you with good service and a really good tasting pizza. Try us and see for yourself.

Domino's Pizza is not an ordinary pizza. If you don't like pizza, or you're just sick of pizza or you're a sub freak, we suggest you try a Domino's Pizza. It's different. It's tangy; it's tasty. Why, because Domino's makes all pizzas to order, fresh from beginning to end. We make fresh dough and sauce daily; we blend and grind our own cheese; we use fresh onions and green peppers. Many pizza stores use sauce directly from the can. Domino's blends many different ingredients and spices to come up with a thick pasty sauce that will make your mouth water.

Presently we open at 4 p.m. Daily till 1 a.m. and 2 a.m., Fri. & Sat. Our delivery vehicles are on the road constantly from opening to closing. No minimum order is necessary. We'll gladly deliver one pizza fast and hot.

So, the next time you feel hungry, give Domino's a break — call us for a fresh, hot pizza delivered free. We'll appreciate your support and we think you'll appreciate our service and product.

Sincerely

Folk Dancers And Food At Smorgasbord

The Saturday night international food smorgasbord will have more foods and more serving lines than last year. People already holding tickets are being urged to arrive at Worcester Dining Commons after 6:30 p.m. so as to be sure of instant service. Food is being served until 8:00 p.m., at which time the 5-college Folk Dancers will entertain with a performance and then lead a general folk-dance evening.

Those without tickets may still get them at the Campus Center concourse until 3:00 p.m. today, at the Foreign Student Office (Whitmore 239) or from the Prince House head of residence, Mrs. Robinson. Tickets remaining unsold will be sold at the Worcester Dining Commons door.

The two steam-table lines at Worcester will be each divided into two sections each with a separate food selection. Customers will be able to choose at a glance which section to approach for serving. All four food sections will be geographically mixed and contain a balanced full meal.

The event is being co-sponsored this year by the Central Area and the International Student Association. Central has made a large commitment to the smorgasbord budget, in support of the Foreign Student Emergency Fund and the International Student Association. Any profits from the ticket sales will be divided between those two groups.

Worcester Dining Commons will be large enough to accomodate all ticketholders at one time. The food supply will be more than adequate to give everyone a full plate, and seconds will be allowed after all ticketholders have been served once.

Women's Info Fair

A Women's Information Fair will be held Saturday, December 1, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the UMass Everywoman's Center. All women are invited to stop by for a cup of coffee and information-sharing with other women.

Representatives from area women's centers, clinics, counseling and action groups will be present to discuss current programs and services available to women.

Women at the Fair will not only answer questions on what facilities exist to serve women and their families, but also what activities and projects are going on in which women may themselves wish to become involved.

The Fair is informal; women are encouraged to stop by anytime between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Everywoman's Center is newly located in Goodell Hall (Old Library) in the center of the campus — right across the walk from the tall, new brick library. Parking is available anywhere on campus on Saturday.

What To Do With Waste

By QUANE KENYON
Associated Press Writer

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — On a windswept strip of Idaho desert, workmen unload white steel barrels from a truck, stack them four high on sheets of plywood and wrap them in plastic.

That's the impermanent resting place for a permanent problem of the nuclear age — what to do with radioactive wastes, some of which are expected to be deadly for the next 250,000 years.

On an 88-acre corner of the National Reactor Testing Station, the Atomic Energy Commission is storing waste material from its test laboratories and plants.

Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus and other state officials say they don't want the radioactive waste stored in the state because they fear it could contaminate a huge underwater acquifer that supplies drinking water.

AEC officials say there is no danger but have promised to find a final resting spot for the long-lived material somewhere else and start moving it there before 1980.

Radioactive waste-such as water from nuclear reactors and contaminated pipes, rags, tools, coveralls and gloves-are stored above ground in steel barrels and heavy plywood boxes which have been reinforced with a thick layer of fiberglass.

It is stored above ground to keep it away from moisture and to make it easy to retrieve for moving.

In the years after the reactor test station opened in 1951, radioactive wastes were simply sealed in steel barrels or boxes and buried. Now some of them have to be exhumed.

"Since some of the barrels weren't supposed to last more than 20 years, we presume they've lost their integrity now," says Dr. Wayne Bills, who is director of waste management.

That means the AEC faces a lengthy and costly process of digging up the "hot" material and repackaging it. Millions of dollars will be spent to exhume and relocate the 200,000 barrels and boxes.

How you express yourself depends upon your camera.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits—you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras, like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

Lectures And Conferences In The Area

The first lecturer in the Israel Week series of events will be Ruth Kluger, who will speak on Sunday night at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar auditorium. Ms. Kluger is an extraordinary woman whose resistance work against the Nazis during World War II has made her an almost legendary figure in Israel. As a twenty five year old Jewish woman from Palestine, she set out for Nazi dominated Europe with one objective; to save the doomed Jews of that continent. Through her efforts thousands of people managed to reach safety in Palestine. Ms. Kluger, author of The Last Escape, the story of this remarkable operation, will speak on From Holocaust to Independence.

Peddler's Fair At Mount Holyoke

Displays, discussions and demonstrations will be featured at Mount Holyoke College's third annual Peddler's Fair Saturday, December 1. Arts and crafts, all hand-designed and hand-made, will feature the skills of over 75 craftspeople from six states in the Northeast.

The Peddler's Fair will be held in Mary E. Woolley Hall from 10:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m. with no admission charge. This year the quality and variety of craftspeople participating is very exciting. Over 40 unique crafts, ranging from candles to batik will be exhibited. Although items will be available for sale, one of the most important aspects of the fair is the give-and-take of ideas. The artisans are eager to encourage an appreciation not only for the skill involved in their particular crafts, but also for the beauty and artistic merits of the finished work. Visitors have much to gain — including new hobby ideas.

Lampoon's Worst Awards

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Harvard Lampoon, which says it is the nation's oldest humor magazine, said Thursday that actress Linda Lovelace of "Deep Throat" fame will be at the Lampoon office Saturday to receive an award.

The Lampoon said she will be presented with its "Wilde Oscar" award, given "annually to that actor or actress most willing to flout convention and risk worldly damnation in the pursuit of artistic fulfillment."

The undergraduate magazine said she also will accept, on behalf of the makers of "Deep Throat," the "Piltdown Mandible", which it said is "Awarded each year for filmdom's most obviously and unabashedly spurious scientific phenomenon."

The Lampoon said Miss Lovelace's arrival coincides with the presentation of the magazine's 33rd annual "worst movies" awards.

The magazine said the various "worst movie" awards will be accepted by Elmer Green, 77, curator of the Lampoon Castle, the magazine's building.

Those awards are:

—Worst Picture of the Year, "Last Tango in Paris."

—Worst Performance by an Actor, Robert Redford.

—Worst Performance by an Actress, Ali MacGraw.

—Worst Director, Sam Pekinpah.

—The Bosley "awarded annually to that film critic whose writing consistently explores the farthest limits of bad taste", Pauline Kael.

—Worst Film of the Century and Worst Performance by a Cast in Toto, the producers and entire cast of "The Poseidon Adventure."

FCC Steps On Prime Time

WASHINGTON (AP-The Federal Communications Commission took tentative steps Thursday to ease its controversial prime-time access rule limiting the evening hours network programming can be shown.

It ordered its staff to prepare two key changes in the rule, which affects only TV stations in the top 50 markets, and said it expects to decide on the matter "before the end of the year."

Under the current rule, which went into effect in October 1971, the top 50 network-affiliated stations are limited to showing only three hours of network programming each night.

The proposed changes, an FCC official said, would:

-Allow network-affiliated stations an extra hour of network programming on Sunday night without restrictions.

-Let the stations use another 30 minutes of prime evening time on any one of the other six nights for a variety of programming, including new network programs-but under strict conditions.

"Chappaquidick Image" May Hurt Kennedy's Chances

BOSTON (AP) — Most Democratic leaders in the nation doubt that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., will get their party's presidential nomination in 1976 because of his "Chappaquiddick image," the Christian Science Monitor reported Friday.

Of 98 state committeemen surveyed by the newspaper, 75 said Kennedy was the frontrunner for the nomination. But only 34 said he would eventually get it, and 18 said he could win the election.

Although everybody is saying that Kennedy will be the Democratic nominee, I have a feeling that he won't get it, mainly because of Chappaquiddick," said one party leader from Maryland.

Some Democrats said that doubts about Kennedy's car accident four years ago, when a young woman was killed after Kennedy's car plunged off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island, are especially important because of the Watergate scandal.

"The problem that will face candidates from both parties is credibility," said one leader from Alaska. "People are willing to forgive mistakes, but they want the truth. They will be supporting the candidate whose word they can trust and who is willing to give them the truth no matter what the truth is."

NYC School Dedicated To R.F. Kennedy

By PAUL SERAFINI
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy's special concern for children was fondly recalled Thursday by his widow, his son and others at ceremonies dedicating a $5 million rebuilt Manhattan public school that now bears his name.

"I don't know why, but it was something Bob was really interested in," said Ethel Kennedy.

She recalled how her late husband often talked about the special program for socially and emotionally maladjusted boys at the old Public School 169.

The new school, which occupies the lower floors of a 34-story luxury apartment tower at East 88th street, "is a dream come true — it captures his Kennedy's spirit," she said.

The guest speaker, who faced an audience of about 250 persons in the school's auditorium, was her son, Robert F. Kennedy Jr., a 19-year-old Harvard University student.

"My father knew about his school and what its purpose was," he said.

"He, like you, dreamed of a day when we would no longer need such a school."

Robert F. Kennedy possessed "a quality of profound understanding and care for people — all people, especially children," his son said.

Robert Jr. concluded his speech by recalling the words his father once used in addressing a school body.

"Have respect for your school. Have respect for your teachers. But above all, have respect for yourselves," he said.

Law Careers: Problems For Women In Tight Job Market

By J. THOMAS FAILLA
Associated Press Writer

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A nationwide law school survey shows that qualified women can get a legal education but find it tough to get a job because of sex discrimination, a University of Connecticut law professor said Thursday.

"There is no difficulty in getting admitted but once the women start to get a job in a highly male profession they find overt and covert discrimination," said Professor Shirley R. Bysiewicz, who compiled the 1972 American Association of Law School's questionnaire on women in legal education.

"Employers involved in these incidents of discrimination represented law firms and companies of all sizes," she said.

The results of the four page questionnaire, sent to the dean of 146 schools, appeared in the Journal of Legal Education.

At 40 per cent of the schools there have been reports of alleged discrimination against female job applicants, particularly in the type of questions asked of women by job interviewers, she said.

The survey showed in about half the cases, women law students were subject to questions such as: "Do you plan to have children?" or "Are you on the pill?" according to Mrs. Bysiewicz.

"They seem to think that the minute a woman has a baby that is the end of her professional career," said Mrs. Bysiewicz, a mother of four children, who said the Internal Revenue Service rejected her for a job because of her sex in the 1950s.

After 20 years of schooling, women aren't going to quit, she said, adding that the Civil Rights Act allows women to continue working and to return to work after birth.

"But we're still fighting this."

She said that in conversations with male lawyers she's been told: "I can't hire her because my wife will divorce me if I have women working with me." Other law firms just don't hire women.

She recommended that conflicts of motherhood and career could be remedied with more day care centers. She said only one of the answering law schools indicated they had a day care center for children of the law students.

"We should have supportative measures for day care centers to allow women and men to combine career with marriage and child rearing," she said.

Westfield State Censures New College President

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The Westfield State College Student Senate has censured the college's new president, Dr. Robert L. Randolph.

The Tuesday censure vote charged Randolph with making an "insulting characterization of the college community" in a newspaper interview.

The senate objected to a statement by Randolph that the faculty had been "so busy planting knives in backs that the college stood still for the past three years."

"I'm sorry I used those words," Randolph said Wednesday.

The censure vote also cited Randolph's refusal to discuss campus problems with a professor who had reportedly leaked material critical of Randolph to the press.

Randolph became president of the college in July. He succeeded Dean of Continuing Education Harry A. Becker, who acted as interim president following the May, 1972, departure of President Leonard J. Savignano.

Northeastern Saves Energy Plans One-Week Shutdown

BOSTON (AP) — Northeastern University, the largest private university in the nation, said Thursday it will suspend regular administrative and research operations for one week because of the energy crisis.

President Asas S. Knowles said administrators will stop regular operations from Dec. 22 through 31. A university spokesman said that in past year administrative and research offices have remained open.

Students will have a two-week vacation, from Dec. 17 through Jan. 1, as previously planned. The university will be closed entirely on Christmas day, and will be manned only by skeleton crews in "a limited number of key offices" from Dec. 22 through 31.

A spokesman said the university has approximately 35,000 students in degree-granting programs and approximately 8,000 more in non-degree programs.

The university also said it has reduced room temperatures in buildings to 68 degrees during the day and to 63 degrees at night.

Dormitory rooms are regulated for 65 degrees from midnight to 5 a.m. and between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

The university said it also has asked that those connected with it to eliminate unnecessary use of electrical power and for commuters to use car pools when possible.

The registrar said he has rescheduled evening and weekend classes to a limited number of buildings so temperatures can be reduced in the other facilities.

Cut Down State Cars

BOSTON (AP) — A plan to cut down the number of official state and local government cars on the road was put before a special legislative commission Thursday.

The Commission on Air Pollution and Commuter Traffic heard one of its members, Robert Diozzi, propose two bills to cut down on traffic and on fuel consumption.

Diozzi, director of the Resources Planning Institute, said one bill would prohibit public agencies from buying cars with engines of more than four cylinders.

A companion bill would require agencies with five automobiles or more to reduce their number by 20 per cent by Jan. 1, 1975.

Christmas Vespers Smith's Annual Service

Christmas Vespers, Smith College's annual service of music and readings for the season, will be held this year on Sunday, December 9, at 4:00 p.m., and again at 7:30 p.m., in John M. Greene Hall. The ecumenical service will include Renaissance, Baroque and contemproary music, Biblical readings associated with the Advent and Christmas seasons, and the traditional candlelighting ceremony. In all, about 350 voices will participate. Forty-five men of the famous Harvard Glee Club, under the direction of F. John Adams, will be special guests of the College on this occasion.

The public is invited to attend free of charge; however, tickets will be required for admission. These may be obtained by writing to the Music Department, Sage Hall, Smith College, or in person at the Box Office in the Center for the Performing Arts between 12 noon and 5:00 p.m. from Wednesday, December 5 through Friday, December 7.

On Sunday the doors will open at 3:30 p.m. and at 7:00 p.m. Tickets will be honored until 3:45 p.m. and 7:15 p.m., when the candlelighting ceremonies will begin.

"Seige"

On Saturday night, December 1st, the movie Seige will inaugurate Israel Week, a week of song, dance, films, art, dialogue, and lectures, being presented in the area by Umass Hillel and the Jewish communities of the Pioneer Valley. Seige, an Israeli film that received much acclaim at last year's Cannes Film Festival, presents a rare glimpse into the lives of people under the stress of war. It will have two showings in Mahar Auditorium, at 7:00 and at 9:00 p.m.

Profs Study Women's Career

Two UMass professors will spend part of spring semester studying why women compromise or become discouraged with their original career plans.

Asst. Prof. Joan Bean of the psychology department and Asst. Prof. Mary Barber of the School of Business have received fellowships from a Carnegie Corporation grant which is supporting a two-year interinstitutional project to encourage undergraduate women to select from a wider range of career options. The project is titled Women and Career Options.

The six institutions involved with the $400,000 grant are: Boston College, Brandeis University, Hampshire College, M.I.T., and the Boston and Amherst campuses of the University of Massachusetts. Faculty members receiving fellowships will be paid for release time to advise undergraduates and to review their campuses' academic, administrative and extracurricular practices which affect women. Students will also be given internships to assist and encourage them to apprentice with experts in careers presently considered nontraditional for women.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Maki Takata, professor of medicine at Toho University in Tokyo, has conducted research which, he reports, indicates that the composition of human blood varies with different planetary positions.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You achieve. You make friends and influence people. Accent is on getting what you want--and on gaining emotional equilibrium. Desires are fulfilled. Money situation is brighter. Reward indicated through professional and creative endeavors.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are able to finish, complete and round out projects. Persons you respect confide in you. Prestige swings upward. Key now is to perceive potential. Don't sell yourself short. Aries, Libra natives could be in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Mind and body co-ordinate. Means you know what you want to do and are able to perform. Accent is on travel, correspondence, being "in touch" with one at a distance. Leo, Aquarius persons could figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Build for security. Put assets to work. Check interest rates. You might be getting shortchanged. Key is to be on top of financial situation. Aquarian has unorthodox views which could be constructively utilized.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are due for surprise--of pleasant variety. Good news indicated in connection with partnership, legal affairs, marriage. Social activity accelerates. You receive compliments. Opportunities abound.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You get results. Answers to questions come in--you know where you stand and what to do about it. Be specific. Frankness now becomes your ally. Stay with the familiar. Leave speculative endeavors to others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis is on change, variety, intensified relationship. Emotions dominate. Feelings direct--logic takes back seat. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to play significant roles. Popularity quotient is on upswing. You can win contests. Element of luck or timing is with you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Property value may be greater than first estimated. You have chance to hold and increase. Don't be diverted by one who is short-sighted. The way you live, your lifestyle, family relationships--these all count now for more than they have in recent past.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You gain satisfaction from visits, interpreting of messages. Pisces could play key role. Reject the superficial. Go after information. This may not be easy but it will be worth the trouble. Know it and go to it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Accent on security, dependability, personal possessions. Gains can be solidified. Your natural abilities are spotlighted. Money picture is bright. You handle more responsibility, gain greater reward.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some of your fondest wishes can be transformed into realities. Ride tide to opportunity for success. Timing is on target. Stress originality, independence. Imprint your own style. Expand horizons. Don't sell yourself short.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Private conference works to your advantage. Study Aquarius message. Highlight new starts in new directions. You may be holding proverbial ace in hole. Leo could play significant role. Special honor could be given by club, organization, professional associates.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have sense of humor and possible weight problem. In 1974, you make financial headway. If single, marriage may be on horizon. Married or single, you are due for greater success. Your abilities are recognized and you climb higher on social and financial ladder. During this past year, January and October should have been your most important months--months to be remembered.

Public Works Commissioner Defends Truck Overloading Stand

BOSTON (AP)-Commissioner Bruce Campbell of the state Department of Public Works Thursday defended his participation in 1972 in a special governor's Task Force on Truck Overloading.

Campbell's statement came after testimony Wednesday before the current legislative Commission on Truck overloading by Gerald I. Bern, president of the large contracting firm Gil-Bern Aggregates, Inc., who said that he wrote to Campbell and other state officials after the task force "fizzled out" but got no response.

Members of the task force, which also included Public Safety Secretary Richard McLaughlin and Secretary of Transportation Alan Altshuler, never communicated their findings to the current commission.

Campbell, who is also a member of the current commission, said that the task force was a kind of unofficial group, appointed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent at the request of Bern who was representing a small trucking organization which wanted the state weight limits for trucks raised from an absolute maximum of 73,000 pounds to 100,000 pounds.

Asked whether the task force ever made any recommendations to the governor, Campbell said, "I can't say that we did...but the fact that the task force didn't produce anything is a good thing since its only purpose was to produce higher weight limits."

Campbell said the DPW resisted the plan to raise weight limits because of the danger of losing federal highway aid.

The current commission has been critical of the governor and state officials on the last force who recognized the problem of truck overloading in the state almost two years ago but took no action.

Another DPW employe, Henry Holmes, testified Thursday that currently "overloads are being accepted by the DPW at construction sites."

"We in no way tell them they should overload, but others have said that because we accept it, that's encouraging them," Holmes said. "I know there are many laws in the books...but I've never felt it was my duty to be policeman, judge and jury."

An injunction against an order by Gov. Francis W. Sargent that the DPW refuse delivery from overloaded trucks is still pending in the state courts.

The commission will continue its hearings into truck overloading in the state next Wednesday.

Men Gymnasts Travel To Syracuse For Opener

By JOHN BOCK

It's a long ride to Syracuse. It's even longer when you have to contemplate the fact that your season is about to open and your team isn't really at full strength.

That is the though that faces coach Tom Dunn as he takes his Minuteman Gymnastics team on the road to Syracuse, New York for the start of the 1973-74 season.

"We expect a really tough meet with Syracuse because they returned everybody from last year's team and last year we had a close meet." said Coach Dunn.

Co-Captains Rich Seikunas and Jay Thompsen aren't going to be at full strength. Seikunas will work only two events due to a shoulder injury and Thompsen will work the long horse vault, due to a continuing problem with his knees. (The problem being that they are good for only one vault a night).

Not long ago Roy Johnson dislocated his elbow and is doubtful until next semester at the very least. That leaves a lot of space for deepening the lineup.

Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan will anchor the All Around and will be joined by Bill Brouillet. The floor exercise men will be Phil Aubrey and Rich Seikunas in addition to the All Around men. The pommel horse has Brian Hassig and Seikunas as specialists, while Peter Lusk and Aubrey combine on the Still Rings.

The parallel bars see Tim Beasley and Rich Seikunas as specialists while Jack Fabbricante has the honors on long horse vault and Dan Barter on the high bar.

"We will have to hit every time to win this one because three of the judges are from Syracuse and the other from Elmira, New York. We didn't have some of the kids round out the way we wanted, but the guys we've got are the best."

Said Jay Thompsen "We have confidence with a question mark because we haven't been tried yet. I want to do well because time is running short for me."

The JV Gymnasts meet Plymouth State's Varsity tonight at 7:00 in Boyden Auxiliary. These performers are all freshmen and sophmores and they will be led by Jon Brandon. He will be participating in the floor exercise, long horse vault, parallel bars, and high bar. Guys to watch are Paul Marks on the All Around, Hammond on the Parallel bars, and Dave Douglas on the Still Rings.

Loeb Award To Be Given To Outstanding DH

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — A panel of experts — including two Hall of Famers — has been selected by Publisher William Loeb of the Manchester Union Leader and New Hampshire Sunday News to select major league baseball's first Outstanding Designated Hitter ODH.

The Loeb award will be presented at the 26th annual Manchester Union Leader Fund, Inc. baseball dinner at the Manchester state armory on Jan. 23, 1974.

Publisher Loeb announced that the following will serve on the board of selectors: for the 1973 American League ODH Award:

—Wick Temple, sports editor of the Associated Press.

—Mike Hughes, executive sports editor of United Press International.

—Curt Gowdy, NBC sportscaster.

—Casey Stengel, former manager of the N.Y. Yankees and N.Y. Mets and a member of baseball's Hall of Fame.

—Bob Feller, all-time Cleveland Indians pitching great and also a Hall of Famer.

—C. C. Johnson Spink, editor and publisher of the Sporting News, often referred to as the "baseball bible."

—William Leggett, senior writer for Sports Illustrated.

Winner of the ODH Award will receive a plaque.

UCLA Even Better As College Hoop Starts

By DAN BERGER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Walton is a much better basketball player, UCLA's full-court zone press is more tenacious, the Bruins are finding superb play from last year's reserves — and college basketball's mightiest dynasty rolls along.

Coach John Wooden is bubbling about the potential of this year's team.

"There's no question that in the last year Bill has matured greatly," Wooden said of Walton, the 6-foot-11 Player of the Year. Wooden was asked if he had noted any improvement in Walton's play.

"How much can he improve from last year," came the reply, "His physical ability is about the same but he has become more mature in some ways."

The Bruins, winners of 75 straight games, face Arkansas Maryland this weekend in the opener of a season in which they seek an eighth straight NCAA title and 10th in the last 11 years.

Wooden said the full-court press "is a little better now than at this time last year and I believe it will be better than last year. Maybe it's because the players understand it a little more and are more equipped to play it."

Keith Wilkes has resumed his position as one starting forward with 6-8 junior Dave Myers filling the other spot. Meyers was a late-blooming reserve for the Bruins last year.

At the ball-handling "point" position, guard Tommy Curtis, a 6-1 senior, "is well ahead of any of the others," Wooden said. "Greg Lee and Pete Trgovich are fighting for the swing spot at guard.

"Walton is going to be better this year and we have better depth than we've had in some years."

UCLA is ranked No.1 in the AP pre-season poll while Maryland is rated fourth.

No. 11 San Francisco, No. 15 Arizona, No. 16 Penn, No. 17 Jacksonville, No. 18 Alabama and 19th-rated Memphis State also play Friday night.

San Francisco, picked to repeat as West Coast Athletic Conference champion, plays at home against San Diego University.

Wrestling, Cont.

England Champ, who is filling in for George Ireland, (out with some elbow problems.) Fenton looks like a heavyweight should look — exceptional build; but moves like a middle weight — fast.

The opponents: one good and one bad. The bad; well, in three years UConn has won a total of five out of 40 bouts with the Minutemen. They won't be much more of a threat this year.

The good — Yale University. They finished sixth in the EIWA last year with a champ and a fourth placer. Both are in the lineup this time. The Champ is Heavyweight Tim Karpoff who was pretty much untouched in last years EIWA tourney and was one of the top seeds at the NCAA's. 190 pounder Neal Brendel is a sophomore and has some really good moves that helped him last year and should also prove to be a good match. The Eli's have never been that great in the lightweights but might surprise this year.

It will be UMass vs. UConn at 2:00 p.m. and then UConn vs. Yale at 4:30 p.m. The evening bout will be UMass - Yale at 7:00. JV matches will be run simultaneously on the adjoining mat.

LAST MAN AT THE ALAMO--UMass Goalie crouches in anticipation as Salem State continues its offensive. The final toll: Salem State-11, Minutemen-7.

Indoor Track Treks To Orono For Debut

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass Indoor Track team will open its season tomorrow, when the squad travels to Maine.

The Minutemen will be up against a team that finished fourth in the Yankee Conference last year. Over the past few years, Maine has fared better in dual meets than in championship competition. This is due to the fact that Maine has few outstanding individuals. The Bears have a balanced team, with a good competitor in every event. The fine indoor facility should result in some fast times for the first meet of the season.

Coach Ken O'Brien stated that UMass is going to have to capture a good number of seconds and thirds as well as firsts. "We have to take nine of the fourteen events to win the meet," explained O'Brien. The mentor feels that taking nine first places is the key to winning, along with scoring at least 59 points.

Maine's Randy Beaulieu is a shot putter who threw 56' in the weight throw last year. Other standouts for the Bears include pole vaulters Dave Mason and Harold Jordan. Mason and Jordan are both 13'6"-14' vaulters and head a strong group of Maine pole vaulters. Jerry Laflamme will see double duty for the Bears, running both the mile and the two-mile. Eric Holmlund finished fourth in the Conference last year in the 600-yard run. Although Holmlund is the favorite for the event, Barron Littlefield of UMass is expected to challenge for first place.

Ray Talton and Jim White, both finalists in the YanCon a year ago, pace the Maine hurdling corps. Jim Vick, also a finalist in the Conference meet last year, will be top competitor for the Bears in the 60-yard dash. John Lethe, a 6'6" high jumper leads a group of good but inconsistent Maine jumpers. Greg Kendrick should also be among the top finishers in the high jump.

Maine was third in the mile relay and fifth in the two-mile relay at the Conference meet last season. These two relays are the last two events, and since the meet is expected to be a close one, they could easily decide the meet. Each relay is worth ten points, so a sweep of the relays would help UMass pick up its first win of the season.

Competing in the mile relay will be four of the sprinters, depending on who is rested after having run the other events. Weeden Wetmore, Ted Bussiere, Francis O'Keefe and either Harry Kelly or Peter Byron will run the two-mile relay for UMass.

In the distance events, UMass hopes to pick up some important points. Running the 1,000 will be Devin Croft, Mike Gillen and Jim Hunt. Harry Kelly, John Scheer, Robb Leary and Chet Mysliwicz will be competing in the mile while Tom Wilson, Phil Broughton and Paul Doiron will see action in the two-mile.

Bob Bocash, Tom Lonergan and Scott Herman are the top weightmen.

Tomorrow's meet should be a close contest, and will be an indicator of what to expect from UMass in track this winter.

Hoop Season Opens Under New Rules

By MIKE KNEELAND

With the basketball season getting underway Saturday, there are a few new rules and clarifications of old rules fans should note:

--Dunking the ball is illegal and is penalized with a one-shot technical foul. Dunking in pre-game warm-ups is also illegal. Referees are required to be on the court 30 minutes prior to tap-off to observe both teams practicing. For each dunk, a one-shot technical foul is assessed at the game's beginning. Remember, three technical fouls and a player is disqualified from not only the game, but the court's vicinity. (A player is always disqualified for a flagrant technical foul.)

--On a throw-in following a violation, only the designated thrower-in may be out of bounds. A second player who decides to throw in the ball and steps out of bounds is assessed a one-shot technical foul for unauthorized absense from the court.

--Headbands worn by players must be of one solid color and no more than two inches wide. A player may not enter the game with an illegal headband.

--If the referee makes a mistake, such as permitting the wrong man to shoot a foul shot, the mistake may only be corrected if it is discovered before the clock becomes alive following the first dead ball.

--When a foul is called on a player, he must immediately raise one, and only one, hand high above his head. Violators may be assessed a one-shot technical foul.

--There is no more air dribble. A player may tap the ball in the air rather than to the ground but he must allow the ball to hit the floor before he again dribbles the ball.

By the way: a tap-in is not considered a try for field goal. This means that if a player is fouled while tapping the ball, he only gets one shot at the foul line. This also means that if the clock sounds while the ball is in flight following a tap, the game is immediately ended. If the ball should enter the hoop, it does not count. Contrary, if the horn sounds while the ball is in flight for a "legal" try, and the ball enters the hoop, the goal is counted.

Speaking of hoops, referees are being told that the hoop will probably be raised to 11 or 12 feet within two years. Gymnasium designers are also being warned so that ceilings will be high enough.

Mike Kneeland will soon be a member of the International Association of Approved Basketball Officials.

Notices

SWIMMING — The intramural co-rec swim meet will be held Monday, Dec. 3 at 7 p.m. in the Boyden Pool.

VOLLEYBALL — All volleyball league winners, men, women, and co-ed, should check with the intramural office to secure campus championship playoff schedules.

BASKETBALL — All intramural basketball entries are due at the intramural office on Thursday, Dec. 6 before 5 p.m.

That Cagey Feeling

To many of you who are new here, the first time you were in it you probably thought it was a barn. You remember registering in ninety degree heat. The floor was the ground itself. Tomorrow night, it becomes Curry Hicks Cage once again. The basketball season is underway.

When I came here as a freshman, I was looking forward to see Julius Erving play his senior year at Curry Hicks. Unfortunately, Dr. J played his senior year for the Virginia Squires. But it was the Doctor himself who made being at Curry Hicks a truly unique experience.

I had heard stories told of the long lines through the Southwest Tunnel which started forming at three o'clock the afternoon of the game. In order to see the Doctor operate, some brave individuals risked life and limb hanging from the bars along the side of the balcony.

But once inside the Cage, the story of Redmen-Minutemen basketball eminence is told. You look at the banners hanging from the rafters: NCAA 1962; NIT 1970, 1971, 1973. The Minutemen now look forward to their fourth post-season tournament in the past five years.

But what is it like to be part of the crowd inside the Cage? If you've ever seen the Knick fans in Madison Square Garden, well we can match them in enthusiasm. (though not in number) Maybe it's the pep band that gets the adrenalin flowing in the crowd with the "Go, fight, win" routine. The band certainly does its part to lift the team by playing such numbers as Conquistador and the William Tell Overture.

But, that's not all. There's a lot of emotion at Curry Hicks Cage. Who will ever forget a sad Coach Leaman one night last year as four guys named Austin, McLaughlin, Olsen, and Peters paraded out to center court to be honored as seniors who were about to play their last game in front of the home-town fans.

Next we move on to the cheerleaders. Before each game starts, they come out with their pom-pons shaking and kicking their legs high to the beat of the music. They always line up at the end of the court where the opposition warms up for the first half. (I always hope that one of them will kick the other guys' star center.)

And then there's Joe Paradise. Someone told me recently that Joe is no longer here. He's the PA announcer, the guy who was always yelling: "Chapter 243 of the general laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts says there's no smoking in Curry Hicks Cage."

Large crowds, naturally, create the atmosphere in the Cage. Who will ever forget the UConn game last year? And then there was Fordham. There was a member of the Fordham athletic office who had voting power for the NIT. And as each UMass basket, rebound, steal, and blocked shot occurred, the crowd rose to its feet to begin the chant: "NIT, NIT, NIT...."

The first victim will be the Harvard Crimson. They are coached by a disciple of the Red Auerbach School of Coaching, (otherwise known as the Celtics) Tom "Satch" Sanders. This will be the first game for Satch as a coach. He must realize that rarely does a visiting team escape from Curry Hicks with a victory. Only Syracuse could make that claim last year. As a matter of fact, two years ago, one visiting coach became so frustrated with everything going against him that he challenged Coach Leaman to a fight.

You can look at all the pictures in the yearbook you want, but you have to be there to be a part of it, to feel it, to live it.

We start again tomorrow night.

Harvard,Satch Meet Hoopsters At Cage

By STEVE DeCOSTA

If you've never seen a "Satch" in person, then tomorrow is your chance.

Tom "Satch" Sanders makes his coaching debut tomorrow night at the Cage as the Minutemen host the Crimson from Harvard at 7:30 in the opening game for both teams.

Sanders is a former Celtic great who retired as a player after last season to take over the coaching reigns at the Ivy League school.

And Satch should be able to help the Crimson. In the past, Harvard, with their bevy of former high school All-Americans, had not trouble putting the ball in the hoop, but neither did their opponents.

To say that their defense was lacking would be something of an understatement. It is in this area that Sanders, one of the better defensive forwards in the NBA in his prime, should be able to do the most good.

Jack Leaman remarked that "Sanders knows that defense wins ball games and he should be a great asset to that team."

If Harvard cannot stop the Minutemen from scoring, they could be in for a long evening. Most of their firepower from recent years, James Brown, Floyd Lewis, Marshall Sanders and others, have graduated. Add to this the ineligibility of former All New England guard Jim Fitzsimmons for the first semester as the result of Ivy League transfer regulations, and it becomes apparent that the Crimson are not as well off as they used to be.

One thing Harvard still has is Tony Jenkins, a second team All-New England and All-Ivy choice with a 16.9 scoring average last year.

Another returnee is guard Ken Wolfe, who started off slowly last season but came into his own to be named the MVP in the annual Beanpot Tournament in Boston.

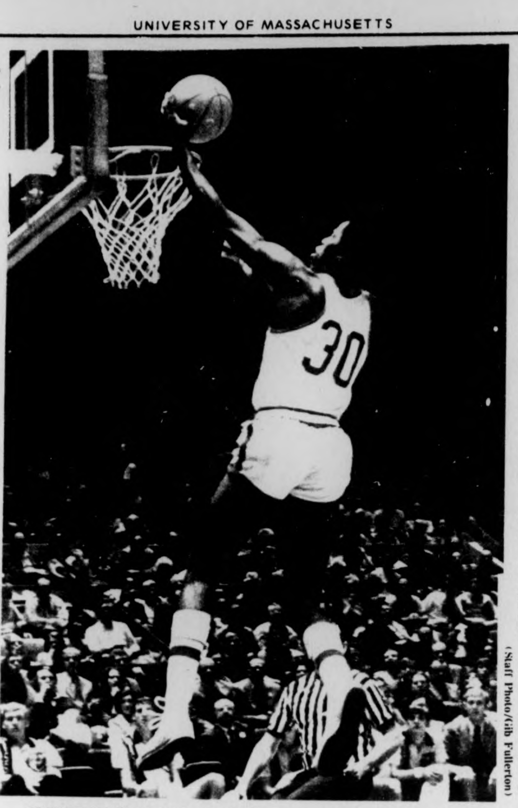
Beyond these two, Harvard is thin. Lou Silver is a starter up front, but nothing else is certain. The remaining two positions will be filled with players with little or no varsity experience. They will be selected from the ranks of Bill Carey, Arnold Needleman, Ken McLaughlin, Mike Griffin, and Len Adams.

Leaman will counter with the starting five of Al Skinner, John Murphy, Rick Pitino, Bill Endicott, and Greg Duarte.

Look for swing-man Jim Burke to enter the contest early. Leaman says "Burke just might be the best athlete on the squad. He gives us the most coming off the bench. I've never felt that the starting team was most important, but it was the team that finished that counted. You can bet that Burke will be on the team that finishes."

Opening in the Cage is a blessing for the Minutemen. Regarded as a "pit" by opposing teams, Leaman calls his home "one of the finest basketball facilities around. It almost demands that our personnel play up to their abilities. There's no telling how many games it has won for us."

And tomorrow night could up that count by one.



(Staff Photo/Gib Fullerton)

IDENTIFIED FLING OBJECT--The number 30 identifies that hovering being as Al Skinner. The layups (no dunks the referee is watching!) should be many for Skinner if they can successfully meet the challenge of Satch Sanders Harvard Five tomorrow night at the Cage.

Skaters Regroup For Merrimac Test

By BILL BALLOU

It may not seem possible, but things will likely get worse before they get better for the UMass hockey team.

The Minutemen, still trying to figure out what happened after Wednesday's 11-7 napalming by Salem State, take on powerful Merrimac tomorrow night in Andover.

Merrimac is the early season Division II powerhouse. They've beaten Vermont, 3-2, and Providence Colle 8-5, so it's obvious they've got lots of talent. They're in the second season of playing in their own rink, where they're awfully tough.

The UMies are going to have to regroup. There's not much else they can do, because if they don't improve they won't win a game all year.

Their "defense", the chief villain in Wednesday's loss, is in dire straits physically, which is not the most pleasant news for the unfortunate who'll have to start in goal tomorrow night.

Dave Alesandroni, with a badly injured shoulder, is out for sure, and Mike Ellis is touch-and-go with a bruised wrist. It was though at first that Ellis' wrist might be broken, which would have a disaster of Titanic proportions for the Minutemen. Ellis played probably the finest game of his UMass career against Salem State, and without his steadiness and experience on defense the score could have reached basketball levels.

As far as goal is concerned, the guy who has to stand up to the Merrimac barrage hasn't been sentenced yet by Jack Canniff.

If Chick Rheault is physically fit, chances are it'll be him, if not probably John Binkoski. Sophomores Bruce Gledhill and Jeff McReynolds, who started against Salem, are also possibilities.

McReynolds, making his first varsity start, was a dejected man after the game.

"You've got to blame me" he said. "After all, anyone can top the easy ones, the big thing is to stop the tough ones. That's what a goalie's there for. It's my job to keep the puck out of the net and I didn't do it."

McReynolds is being too hard on himself, considering Binkoski gave up three goals in his ten minutes and Salem State goalie Gerry Gagnon allowed seven in his 60. It wasn't a night for defense.

State isn't considered among the Divisional iron, Merrimac is. Tomorrow night will give a good indication how permanent the poor quality of UMass play will be.

Wrestlers At Home With UConn, Yale

By JOHN BOCK

Most coaches share mixed feelings about the beginning of a season. They lament the loss of their graduated veterans and dread the fact that they have to inject untested youth into the varsity lineup.

Coach Homer Barr has reached that time of the year but shouldn't feel too bad. After all he only lost two seniors from last year's New England Championship team.

Well he isn't that happy because somehow he opens the season with FIVE freshmen in the varsity lineup. Yes five "untested youths" will meet the Huskies of UConn and the Bulldogs of Yale University tomorrow in Boyden Auxilary Gym.

"These five freshmen will make alot of mistakes, a lot of mistakes," said Coach Barr realistically, "but they are some of the best freshmen we have ever put on the mat."

It was a long time coming to the varsity line-up this season, with the 150 pound and 134 pound class not being decided until Thursday night. The veterans pretty much came into their spots as predicted.

Larry Reynolds will start at 126, despite the pain from a slight shoulder separation. He is New England Runner-Up at that weight class. His weight has come down fairly well this season and he has added an improved single leg to his takedown repetoire.

Cliff Blom, a sophomore and New England Runner-Up at 150, has moved up to 158 for at least the first half of the season. The Long Island native dropped from 190 and is really an exceptional wrestler on the mat.

The 167 pound weight class sees Captain Steve Benson as undisputed starter. One of the toughest wrestlers in all of the East he combines an agressive take down attitude with a lot of muscle on the mat. He is Yankee Conference Champ at 158 and New England Runner-Up at that weight.

John Connolly, who has been starting varsity since his freshman year, is at 190 and has blossomed very nicely at that weight. He doesn't have to worry about the severe cut to 177 and has recaptured much of the strength and stamina that earned him the nickname "Dynamo".

Last, but definitely not least, is Russell Chateauneuf who will wrestle at 142 pounds. Russ took a years layoff to recuperate from a knee injury. His freshman year he shocked New England wrestling by becoming the first freshman to win the Varsity Tournament. He is still regaining some of his timing but is otherwise ready to go.

That brings up to the freshmen. At 118 is Gene DiObilda from Pennsylvania. Gene has all the moves and finesse to carry them off. Bob Schab from Long Island will come in at 134 with some of the nicest takedowns you'll see this year. His mat wrestling should improve with some experience.

The 150 pound weight class will most likely see the duties shared by two freshmen. Sean Cronin, from Indiana, and Steve Jabaut from New York will split for the triangular. Cronin is pretty much a strong wrestler all around. Jabaut has the moves and quickness that could make for an exceptional college wrestler.

The 177 pound class has Robin Osborne, one of New Jersey's finest, and he has strength and a good eye for mistakes. At heavyweight, there is footballer Dennis Fenton, Massachusetts State High School and New

Also-Rans

Sports is not just a touchdown by Jim Plunkett, a home run by Henry Aaron, or a goal by Phil Esposito.

It is not just Arnold Dean giving the scores on the WTIC news, Ken Coleman doing the play-by-play, or Peter Gammons writing about how the Red Sox fared.

It is not just 14,000 in Boston Garden, 35,000 in Fenway Park, or 65,000 in Schaefer Stadium.

Too often the American looks to the mere outcome of the game or the play of their favorite superstar in assessing a game. Thus, they overlook one of the more exciting aspects of sport, the play of the also-ran, the marginal pro who draws the minimum salary yet often puts on a better show than the $100,000 superstar.

The also-rans do have their day. Maybe a game-winning home run or a last-minute touchdown puts their name in the limelight, but it lasts for only a day or so. By a week later no one remembers.

Those who toil in obscurity often have the most to lose by a bad performance. While a bad year by a Johnny Bench or Fran Tarkenton is shrugged off with a token decrease in pay but the mediocre athlete who puts on a sub-par showing is usually pointed toward the nearest bus to the minor leagues.

The marginal players have more than shares of ups and downs. The emotional impact of the game seems to hit this kind of athlete with greater intensity. He knows what it is like to grab a headline, yet he knows how fleeting the game actually is. He knows that a mistake in a crucial situation will also grab a banner, but this time the memory will linger on in the hearts of the fans. A game-blowing error or missed lay-up often brands the player with a label of "choke" or the like for the rest of his career.

The mediocre take their chances at the beginning of every training season. They travel, often hundreds of miles, to training camps with hope eternal, but always holding in the back of their mind the threat of being beaten out of their job by a highly paid rookie with no experience but a no-cut contract to protect his status on the active roster.

And then there are the minor leagues, almost anybody's definition of hell. Getting sent to Pawtucket, Hartford, or even Pittsfield. But the marginal pro often has no choice; playing in rat traps that are called stadiums by the rural population is his only hope of making it back to the big time.

Another cross the also-rans have to bear is the possibility of a trade. While Reggie Smith can afford to buy a new house in St. Louis, or anywhere else for that matter, someone living on $10,000 a year, which is the minimum annual wage for a major league baseball player, often simply cannot afford the expense of packing his family and bags into a plane plus the added difficulty and expense of finding a new house or apartment in his new home town.

When the mediocre player is washed up, there is no graceful exit via retirement with press conferences and the like. There is only the sad parting duty of emptying a locker and not even having to slip out the back door, because no one would notice anyway.

That's the way it is. The persons who deserve the attention get the least. After all, what would sports be like without them?

A-Power: Myopia Or Model?

by John Dean

President Nixon, in a recent assessment of energy needs, stated that there must be a "sharp stepup" in the use of atomic energy to develop electric power. Many European nations faced with a dwindling supply of importable fuel oil are turning towards nuclear energy as the answer to their present and future energy needs. Industrial nations of the world have, for the past ten years, directed a power path toward nuclear energy without paying enough attention to alternatives which may be more desirable. The town of Montague (twelve miles from Amherst) is faced with a choice which will have profound effects upon its people and others in the region. This decision will be one more step in our increasing reliance on nuclear power as an energy source.

Northeast utilities has decided upon Montague Plains near Lake Pleasant as one of two sites for a fission nuclear reactor which will use uranium as its main fuel source. The reactor's completion date is set for 1980 and the final decision on the site should be made some time in December.

Much of the current controversy surrounding the construction of nuclear power plants centers around the possibility of an accident causing a large release of radioactive material which is harmful to people up to a hundred miles away. This type of accident would be caused by a failure in the cooling system and a consequent heat-up of the fuel rods and release of radioactivity. The Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) has repeatedly stated that it has, along with the utility companies, developed a system which is for all practical purposes "safe". For the sake of a particularly credible argument, we will suppose that the AEC is correct in this assertion and that the likelihood of such an accident is probabilistically very small.

Now that we've eliminated the major stumbling block which has opposed the construction of nuclear power plants in the past, let's examine what the people of Montague and surrounding areas will be facing from the normal daily operation of a nuclear power plant in their "backyard".

Dr. Allan Hoffman, assistant professor of physics at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has done extensive research in the area of nuclear energy and energy alternatives. According to Dr. Hoffman, a nuclear reactor puts out a certain amount of radioactivity in normal operation. There is a certain amount of leakage from the reactor vessels into the water which is used to cool the vessels. This radioactive material is removed, condensed, and finally discharged into a nearby water source in very dilute amounts which the AEC has determined are not harmful. Radioactive gases are also discharged. The gases are held for a short time before discharged to allow some of the more dangerous short lived radionucleotides to decay. Most of the gas emitted through the stack of a power nuclear power plant is krypton which has a half-life of ten years*. Yes, we said stack. Although many of the pictures you've seen put out by electric companies have deceptively left them out to make a black and white comparison of the dirty versus "clean" fuel sources, nuclear power plants do in fact have stacks which do emit "clean" looking gases which happen to be radioactive in nature. It must however be emphasized at this point that the amounts of gases permitted to be released are not harmful and in most cases are dispersed by the winds so that very low levels of the radioactive material is found in the vicinity of the plant. This is the situation today with very few nuclear power plants, but what will happen when there are many nuclear power plants, each individually emitting small amounts of krypton? Will these small doses accumulate into one large one? The answer is as yet unclear. Dr. Hoffman in response to these questions felt that "the routine release problem associated with nuclear power plants is probably one which is quite susceptible to solution" and as such is not really a major drawback to using nuclear energy. So this problem has a solution, but the solution will only be implemented if people care enough.

One major drawback to today's nuclear plants is that of a long term storage plan for high level radioactive nuclear wastes. A fuel rod in a power plant normally stays there for twelve to eighteen months and is then in a condition in which it can no longer be used. At this point only about six percent of the uranium in it is used up so it is sent to a reprocessing plant where they extract the useable uranium. The reprocessing plant for this region is located in upstate New York. The fuel rods are physically and chemically broken down and more radioactive krypton is released as well as other high level radioactive wastes. Emission standards at these plants are generally lower and not as good as they should be. This, according to Dr. Hoffman, is even admitted by the industry themselves. The wastes produced at this site are a major problem as some of them have half-lives of more than 24,000 years. Our present plan consists of surface storage for an indefinite period of time until a permanent solution can be found. The thought which pervades these actions is an unfailing belief by technicians without a technique hat technology will prevail. This past summer at Hanford, a large concrete and steel tank containing high level radioactive wastes leaked 150,000 gallons of high level wastes into the ground. As of now, we have 80-90 million gallons of high level wastes in short-term storage, most of which comes from the arms

The Steak Out In Amherst

by Patrick Coffey

"The Steak Out, yea, that's the place on the corner I pass on my way to McDonald's." It's a little outrageous to mention them in the same breath; they are on opposite sides of the street.

The Steak Out restaurant, on the corner of Route 9 and University Drive, Amherst, is a swank return to the rip-roaring 20's gangster era featuring Jimmy Cagney, Edward G. Robinson, and a fine selection of steaks and Italian dinners.

The 20's era decor and authentic momentos highlight both the upstairs restaurant and the downstairs Speakeasy Lounge. It is quiet, comfortable, classy and despite all that, informal. Near life size stills of your favorite movie gangsters line the walls, along with an honest-to-god flapper dress, period jewelry pieces, and an assortment of five foot tall poker cards, each of which is a conversation piece, because each contains a hidden flaw.

Dinner starts with a self-service, all you can eat, salad and bread bar which is quite adequate. The salad bar includes a good selection of dressings, all neatly labelled. Your meal soon continues on to your selection of entrees from "the most wanted dinners on everybody's list", which could be: Big Al's Chicago Style Sirloin (hearty, choice aged and lean); The Dutchman's Filet Mignon (thick, aged tenderloin); Lucky's New York Sirloin Strip (boneless and juicy); Jack the Ripper (rack of barbecued spareribs); Ma Barker's Skirt Steak; John D's Special Brochette; Lizzie Borden's Chopped Sirloin; Little Caesar's Stuffed Shrimp; Pretty Boy's Alaskan King Crab Legs, and the Bonnie & Clyde Combination.

The reviewer was among a group of seven hungry gourmets and gourmonds which descended on the place like a mob movin' in on new turf. The group failed to even ruffle the staff, although on occasion we were trying. The service was prompt and went beyond courtesy and into friendly. Everyone decided to recommend the hostess, Wendy, who drops beer bottles occasionally, but has never hit a customer yet.

We especially recommend Big Al's Chicago Style Sirloin at $5.25 and Little Caesar's Stuffed Shrimp at $5.95. On Monday and Tuesday nights, respectively, they are offered as $4.50 specials which include: a mug of beer, a baked potato, a cup of coffee and all the bread and salad you can eat. This brings us to the only complaint of the evening.

The price on the menu for a chopped sirloin covers exactly that, a piece of meat. The baked potato you might want on the side is going to cost another $.45, and the hot garlic bread is $.50 extra, etc. A customer at The Steak Out certainly gets his money's worth in quality, service, and atmosphere, but for the sake of quantity it would seem the potato and bread should be included with the price of the meal.

A moderately priced Italian line "from the old country" comes well recommended and the Anisette or Irish coffee served in gilded cups, with mounded whipped cream is a fine fini, with an excellent Bavarian Cream Pie.

The Spreakeasy lounge downstairs has a steadily improving schedule of entertainment, subtle candle and carpet atmosphere, stiff drinks, and the man who mixes all those stiff drinks, bartender/UMie John Stockbower. The happy hour is a worthwhile deal, Tuesday through Friday, 4:30 - 7:00, mixed drinks are $.50 and beer is $.35 or $.50. Bonnie Floyd packed the place in recent weeks and Asst. Manager Mike Infintine has committed himself to booking more and more area, name bands and quality boogie and blues groups.

The Steak Out also carries a luncheon line. The menu carries through with the total twenties theme and includes: Straight Shooter; Cheeze-it; St. Louie Blue; George's Raft; Bugsy's Beef Bar-B-Que; Rocky's Roast Beef; Jail Bird's Delight; G-Man Original; Gulf Coast Gang; The Chopper and The Cheeze Chopper; The Stripper; The Godmother, and Eggs Diamond.

Hours at The Steak Out are: Luncheon, Mon. - Fri. - 11:30 to 2:00 p.m.; Sat. - 11:30 to 2:00 p.m.; Dinner, Mon. - Fri. - 4:30 to 10:00 p.m., Sat. - 4:30 to 11:00 p.m. Sunday hours - 12:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

For the average student the downstairs lounge is an excellent place to be, especially during happy hours, or on Friday and Saturday nights, when the place is at its peak. For the student with money in his pocket, The Steak Out will provide a fine meal.

On Campus Recruitment: P-10

by Roz Marston

Five years ago, Project Ten was created as an alternative, an extension of the University, in which concerned people with some hopes, ideas, and a lot of energy worked to set and eventually meet their goals. Their "still prevailing" goals echo of "living-learning experience"; experimental college; community; Alternate lifestyles; and alternative academics. Today these goals are still heard, in addition to new ones every P-10er brings when they come to Pierpont; such as "tribes"; the Inquiry Program; special interest corridors; and Modes of Inquiry.

Pierpont is a "home" for the 300 or so people living here. Each of the eight corridors has its own identity; ranging from an Organic Farming corridor, an Academic corridor, to a Late-Night Anarchist corridor. But when members from each of these corridors come together, a semblence of community is formed and the result is; a boogie, a community dinner, a volleyball game, a dorm newspaper, a workshop, a massage parlor, a darkroom, a kitchen, or an arts and crafts room. Individually the energies have resulted in; a yurt, a kayak, an organic farm, and a rainbow. This is the first part of a living-learning experience.

An even larger part, is the academic atmosphere here, formally known as the Inquiry Program. It was created in the Spring of '72 and approved for opening the proceding Fall. The Inquiry Program consists of 60 Freshpersons (and a few Sophomores). The curriculum is student-faculty designed, draws on the University's resources while maintaining the intimacy of a small college, and fosters an opportunity to be responsible for your own education. The Program is considered an alternative to standard University academia because the student designs his or her own plan of study with the help of a faculty tutor. The requirements are to meet regularly with the tutor for evaluations; to keep a portfolio (which is on file in the Project Ten Office) of all learning activities including grades from courses or written evaluations of all campus projects; to take 3 Modes of Inquiry (the alternative to CORE requirements); and to have the desire to be your own education. People in the Program are exempted from University and College CORE requirements, do not have to maintain a minimum number of courses or credits for each semester, may do the Program in as few as 3 or as many as 5 semesters, and are awarded Junior status (60 credits) upon satisfactory completion of the Program.

There is also a small staff whose titles and duties change accordingly. Right now there is a Director, Charles Adams; an assistant for Administrative Development, Robin Dizard; an assistant for Academic Development, Dave Hoffman; a Head of Residence position shared by Francesca Maltese and Sandy Blount; as well as an undergraduate administrative intern and a group of counselors.

Although Project Ten has many available alternatives to traditional University life, it is not completely autonymous from the University, but an extension, and experiences similar ups and downs other educational systems do. To a degree, there is some apathy; there is some undirected talent; there are some who feel the Inquiry Program is not really an alternative form of education; there are some who think it's great; there are some who enjoy growing pains; but most everyone has hopes and energy to make those hopes real.

Do you want to get away from the University? Do you want to get away to a lowrise dorm in a far corner of Southwest named Pierpont? Do you want to get away from University requirements? Do you want a way to be yourself and share yourself? Come down to Pierpont next Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday, (December 3, 4, and 5) between 7:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. and talk to Project members about living and learning and you. Students wishing to live here must sign up with the Heads of Residence by Thursday, December 6.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To The Editor:

Poor Richard's assistant editor, Joyce Kosofsky, found fit to cover the 16 November issue of Poor Richard's with sixteen wide column inches of advertising for earth shoes, and included a large photo of their inventor.

Now, I don't want to argue about the shoes' orthopedic value or their undeniably awful appearance. I don't think that they're a good idea, but I'll leave that issue alone. My complaint lies with Ms. Kosofsky and whoever else is responsible for printing the article.

Why did Anna Kelso and her shoes get such a big free plug? I don't know what a full page advertisement in PR costs, but I'll bet it's quite a few dollars more than Anna Kelso paid. What is so unique and wonderful about the shoes that they, and no other new products, deserve front page coverage?

When I first read the article, I assumed that Ms. Kosofsky was a little low on ideas for articles and typed this one up to fill space. That innocent delusion disappeared when I learned from another newspaper that this shoe store had invited many local newspapers over to try out and wear home a free pair of their shoes in return for a kind word in print. Ms. Kosofsky was obviously more than delighted to comply.

Well, my newspaper friends chided me for my naivete. "That kind of thing happens all the time!" they cried. "That's the business."

I suppose they're right, but their newspaper didn't come out with sixteen sugar-coated inches. In fact, nobody went over to get a free pair of shoes.

Joyce, those shoes are expensive. They cost thirty bucks. Your article probably meant a significant number of sales. If you got the shoes free, you should have said so. Whether you took the shoes or not, I think that it is improper to print an article like, "The Walking Revolution" in a magazine which has a guaranteed, prepaid circulation of over ten thousand.

David Chastain

Ed. Note:

As editor it was my decision to run the Anna Kelso story on page one and accept it in its original form. Kelso, the designer of an innovative new product, visiting the area was news. The topic of payola is indeed a sensitive one in the journalism field. The possibilities in this instance did not go unnoticed.

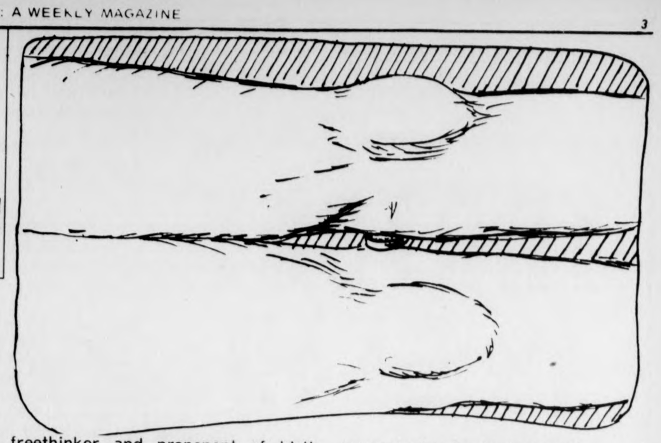
Crocodile Dung or Birth Control Revisited



by Carol MacBaren

Because birth control has been a recent newcomer to the arena of public pugilism, its history has been slightly, if at all, acknowledged. Garrett Hardin comments, "...because the subject has been so long under a taboo, lack of literature led to a general impression that birth control was essentially a modern thing." 1

It gives us added insight into today's controversies when we review the past history of birth control. There is a definite "B.C." to contraception. Examples range from elephant dung pessaries of ancient Egyptians to the sponge and string method of Francis Place. Evidently our ancestors weren't all that enthused about the, "...blessedness of children." They devised immensely imaginative (if not particularly effective) methods of avoiding parenthood.

We in the twentieth century possess a heritage of vast scientific knowledge. This advantage may cause us to look askance at some of the birth control measures contrived by other cultures or even our culture in a different time. Nonetheless, crocodile dung was used as a pessary by Egyptian women around 1850 B.C. Many more primitive cultures practiced elaborate magical rites, and if all else failed, infanticide. Whereas some measures had a medical basis (for example, several herbs, animal dung and other mixtures have spermacidal powers in their acidity or alkalinity) many did not. Unfortunately, birth control took a giant leap backwards during the Greek through Middle Ages.

Among the preventatives recommended by Pliny the Elder (A.D. 23-79) were to take, "...two small worms out of a body of a certain spider and attach(ing) them in a piece of deer skin to a woman's body before sunrise." 3 Things weren't looking up much in the Middle Ages. Then a woman was advised to spit three times into a frogs mouth.

There were rational voices among the clamor that did not endorse potions, incantations or the like, but advocated pessaries, spermacidal agents or physical contraceptives. However, Chinese women still burnt moxa balls on their navels and Japanese men (before the arrival of rubber condoms) used hard sheaths made of tortoiseshell, horn or leather. As Peter Fryer, author of The Birth Controllers, puts it, "One gathers however that, attached to a stick they made tolerable dildoes." 4

Folk beliefs of many cultures have persisted through the ages. Many European women still sneeze after coitus believing the action to prevent conception. One would think that after myriads of failures that this would not be a very self-reinforcing method. In Europe, women would sit on the number of fingers corresponding to the number of years they wanted to remain childless. The list is as varied as the peoples of the earth.

BAYER
contraceptive pills
Original

With the advent of rubber the use of the condom (or rather the widespread use of the condom) increased involving the male more in the responsibility of contraception. Various historical references show its increasing usage, but many shared Samuel Boswell's feeling of being hampered, "...while wrapped up in a dead skin." 5

Enlightening the masses as to the benefits of contraception is still an uphill fight now. In the 1800's when the movement really got underway, it was even more difficult. Birth control proponents were fair game for everyone.

Richard (the beast) Carlile, freethinker and proponent of birth control was called every vile name in the book. One opponent described him as, "...a non-propagator — an unnatural sponge of incipient humanity (this refers to his close affiliation with Francis Place who advocated the sponge method. Place was known as the "sponge".)! a twaddler in the filth of Malthus — a despoiler of nature's essence — a brute — a beat...".6 This went on and on. The proponents of birth control also had to grapple with "The Society for the Suppression of Vice" led by "Madman" Comstock; a man unrelenting in his pursuit of deviancy. It must have been poetic justice that he died from catching a chill at Margaret Sanger's trial. Comstockery never kept Carlile down. All told he spent one third of his adult life in jail for espousing free-thinking doctrines.

Birth controllers took their share of abuse in ink too. For every pro-birth control book written, there was one penned against. Hot off the presses following a rally or speech were pamphlets like, "Conjugal Sin" by Dr. Gardner; "The Preventative Obstacle or Conjugal Onanism", "The Corruption Now Called Neo-Malthusianism" by the Moral Reform Union and "The Physical Evils Arising From the Prevention of Conception" which embodied a dreadful list of medical horrors caused by the use of contraceptive devices. These articles spurred on controversy and resulted in several headline trials that rather than hurting the movement, helped it by dissiminating more information.

On the outskirts of the legitimate methods and proponents of birth control was what Peter Fryer calls the "lunatic fringe", or the more radical members of the move towards population control. One author named Marcus came right out and recommended infanticide. He thought that the problem of populousness could be solved by killing all the children in a poor family after the third. "The infants so killed were to be buried in beautiful collonades, adorned with flowers, closed and gently warmed in winter, and resorted to by all classes as places of recreation...". A rather unusual plan for birth control.

Professor A. Weingold (a doctor at the university of Halle) proposed infibulation. This method involved drawing the foreskin forward, drilling two holes in it (top and bottom) and then passing lead wire through the ends having them soldered together. Any tampering with the devise would net a severe punishment. After reaching the age of thirty, a man could engage in sex only if he was wealthy enough to support a family. Society wasn't ready for such drastic measures.

The proponents of birth control throughout the 1800's and early 1900's were individuals in the original sense of the word. Most were freethinkers, a trifle eccentric and exceptionally brave. We owe them for the extension of personal freedom through birth control.

The Boys on the Bus, Riding With the Campaign Press Corps

With Watergate, ITT, and the scandals surrounding the present administration, people are starting to get a look into the workings of the highest levels of the national bureaucracy. Many people draw their opinions from the media. The question is: Does anyone know what makes the people in the media, who feed us all of this insight, tick?

Tim Crouse of Rolling Stone Magazine was on the road with campaign '72, but his objectives were different from most of the reporters on the campaign trail. Crouse was covering the coverage, looking into the people who write and broadcast the news. The result is one of the most eye opening looks at the press and the forces behind it to appear in quite some time.

In The Boys on the Bus, Crouse gives the reader some disturbing insights into the treatment the press receives and tolerates, especially in his look into the campaign of Richard Nixon (which in reality turned out to be a non-campaign). A good example is the blinking light in the White House pressroom that stops blinking when it's time for the reporters to go home, in essence saying that there will be no more news from the President that day. There's the chilling, downright rude treatment that some members of the press are treated to by Ron Ziegler if they stop out of line. There's also the chilling truth that these members of the press stand for that treatment.

The best thing about this extremely readable book is the insights that it gives into these strange people through whose eyes and words we see our government. It's a book that provides a lot of food for thought for everyone. Is there any way to cope with the treatment that a President decides will be his way of handling the press corps? Did the persecution of the press really end with Watergate?

Hopefully Crouse's book will provide non-journalists as well as journalists (among whom it's already made a splash) with a little of the aforementioned food for thought. This reviewer can capsulize his feelings about the book in three words. I loved it. The $7.95 hardcover price is prohibitive, but hopefully a paperback will be available soon.

The Boys on the Bus is about the human element of ambition, exhaustion, and loyalty that make "objective" reporting almost impossible. Timothy Crouse followed the press to find the story behind the stories; what the reporters were not able to report; how they decided what was important; and why they sometimes failed to provide a true picture of what actually happened.

TROTSKY IS DEAD

TROTSKY: A Documentary
Francis Wyndham and David King
Praeger Publishers
$12.50 204 pgs.

BY SHELLY FITZGERALD

Trotsky uniquely combines words and pictures to create an almost cinematic history of one of the major political figures of this century. The authors make no attempts to delve into unexplored areas of Trotsky's life; instead they rely on visual effects and an economy of well-chosen phrases to present the man Trotsky.

The story of Trotsky's life is an enormous tragedy yet his faith in the spirit of the revolution never failed him. He spent his life trying to create a Communist system in Russia. Along with Lenin, he might have succeeded but he lived long enough to see what he had built be twisted into a politico-religious cult of his arch-enemy, Stalin. He was driven out of Russia and spent ten years searching for a place to live before he settled into uneasy exile in Mexico. There he felt the long murderous claw of Stalin creep closer, killing his two sons, his bodyguard, and his friends until he himself was caught in 1940. There is something luridly sensational about the photograph of Trotsky's body being cremated but it serves to emphasize the enormous moral wrong of his death.

Most of the text is taken from Trotsky's own voluminous writings and the photographs of his later years were taken by people close to him so there is a kind of family feel about the end of the book. This is in sharp contrast with the image of Trotsky during the years of action, 1917-1924, when he was the main physical force behind the collection of all the Russian people into the Bolshevik ring. There are numerous pictures of him speaking to crowds of his Red soldiers and you can almost hear him infusing them with his revolutionary fervor.

Trotsky is a worthwhile way to get a superficial panorama of the personal history, achievements, and character of a man who, despite an eternally frustrating life, never lost his hope that someday there would be a world where men are truly created equal.

Poetry from the Russian Underground

by Christine Dillard

For their expressions of individuality, these writers have paid dearly. In the face of censorship and government control of publication, those unacceptable to the official Writer's Union went underground. The self published "samizdat" were collections of coarse grey paper cautiously copied and passed hand to hand. Some such as these here eventually reached the West.

Certainly this occupation was extremely dangerous, for the Soviet Secret Police have been highly successful. Besides the fatigue of general harrassment and surveillance, many faced kangaroo courts to be sent to labor camps, insane asylums and forced emigration. A few have continued their outspokeness with only their reputation to protect them. A recent visit by Arab terrorists to the home of the renowned physicist Sakharov proved that is not enough. As Sakharov is under continuous government surveillance, it is unlikely that the intruders could have escaped official notice.

Poetry From the Russian Underground offers selections from the peak years of the post Stalin area. In a society known for its repression, the period following Stalin's death has been considered liberal. Rather than being shot, what's three years in a mental institution? Following the period of poetry, the major works were in the form of prose. By the early 70's poetry and fiction had slowed to a halt, and the periodicals were political. They offered much in the way of analysis, reviews and direct comment. Since then, the underground has been squahsed.

The poems themselves vary. Some describe the struggles of everyday reality, while others are political statements. Many are cynical and pessimistic, but a few have sprung from a painful hope. This anthology leaves a haunting image of what is and what should never be.

This book has been published in the United States by Harper and Row due to the efforts of three University of Massachusetts faculty. Joseph Langland and Tamas Aczel are in the English Department and Lazlo Tikos is a professor of Russian language and literature. Both Tamas Aczel and Lazlo Tikos fled Hungary during the tumultuous year of 1956. The collection, editing and translating of these works began in 1968 and is only recently complete. The significance of this book for Americans interested in Russian literature is obvious, while the poets' plea for the free movement of people and ideas remains tragically unfulfilled.

DROWNING

When midsea travelers cry,
"Man overboard!"
the ocean liner, bright as a storied tower, plows to a halt
and the submerged man is fished efficiently out.
But when the soul
falls overboard,
when man is drowning in blue fear and deep despair,
then not even his humming apartment house stops in the troubled wake, but floats through the anonymous air and drifts away.

development program. By the year 2000, the situation may be reversed if we develop nuclear power plants at an ever increasing rate. The best plan thus far suggested is probably that of using abandoned salt mines as permanent storage sites for radioactive wastes. The mines are geologically stable and have little or no ground water running into them so that a leak would probably be contained by the salt mine itself. There are, however, a few problems with this proposal such as being sure that nothing will go wrong in the next ten or more thousand years from now. This may seem overcautious to some unfamiliar with radioactive materials, but if you take a given amount of plutonium (half-life of 24,500 years), in a few hundred thousand years you will still have 1% of the radioactive plutonium left. The problem is then one which must be looked at from the broad perspective of what will happen in the future to future generations by our myopic actions of today.

The future of our nuclear energy program seems to be leading us down the plutonium path through the so-called breeder reactors. These facilities use plutonium which is "one of the most toxic substances known to man." If a small amount of plutonium is inhaled into the lungs, it can easily produce cancer.

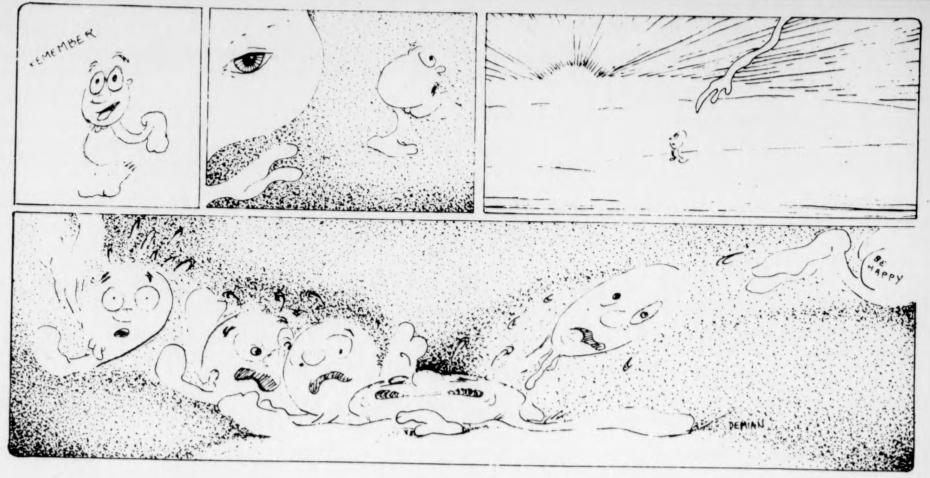
The problem of energy is an international problem as has become clear in recent days and so the nuclear reactor problem is particularly crucial. Dr. Hoffman comments that "if you go to a full nuclear economy, almost any industrial country with a reasonable industrial base will go nuclear and then each of these countries will have capabilities to develop nuclear weapons." The political implications of this could easily upset the flagpole walker-like stability of the balance of power in the world.

There are other problems whose implications are great, but which have received little attention during the developing years of nuclear energy. These include the possibility of an accident during the transportation of nuclear materials to and from the reprocessing plants. With little actual transport going on at this time because of the amount of nuclear plants in operation at this time, the problem is one similar to the cooling system problem mentioned earlier in this article. But with the proposed proliferation of nuclear power, this will become an event with a small probability of occuring, but one which is quite likely to happen occasionally.

We are currently facing an energy crisis because we have become too dependent on oil exclusively. If nothing else, this should teach us to diversify our sources of energy. Unfortunately, it appears that we are again following our previous mistakes as the big push is now toward nuclear energy with token gestures to develop alternative energy sources. It seems that there are too many ifs in the nuclear energy question to move too rapidly until some of these ifs are solved. Every effort should be made to find alternatives to nuclear energy before we become totally committed to it. If there are better ways around it we should take them. If not, we should proceed as carefully as possible for the sake of the future.

The only thing which one can say to the people of Montague and others faced with similar situations is that they should be as broad in their outlook as possible and try to look at as many implications as possible. Try to get as many sides of the question and carefully weigh your decision as it could effect not only you, but your children, and many many others.

For Charley



By Karen Lynch

Charley Roth, mad-hatted Latin lecher, a right royal chap and classy as all hell, had had it. All his life Charley had been a victim of lousy circumstance, and now he had had it. Today, he told himself, he would take his fate in his own hands.

Charley winked at the handsome young face in the mirror. With his mad-hat arranged in an appealing manner, his invention snug under his arm, he set out for the inner sanctum of the city.

He pressed the "down" button just as the elevator catapulted past his floor. He walked the six flights to the street.

It had stopped raining. The masses were returning slowly, filling the streets that were slick and shiny like newly washed blackboards.

Charley signaled to a cab inching its way doggedly to the curb. He opened one door as two supple young things slid into the backseat by the other.

They smiled at him with professional care. Stylish buck teeth and too much Chanel #5 reminded him of other girls and other missed opportunities. Charley, always the gentleman, decided to walk.

One particular such incident came painfully to mind. She was a redhead, a long-stemmed American beauty, propped up against a bar. He was 21 and eager.

Normally, Charley would barely have entertained the possibility of such a woman, considering girls like Judy to be his lot, who brought him to her mother's for dinner and who understood him too well for comfort.

Judy was beside him at that moment, grinding peanuts with her teeth.

The bartender spoke to the beauty. "O.k. kiddo, that's it."

Beauty pouted.

Judy nudged him. Her quick whisper irritated his ear, and she slid off the barstool.

Beauty pleaded with the beast: "C'mon honey, just one more."

Charley waited until Judy was out of sight and edged a bill across the bar. He said, "Give the lady another one on me."

The bartender turned to him slowly. "I think the lady has had enough." he said.

Beauty said, "Go ahead and let him buy me a drink, Tom. 'She giggled,' Besides he's kinda cute."

Tom turned back to her.

"I told you ya had enough." he said.

Encouraged by her attention Charley said, "I don't think it's any of your business if I buy—"

"Lisa." Beauty piped in.

" — Lisa a drink. After all, you just work here." Acute pain passed over Tom's face. "It so happens it is my business," he said. He tapped his chest with his finger. "I own this place."

Unimpressed, Charley persisted. "As I see it, this is a matter between Lisa and myself."

Tom looked at him as if he had been told this was a lunatic who required careful handling. He began patiently,

"Listen kid, I don't wanna argue with ya, but you're pushin' me, see, and I don't like to be pushed. Now like I said, I own this place. And if you don't quit it — shut up, Lisa — I'll throw you out on your ass!"

His breath expired and the sentence ended abruptly.

Charley had become quite flushed. He was standing with his arms held stiffly against the bar.

"You can't speak to her like that." His voice cracked.

Tom pushed his face up to Charley's. "I'll speak to her any way I damn well please, and if you don't quit hustling my wife, I'll break your scrawny little neck."

Charley looked at Lisa, her eyes popping over the top of her glass. She nodded.

Charley straightened up slowly and brushed off his suit coat. He was aware of the other people in the room looking at him.

Judy slipped her arm through his. He didn't know how long she had been there.

"C'mon Charley, let's go." she said. He let her lead him towards the exit. "It's the principle of it." he said to her afterwards.

And Judy said "Yeah Charley, I know. You're a man of principle."

Charley's bubble of thought burst. He joined a restless group at a crosswalk waiting for the light to change, like race horses waiting for the gun.

A woman stared, fascinated, at Charley's hat.

The light turned. They were off!

Charley stood in front of the skyscraper and craned his neck, counting the stories. His hat plopped behind him on the sidewalk.

Across the lobby the elevator man was grinning at him. The doors slid shut and he faded like a Cheshire cat.

Charley straightened his tie. He could wait. Yes, sometimes the anticipation was the best part.

Because She Asked

For Roberta Because She Asked

it's been so long since merlin thoughts and death
my death crossed my mind and here are songs playing on your records calling past back and you ask me about my merlin dreams and the old fear seems so distant but just as real he stands in my doorway robes flowing in my fever whispering my name and calling me into his vagueness vanishing when i start to rise warning me of his return many years grew by me and he did not return but i waited a hot summer day and a burning body wrapped in sweat soaked sheets called him back to my bedside full in his magical horror white beard hiding an age worn face calling soft and trusting you will die he says sweetly and leaving my pain i find a healthy warmth in his words i move to touch him next time will be the last and i will take you home with me to peace and he vanished

You, Are; Not; In. Control:

by David Miller

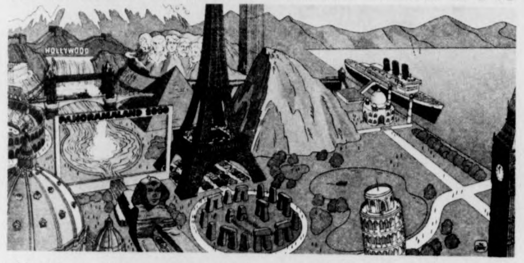
How Time Flys
David Ossman (and the Firesign Theatre)
Columbia KC 32411
Total Playing Time: 40:05

Postulates; 1. It's all entertainment. 2. If it's not entertaining, it's confusing. 3. Somebody must be responsible if it's confusing. 4. The black hole is not entertaining. 5. Nobody's responsible for the black hole. 6. The space program is not entertaining. 7. If it's entertaining, it must be patented or registered. 8. The memory loops are not patented or registered. 9. The memory loops are entertaining. 10. The memory loops are not entertaining.

Astronaut Mark T. (one of David Ossman's prime characters, previously appearing on I Think We're All Bozos On This Bus and Dear Friends) returns from a 20-year exploratory voyage to Planet X. He is electronically awakened on the morning of December 31st, 1999, and played a taped history of the last half century – "The Years In Your Ears", with Poor Richard's reviewers Jim & Nellie Houseafire. Upon his return, he is met by a Tweeny, an inflatable government worker, and the two of them attend a pre-programmed "Welcome Home", mainly featuring people now dead. Nobody else is there (P6). The memory and dream tapes which Mark has made of the trip are sought by two parties — the government (P6, 10, 2, 3), and Mr. Motion, a showman, inventor, hustler, and connoisseur (P8, 9). Mark and the tapes are captured by Mr. Motion and his two M.R.'s (Multiple Rebendables), "Shortstop" and Manny Grossero. They battle for the loops inside the "Gilda", Mr. Motion's zep, far above Panoramaland 2000, where all the wonders of civilization have been collected in a regreened landfill (P1). In the midst of this, everyone is informed by one Dr. Progresso Sweetheart that a black hole is collapsing the universe and will suck up the Earth and vicinity within a couple of days (P4,5). It comes sooner than that, and everyone gets the "conclusive answer . . . to the problem of infinity". Mark never finds out what's going on. (This paragraph doesn't really reveal the plot.)



David Ossman and the Firesign Theatre have created, in How Time Flys, their most awesome and apocalyptic work to date. It's funny, of course, but it's also a bit frightening, watching the end of the world HIT on the MILLENIUM and all those at Panoramaland 2000 (a division of Waltsdeadnow Enterprises) just wanting to know who's going to be responsible (P3). In the mood, the album resembles I Think We're All Bozos On This Bus most, in its narrative quality, its motif of the Ultimate Confrontation, and its strong mythological sequences ("The Years In Your Ears"/the Wall of Science tour) — the past, present, and future all at once.

Ossman turns in a moving performance as Mark, his bewilderment and outrage on Earth contrasting wonderfully with his joy and amazement on Planet X. Every member of the large cast (over 17 people) does a fine job — particularly worth mentioning are Philip Proctor as Tweeny and Freddy Burns (from TV OR NOT TV), Peter Bergman as Mr. Motion and Dr. Sweetheart, Phil Austin as the late President Gazatchorn, Wolfman Jack (!) as Jim Dundee at Panoramaland 2000, Tiny as Chiquita Bandana, and Harry Shearer and Penny Nichols as the Houseafires. Etc. Added goodies are the Consumer Instruction Section, the most complete mechanical euphemism since the Lampoon's Bucky Fuller Sex Manual; the music of Mel O'Tron and his Mel-O-Tone Ensemble; the consistency within the album itself — everything patented and registered (P7), a uniform Fun City. What more can I say? "You just can't beat on those mind guerillas"? If you're depressed about technocracy, Bozos and TV Or Not TV are the albums for you; if you're too optimistic about technology, How Time Flys is what you want. "You, are; not; in. control:"

Ringo/Ringo Starr (Apple SWAL 3413)

You see, Richard Perry (erstwhile producer of No Secrets and Barbara Streisand decided he was going to put together a landmark album. And what better person(ality) to center it around than that adorable, cute, lost dog-looking little Richie Starkey? All those big names decorating the cover, and the spotlight on . . . RINGO.

Let's make it a concept album, suggested Perry. If it's going to be a landmark, it's gotta be a concept album. Now how in the world are you going to come up with a unifying theme when you've got so many goddam diverse musicians and songs?

I've got it, blinked George. Vaudville. We'll make it vaudville. Tap dancing, a wide selection of campy songs, background vocals, horns, clarinets, strings. Vaudville, indeed!

And so it came to pass. Richard Perry's dream come true. A well produced, sharp sounding album with a variety of nice tunes, ranging from hardass boogie to thirties folk/-bluegrass to something which comes close to sounding like an Abbey Road era Beatles tune ("Photograph").

Now for some real kitsch, we'll have Klaus (of Revolver cover fame) put together some lithographs for a lyrics book. And for the cover . . . well, we'll make it like Sargeant Pepper (Ringo was Billy Shears, afterall). Ringo surrounded by friends!

But, won't such an elaborate cover take some time? Of course, retorted Perry, but the world can wait. The fans have waited so long for this masterpiece a few extra months won't kill them. Besides, there's no chance of someone else coming out with a better album than this baby.

Ringo reported that he had a good time putting this one together, and added that he hoped the fans would enjoy it as well.

"Let's call it "Ringo", said Ringo. "I like that name, you know."

Meanwhile, Bob Dylan was still upstairs, reportedly churning out a tune, tentatively titled "Blowin' in the Wind".

"Blowin' who?" asked Ringo.

Tubular Bells/ Michael Oldfield (Virgin Records VR 13-105)
Total Playing Time: 48:50

Personnel: Oldfield plays Grand Piano, glokenspiel, Farfisa organ and amplified organ chord, all varieties of guitar, flageolet, Lowrey organ, assorted percussion, Concert tympani, Piltdown man, and Moribund Chorus (digested ingredients); drums — Steve Broughton; Flutes — Jon Field; String basses — Lindsay Cooper; Nasal Chorus — nasal choir; Girlie Chorus — Sally Oldfield, Mundy Ellis: AND FEATURING THE LOVELY Viv Stanshall as Master of Ceremonies on Side One.

Well, well — and where did this candidate for notoriety come from? England? Seems there's a lot of good stuff coming out of England — the new Who album, King Crimson, and Monty Python. Someone hypothesized that the British seem to make better use of their creative freedom than most American rock musicians do (Black music is another case). But this album isn't rock — it's pure composition with a frill here or there.

Here it is again: the same creative experience (or an off-shoot thereof) which produced such different (and similar) groups as Soft Machine and the Bonzo Dog Band, produced Mr. Oldfield.

According to the promo sheet which came with the album, Oldfield, after going through a couple of years as a "child prodigy", decided to cut the commercial sweetness of the band he was in with his sister, and shortly thereafter (at the age of fifteen, to be exact), was asked by ex-Soft Machiner Kevin Ayers to join Ayers', Whole World.

Whole World broke up and Oldfield decided to abduct a studio and borrow an organ. And it was from the tapes that he made with the organ that this album was born — nine months later.

How do you describe it? Ever heard of Terry Riley? Terry is an 'avant garde', 'classical' composer who takes note runs and improvisations on those note runs and turns them into a full work. Oldfield's structure is different (less improvisation), but is still concerned with the different textures of instruments — however, Oldfield has written out certain parts (such as the acoustic guitar selections), which show inventiveness within a fairly traditional structure. Also remarkable to behold are Oldfield's excursions on "guitars that sound like bagpipes". But perhaps the single most outstanding trait of this pablum is that it manages to hold together as one coherent piece.

For instance, Vivian Stanshall's (from the Bonzo Dog Band) ringmaster voice is played down, you can still hear his voice, but his intonations become a part of the music, rather than fatuous "star" quality.

All things considered, this is one of the best I've heard out of England in a long time (including gems like Quadrophenia by the Who, and Larks' Tongues in Aspic by King Crimson). Mike Oldfield is an outstanding composer, reminiscent of the well-respected Mr. Riley in finished product form, but different in approach. Tape loop fade comparison.

Moondog Matinee - The Band (Capitol SW-11214)

The Band, surely one of this country's finest, most diligent acts, has given us, in Moondog Matinee, an album of unoriginal songs. It seems as Robbie Robertson, the group's leader and songwriter, has decided to pay tribute to the people who have influenced him and thus the album consists of songs by Sam Cooke, Chuck Berry, Leiber-Stoller and others, most of whom date back to the Fifties. Even the label on the record is from Capitol's past, suggesting, perhaps, we don't treat this as we normally would a new release by the Band.

It is something that shouldn't have been entirely unexpected. Last year's concert album, Rock of Ages, had two songs dating back well over a decade, "Don't Do It" and "(I Don't Want To) Hang Up My Rock 'n' Roll Shoes," both of which have been main staples to the group's repetoire for years.

MOONDOG MATINEE
THE BAND

Moondog Matinee comes to us at an inopportune time. Rock of Ages was little more than a greatest hits album and had only one Robertson original that was new to us, and is the only original Band song to reach us since Cahoots was released over two years ago. No matter how entertaining or professional, Moondog Matinee becomes a compromise similar to its predecessor. The best this record can do is receive mixed reviews from distraught critics and fans who expected more. The worst it can do is become immediately forgettable.

As it stands, Moondog Matinee comes across with considerable style. There are four songs that sound remarkably like Band originals and, as a result, are startingly effective.

The remaining six songs come across in shades of grey.

Moondog Matinee is not a bad record, but it is a major letdown. It nothing else, it shows us where the Band's roots are, and reaffirms that there was good music before the advent of "rock." It is a record, however, that will always be thought of with excuses and consolations.

Cine-Rock featuring FREE, Firewater, and Fat
Julius Sanderson Theatre, Springfield
Nov. 21-24

Cine-Rock. Mixed media reaches the masses in the combination of movie and live rock. It works this way:

Movie starts. Freeze scene. Live folksinger comes onstage to musically introduce the movie against a cinema-scope background. Exit singer, movie then runs uninterruptedly UNTIL Freeze final scene. Folksinger reappears to conclude movie, and the live rock band take the stage. The movie is run once again, this time without sound and projected onto the band rather than on a screen.

Perhaps the idea is functional. Perhaps it is a McLuhanesque breakthrough in communication. But it certainly didn't seem that way at Victor Baker's Springfield theatre last weekend.

The movie, Free, is a semi-documentary of the 1970 Randall Island Concert, a three day rock festival taken over by New York City radicals in order to filter the profits back to The People. Unfortunately, the movie is long on confrontation and short on music. Of the thirty minutes which appear of the music, only a few segments are really good — Hendrix on "Star Spangled Banner" and Steppenwolf doing "Monster." But even these performances are sacrificed to the documentary, with "Monster" interrupted by more scenes of radical-pig friction.

And let it be said that the mixed media aspects of this presentation were shallow at best. The live folksinger who opened and closed the movie with appropriate songs was a nice, different touch, but the idea of rerunning the film without the soundtrack over the heads of a flaccid band like Firewater only robs the film of whatever integrity it had.

With a band that can generate some interest and excitement by itself, such as the second band, Fat, the film is simply unnecessary.

Don't blame Victor. He just bought the package to make money. The true guilt in all this lies with Bert Tenzer, the Cine-Rock producer.

Mayall Cleans Up The Cage

In Concert:
John Mayall
Bruce Springsteen (25th)
Maria Muldaur (26th)
Curry Hicks Cage, UMass
November 25 & 26

First night:

Bruce Springsteen

It's really a pity that Bruce Springsteen and his band were subjugated to the role of back up group because their music and presence is intensly meaningful and personal. Springsteen sings of people, their emotional conflicts, and their involved street relationships. Lyrically, his stories show tremendous sensitivity and insight. Musically, his gift of employing dynamics to create moods is breathtaking. He'll be rocking out with saxist Clarence Clemons wailing, and suddenly he'll become erotic with the microphone as the rest of the band becomes silent. Each of his songs goes through several transformations before finally concluding, and during each song an individual feeling is apparent with Springsteen moving from acoustic or electric guitar to piano and the songs blend bits of classical, folk-rock, hard-rock and 'jazz'. Each of the members of the band play with amazing dexterity and versatility, and together the sound is massive. Because so much goes on (musically and lyrically) while Springsteen is playing, a lot gets lost in a place as large as the Cage, and Springsteen himself feels more comfortable in smaller clubs where he can really be listened to and heard.

Sunday night Springsteen drew a heartening reaction before the obviously Mayall-gathered crowd. In addition to performing a couple of songs from each of his two Columbia albums (including the masterful "Kitty's Song" and "Spirit in the Night") Springsteen showed off a bit with his utterly unique versions of Rufus Thomas' "Walking the Dog", and "634-5789" which he did as an encore. It wasn't terribly cold in the Cage that night but somehow Bruce Springsteen made it chilling.

-- David Sokol

John Mayall

Personnel: Keef Hartley: drums and Lancashire "cheek"; Freddie Robinson: guitar, advertisements, choreography; Mayall: Guitar, clavinette, electric piano, harmonica, voice and newspaper readings; Blue Mitchell : Fluegelhorn and pariah to; Red Holloway: alto and (mostly) tenor sax, flutes and backstage lechery and girth; Lester Gaskin: general bass virtuoso.

First off, we head towards description of Mayall's concept — that is, the natural fusion of "jazz" and blues, being in essence the same feeling. Blues Structures provide a natural springboard for adventurous notions, and the band allows musicians with enough experience and feeling to move the mind and body. In particular, Red Holloway, Blue Mitchell, Freddy Robinson and Lester Gaskin are masters of their instruments and their music.

Mayall and the rest of the band made and invented their way through about six long improvisations, all of which worked quite well. Hartley took a solo at one point, and, as I had discovered by Monday night when I'd spoken to him a little about drums and drummers, I understand what Hartley means when he says he made it by 'cheek' rather than technique. He's very heavy-handed and steady, but doesn't seem to detract, and keeps the band on the ground when Robinson or Mitchell or Holloway or Gaskin take off. One really nice aspect of this set was a bass-drum interchange between Hartley and Gaskin. Mayall was excellent on the revamped version of "Room to Move", on which he played harmonica and clavinette.

— UMan Gomes

Second Night:

Maria Muldaur

I first heard of Maria Muldaur this summer when her album Maria Muldaur, started to get aired on Boston radio. I was immediately impressed; she had a voice and style all her own and she was good. Her voice was versatile, ranging from a low, grainy power to a high, yet sweet and seductive tone, while maintaining a consistency throughout each song. All kinds of talent played on her album — Ry Cooder, Bonnie Raitt's Freebo, Dr. John and a lot of Cambridge people, that being her home base.

So, Monday night I rushed to go see my new found favorite playing with John Mayall. I was not disappointed, nor was the audience. She and her musicians, Jeff Gushon (?) (piano), Chris Brown (bass), Bobby Mason (drums), and David Nichtern (guitar) were an excellent mix. From the album she did Nichtern's "Midnight at the Oasis," Dr. John's "Three Dollar Bill," Dolly Parton's "In My Tennessee Mountain Home" (this was better on the album as it has a fantastic mandolin part), Dan Hicks' "Walking One and Only" ("there ain't no contest" Hicks has a better arrangement), "The Work Song" (the piano on this was great!), "Long Hard Climb," and "Don't You Feel My Leg" (this is what the audience had come to hear and they were given an exceptional performance). She also did a Mississippi John Hurt song, one by Billie Holiday (you knew she felt that one), a blah Skip James number. Maria finished by singing "I'm a Woman" and almost showed the audience that this was in fact true as she started losing her shirt. She was called back for an encore, "Nobody's Fault But Mine" and then the crowd proceeded to go wild, pounding the stage for another song (I love an audience with taste). It was hard to believe the audience had come to hear John Mayall, they were more than enthusiastic about her.

John Mayall

Four excellent musicians graced the Hicks Cage stage last Sunday and Monday night. Freddie Robinson's agile fingers made the guitar's strings sing; Blue Mitchell didn't have his trumpet, but he made the flugelhorn blow sweet; Victor Gaskin is a monster bass player — he can play both fast and slow with taste and imagination; Red Holloway's sax and flute playing showed a feeling and expertise perhaps stemming from Mitchell's allocation that Red was "older than dirt". And John Mayall and Keef Hartley both seemed like nice guys.

It was a damn good time spread through the Cage by the jazz-blues fusers, and once they got off the masturbatory noddlings of the early-going, they caught a-fire later in the show. Hartley, on drums, and Mayall, on keyboards, harmonica and vocals, certainly fit into the loosey-goosey atmosphere, but both were dwarfed by the giant presence of the other four. It was especially puzzling to watch Mayall, who insists on messing around with several instruments instead of concentrating on one. Some of his harp playing was embarrassing. Hartley is also competent, but he's actually quite insensitive for such an improvisational group. "Some drummers," confessed Keef to a Poor Richard's reporter, "get by on technique, others on imagination. I get along by being cheeky."

This was a strange show in that most of the excitement was produced not by great ensemble playing, or Mayall introducing each member about twelve times, but rather by the awesome solos which made the crowd of 3000 quite pleased.

GRANICUS (RCA)
Time: 43:08

This disc isn't any masterpiece by any means, but good enough for a respectable first effort. Granicus excels on songs around the four minute mark. However, the eleven-minute "Prayer" is almost unbearable. The other two longer cuts are all right, but should have been edited. Lyrically, the band at times are heavy-handed.

Traffic—On The Road (Island SMAS 9336)

Flush your arsenic down the toilet, and cancel your date with the local hit man. First, take your roommate to some classy joint like the blue room at Worcester. Then you lure him or her into your room with a sealed package from For The Record. Quickly tie him or her to their bed and put on Traffic's newest album, turn your stereo up, and let it play and play and play. If the dragging drum solos don't get 'em nothing will. It's really nothing more than a live version of songs recorded on tour in Germany. Unless you're a real Traffic freak and must have everything by them, there's no reason to waste your money, as all of these have been recorded before.

WITNESS — SPOOKY TOOTH (ISLAND SW 9337)

Spooky Tooth's main problem is that they've been written off as 'the group who did Spooky Two', and little positive recognition has been given them since. Last Puff was 'redundant' and You Broke My Heart was 'disappointing' considering boosted expectations following their temporary break up. Later Tooth has just fallen under the shadow of their earlier tour de force. What is this shit? Can't a record be taken on its own merits anymore? Witness (which will probably be recorded as another unsuccessful attempt to duplicate their Spooky Two magic) turns out to be a damn good album. Though the sound is typical of their earlier recordings, the playing is tighter and in general, the material is better. Too bad Spooky Tooth tend to get bogged down by silly lyrics like 'I can't sleep at night, I can't eat a bite', but otherwise Witness gets it all together and fulfills much of their earlier promise.

Luther Grosvenor's guitar is obviously missing (he split when the group broke up) but is at least partially compensated for by Mike Harrison's parching vocals and some fine Gary Wright compositions such as the promising "Wings on My Heart," "Ocean of Power," and "Pyramids." Strong from start to finish, Witness could likely by Spooky Tooth's most consistant record ever. Dare I say that it picks up where Spooky Two left off.

It's Like You Never Left — Dave Mason (Columbia KC 31721)

It would be easy to say that this is far from being Mason's best work: 'This is far from being Mason's best work — I might even go so far as to say he's flying his flag at half-assed (but I guess I'd better not, huh?).

It was obviously thrown together in a hurry, perhaps to meet contract demands — almost every song is a lightly reworked version of something he's done before, and almost never as good as the original. There's no real reason to like an album as anemic as this — but I do.

Even when he's being slack like this his cheerful style is irresistable, and he still plays one of the tastiest guitars in the business. Mason seems to have been running in place since his last album, but it doesn't seem to be that bad a place. C+

In Concert:
The Juilliard String Quartet
Bowker Auditorium
November 15

In talking to Samuel Rhodes, viola player with the Juilliard String Quartet, after their concert in Bowker Auditorium, I asked what he felt to be the most important aspect a string quartet must learn in 20 years of playing. "That's very hard to say; I don't think it to be any one thing in particular. I suppose if I had to choose it would be intonation, the ability to listen to each other, and learning to play ensemble." Considering the position the Quartet has attained in chamber music, not only in this country, but the world over, I find this a fair assumption of the Quartet's accomplishments. The concert in Bowker was as well received as it was complimentary, with the Mozart Quartet in G Major, K.387, the Bartok Quartet No. 3, and the Brahms Quartet in C Minor, Op. 51, No. 1.

Some of Mozart's purest music can be found in the six quartets dedicated to Haydn, of which the G Major is the first. I asked Mr. Rhodes what attitudes the Quartet took in approaching a composer's score such as the Mozart. "Oh, we don't take specific attitudes," he said, "we would want to play the Mozart less rich than the Brahms, and less driving than the Bartok, but we simply play the notes."

The playing of the Trio was vigorous, and the fugal treatment in the Molto allegro was crisp, as it should be, but the clearness and singing qualities, which I feel Mozart's style demands, were missing.

The playing of the Brahms however, was quite enjoyable. The playing here of the Juilliard was lyrical, with rich tones, and exact rhythm. The second movement Romanze, was quite poetic, and the open string playing of Earl Carlyss in the Allegretto, produced just the precision the piece was meant to convey.

For many the Brahms' was the highlight of the evening. For me, however, it was the Bartok. In my estimation, the Juilliard is the finest string quartet in 20th music. The third quartet of Bartok is considered to be his most classical one, not in a historic sense, but in its domination of form over content. It is also considered to be his most difficult to play, as well as his shortest, as it is written in only one movement. The piece has only two or three brief motiffs, which continually change with new harmonic and rhythmic patterns. Two tools hold the piece together: the easily recognizable rhythmic figures, and the use of instrumental colors such as pizzicatos, glissandos, and sol ponticello (playing over the bridge). The execution of these colorations by the Juilliard are well practiced, and add great excitement. The love they have for this music is quite in evidence, as they drive it to a whirlwind finish. If you have not seen the Juilliard String Quartet yet, do yourself a favor next year, you may like it.

The Name of the Game

by Denny Matteau

"While there is no specific law on the issue, married women have been denied the right to use any but their husband's name legally," according to Who Rules Massachusetts Women?, a 1972 publication of the Women's Research Center of Boston.

The report goes on: "The only way she can obtain the right to her own name is for the married woman to petition for a name change from the courts, a time-consuming and often unsuccessful process.

"In 1971, a bill to allow certain married women to use their 'maiden name' after filing notice of intent (to wed) was practically laughed out of the (Massachusetts Legislature's) all-male Judicial Council, as utterly trivial and irrelevant. In 1972, a similar bill was sent with favorable report to the Judicial Council of the courts for investigation and report to the governor.

"The Council's approval would pave the way for passage since favorable interpretation of the law in the courts would be assured. Progress, of a sort."

It's 1973, and the bill is still "in committee." On October 15th the bill went to the Ways and Means Committee, where it remains, after having come out of the Judicial Council with a negative report.

The report says, in part, "In the class action brought by Ms. Wendy Forbush (and others similarly situated) against Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, it was held that an Alabama law requiring a woman to assume her husband's surname upon marriage had a rational basis and was enacted to control an area where the state had a legitimate interest.

"We are mindful that a person may call himself or herself by any name at all, unless there is an illegal aspect to the matter.

"... If a married woman continued to carry on her legal affairs under her maiden name, a great amount of confusion and uncertainty would result. There is a rational basis to the present system. Some married women might have problems conducting business under their maiden names if they sought to pledge the credit of their husbands.

"... We do not recommend this bill."

Rep. James Collins and Sen. John Olver, both Amherst Democrats agreed the protracted committee studies of the bill constitute an attempt to kill it, a kind of pocket veto.

Rep. Collins said, in an interview Nov. 14th, "The fact that it (Senate Bill 1957) has been held so long indicates an ill-founded attempt to quash it. A push is on to get it to a third reading, which would be a good indication that it might pass the Senate. But the consensus among supporters is that the chances are not good for this bill to pass the House."

It hasn't got to the third reading yet, and there are only about ten days left to the legislative session. Collins said he felt one problem with the bill is that there has not been any extensive lobbying by the general citizenry, and so some legislators feel relatively safe in opposing the bill.

One of these is Sen. David Locke, (R) Wellesley, who said, "The women who support this bill won't ever have to worry about losing their maiden names, anyway."

Rep. Collins said "the bill, if defeated, will simply be refiled on December 5 and hopefully we can see it passed next year."

One woman who experienced the strength of tradition in opposition to law is Ms. Gail Dunfey, a former city councillor in Lowell. She was already in office when she married Robert Sinicki. She decided to retain her maiden name, and lost the 1973 election. In a Poor Richard's interview last Wednesday, she explained why she felt the "maiden name" was an important factor in her defeat.

She said that two weeks after her wedding, upon returning from her honeymoon, she discovered that city clerk William Busby had taken it upon himself to change her name to that of her husband by filling out a change of name form, and changing her name on the city payroll.

"The city clerk had absolutely no authority to do this," she said, "It constitutes a basic violation of the law."

"He (Busby) knew that I had every intention of retaining my maiden name, because he was in the office when I made that clear," she said. When she was filing her intention to marry, she was offered the form used for changing the name, and Busby was standing nearby when she refused it, stating her intention to be known as Gail Dunfey, she explained. Also, there were several pieces in the Lowell Sun about her decision to continue using Dunfey.

"There was a meeting of the City Council scheduled for 1 later that week (June 12), and I decided to bring the matter up there," she said. When the roll was called, she informed the other councillors that her name is not Sinicki, and she would not answer to it. The use of "Sinicki" was continued, and she was marked absent, even though she sat through the entire meeting.

The City Solicitor was asked for an opinion on the matter, and he stated that it was her right to be known as Gail Dunfey. At the next meeting, she was called by that name, and the record of the previous meeting was corrected to show that she had been present.

On June 26, she obtained a court restraining order against Busby's attempts to record her as Mrs. Sinicki. Busby refused to comply, and the case is now pending.

In relating the issue to subsequent elections, Dunfey said, "This would only have been a private controversy, between me and the city clerk, but the lowell Sun really played it up. They ran editorials which made it more than a personal dispute.

"Because of the way the issue was dealt with, women in Lowell had to take one side or the other. And unfortunately, my side was unpopular."

Dunfey said "Many people don't realize that there is no law which says that a woman must or even should change her name to her husband's upon marrying."

In her door-to-door campaigning, she found that many women seemed to feel that I did not show enough pride in the title 'Mrs.' "They felt threatened, she said, because she did not appear to value 'marriage' as a life's goal, or fulfillment."

"In fact," she said, "They are right, marriage is not the reason I'm alive. But how can they doubt that I love him, just two weeks after my wedding?"

If Senate Bill 1957 were made law, all people, upon filing their intentions to marry, would also have the opportunity to choose from five options: Each could keep the surname brought into the marriage, or both could adopt either the woman's or the man's surname, or an entirely new name, or a hyphenated form of both given names.

Gail Dunfey's decision affects no one but herself, and the enactment of this bill would in no way affect those people who wish to continue the custom of taking the husband's name as the family name. In view of this, the hassles a woman like Gail Dunfey must undergo are really incredible.

Mystic and Sage: Alan W. Watts 1915-1973

by Jim LaMacchia

An organic natural order has its proper correspondence in a mode of consciousness which is a total feeling or experiencing. Where feeling is broken up into the feeler and the feeling, the knower and the known, what lies between the two is not relationship but mere juxtaposition. Identified with one of its terms alone, consciousness feels "out on a limb" facing an alien world which it controls only to find it more and more ungratifying.

—Alan Watts, Nature, Man And Woman

On Saturday, November 16, 1973 the philosopher and mystic Alan W. Watts died in his sleep during the early morning hours. The news of his death was received with as little fanfare by traditional academia as were his writings. Most philosophy departments never consider the work of Alan Watts in their curriculum, and many academic philosophers have either not heard of the man or accused him of "sloppy philosophy." Mr. Watts always wrote with witt and compassion, and his works appeal mostly to those disenchanted with the mainstream of analytical Western thought.

Many of Watt's works address themselves to an exploration of Eastern thought, particularly Taoism and Zen Buddhism. But those works which seek to integrate Eastern concepts into the Western framework are his most interesting. Nature, Man And Woman; Psychotherapy East And West; and The Book (On The Taboo Against Knowing Who You Really Are) all deal in some way with the alienated Western consciousness and the myth of separation. Watts sees many currents in Western thought as devisive to a point at which man no longer has a sense of the cosmic whole and his relationship to it. Instead of viewing the universe as one pattern of energy, Watts characterizes Western man's experience of life as fragmented and alienated. In many of his books, the phrase "skin-encapsulated ego" recurs as a description of the modern Wester experience of being. Watts sees this lack of wholeness and isolation manifested in man's relationship to the environment and other human beings. A consciousness which views everything outside of itself as exclusively "other" and "object" no longer fully participates in life and being. Watts' philosophy continuously argues against dualistic thinking and the rigid boundaries often times imposed upon human experience by thought systems. This impulse led Watts to advocate Eastern "ways of liberation" as paths to a realization of cosmic consciousness. As Watts says in Nature, Man And Woman, "The mystery of life is not a problem to be solved, but a reality to be experienced."

For Alan Watts, eternity is now and this our moment of consciousness in a universe which does not know the linear time and space constructs of the human mind. Watts saw inherent within life a continuous experience of the sacred. He says in Nature, Man And Woman, Mystical vision, as has always been recognized, does not remain at the peak of ecstasy. As in love, its ecstasy leads into clarify and peace ... For the mind and senses do not have to open themselves; they find themselves naturally opened, and it appears that the divine world is no other than the everyday world. Just as they come and just as they are, the simplest sights and sounds are sufficient, and do not have to be brushed aside in the mind's eagerness to find something more significant. One is thereby initiated for the world of clock time to the world of real time, in which events come and go of themselves in unforced succession — timed by themselves and not by the mind.

For Watts, God is process, or, as he said in an article written as a critique of the Jesus Movement, "that love which moves the sun and the stars."

In Myth And Ritual In Christianity and Behold The Spirit, Watts argues for Christianity as a mystical religion. He sees this religious tradition as a way or path for experiencing mystical participation with All. But he fully recognizes the limitations and misapprehensions of orthodox Christian religions. Watts was himself an ordained Episcopal priest from 1944 to 1950. His interpretation of Christianity is grounded in the nature of myth and metaphoric language. He abhors any attempt to literalize and place within the realm of history a great and rich religious mythos. For Watts, the virtue of Christianity is its mythic quality, and he sees the error of the orthodoxies as their determination to equate the outer shell of language with the inner core of truth that transcends any form of expression.

Alan Watts also accepted the use of psychedelic drugs as a means of experiencing ego-loss and facilitating mystical experience. The Joyous Cosmology is a deeply personal account by Watts of his experience with hallucenogenic material. But Watts also criticized the escapist misuse of drugs by Westerners as a means of obliterating an alienated consciousness. Watts was a determined iconoclast whose goal was the liberation of human consciousness and the opportunity for man to experience himself as both a spiritual and material possibility. He abhored the substitution of the rigidities of one tradition for another. Despite the particular path an individual might choose to follow, Watts felt, "the main assistance we can derive from Eastern man's experience is in methods for changing human consciousness so that the individual can actually feel his identity as an organism-environment (or man-universe), instead of a lonely ego sealed in a bag of skin."

Alan Watts spoke twice during the past four years in the Amherst area. I had the good fortune to hear him speak on both occasions. He displayed the warmth, wit, and intelligence for which his lectures were so famous. He will be deeply missed by those who were touched by his thought and prolific writing. His spirit might best be exemplified in his dedication for Nature, Man and Woman.

To the beloved company of the stars, the moon, and the sun;

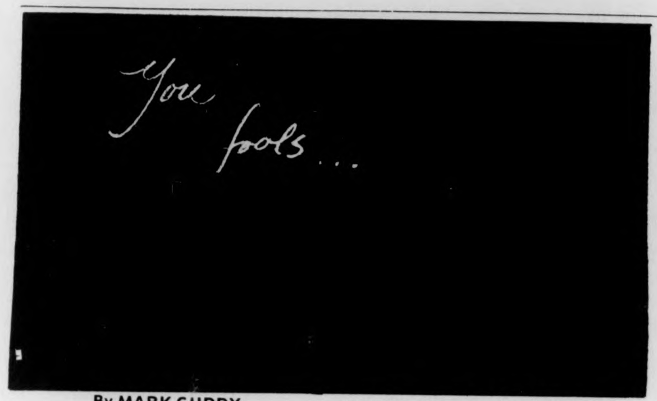
To the beloved company of the UMass Studio Theatre: Getting It On With The Audience



By MARK CUDDY

Does the term Studio Theatre turn you off? Does it make you think of high school and amateur community productions? Of experimental theatre that only confuses you? Of last minute set and lighting changes in full view of the expectant audience? I guess most everyone gets the same queasy feeling in their stomachs because they have seen this type of thing before. Well it won't happen here I'm glad to report. The University of Massachussetts Theatre Department is doing some very good things in terms of Studio Theatre work this semester.

Peter Handke's "Offending The Audience" was presented November 15, 16, 17 in the Studio Theatre at South College. Billed usually as "OFFENDING The Audience", the original german can also be translated as Violating, Joking with, Getting it on with, Alienating or just plain Saying Mean Things to, the Audience. Handke is not your average playwrite. His treatment of theatre consists of finding out about yourself without the usual restrictions. Getting rid of cliches and doing away with automatic responses and particularly in this play reversing the roles of audience and performers are themes he imploys. Director Gary Stewart puts it well when he states "In 'Offending The Audience" the audience becomes the center of attention. The sequence of events of an arranged sequence of audience analysis by the performers. The structures of ironies is reversed. Now, the performers know more about the events of the action than the spectators."

So when I walked into the Studio Theatre to see the opening of "Offending The Audience" I was ushered to a seat of my usher's choice in a strange tranquility. The look on the ushers' (soon to be performers') face wasn't a scorn and it wasn't quite a snicker. It was sort of an expression of self-assurance. An all-knowing glance that shook me. I wondered why, but soon shrugged it off and sunk into my isolated, vicarious world ready to watch a play. There was a play. The actors played with the audience. At first when the actors came on stage and started throwing out insults directed at us I felt prepared enough for this initial shock treatment, so I thought. "...but names will never hurt me." Go ahead actors, I'm prepared. Slowly. Very slowly, the implying gestures, expressions of arrogance and the formidable Handke language melted away my layers of defense. They made us be aware of our sweat, our smell, our breathing, our thinking, our every move. I couldn't be just myself in my shell as they lumped us all together in the same ball of paranoia. We squimed, squealed, laughed, looked and listened to the assault.

Then the transformation of our potential energy into its static state surprisingly took another turn. Relief at last. We had gotten the message to be aware of ourselves and my senses were in gear when the actors turned to themselves. The actors still talked about us but we were able to be outside looking in for a moment. It was a needed break but it actually just set us up for the finale: a collage of guerdons followed by mulcts. Pretty impressive for a bunch of second rate CHUCKLEHEADS...There...I said it.

For one whole nauseating evening I had to sit still and take all of their shit without them ever getting it back. Just sitting there like a lead balloon (sorry Mr. Handke but I like cliches) and actually letting them put me on the spot when I had come expressly to do the same thing to them. The nerve... I'm sorry I had to let go, but now that we've put everything in their proper perspective, I think we can go on.

And on and on and on and on and the evening of outrageous theatre was a delight that you shouldn't have missed. If per chance you did happen to miss it, you can redeem yourself by taking in the current offerring at the Studio Theatre which consists of two lively one-act plays. "Red Peppers" and "Home Life of a Buffalo" play tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m. Both productions are grad student directed and deal with the good old days of vaudeville. Tickets go on sale an hour before performance time.

We end with a quote from Peter Handke. "Committed theatre today doesn't happen in theatres (those falsifying art areas which void all words and movements), but in lecture halls for instance, when the microphone is snatched away from a professor, when professors blink through burst doors, when leaflets flutter from galleries on to people assembled below..."

The Harder They Come

by Reid Fishman

In writing a review of the film, "The Harder They Come", I'm finding it somewhat difficult. I feel that the movie itseif is well-presented, in that it relates the story of a young man in a search for importance in a horribly depressing world. It's a one-man show and Jimmy Cliff is outstanding in the role of a young singer searching for success and recognition, by any means.

However, the movie is a Jamaican flick, and this is where my greatest difficulty comes into focus. Jimmy Cliff is Black, as is everyone else in the film, and unfortunately for this review, I am White. Therefore, one must realize that this is a White man's review of a Black man's picture, so if you are White, this article will appear pertinent, but if you are Black, you should definitely see the film. Another difficulty I encountered was understanding the dialogue, or rather dialect, involved in a Jamaican film.

Overlooking these two difficulties, one finds that the film is produced and directed by Perry Henzell and is billed as "Roger Corman presents, a New World Release." Anyhow, Henzell's direction is excellent and real, and he uses it well to place a fictional story in a realistically horrible and depressing situation.

For the most part, I found myself comparing the film to "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid", and "Bonnie and Clyde". Actually, it's an age old story about a man's lack of success in gaining success, and as is usually the case in the movies, when all else fails, the hero turns to violence. What ensues is the hunting down and eventual demise of our hero.

A one man show in search of importance in a horribly depressing world.

The symbolism of the film is apparent and continuous, and at one point, one finds himself watching an American western in which the hero singlehandedly shoots down his well-armed opposition. The symbolism here doesn't become evident until the movie progresses further, and we see Jimmy Cliff, as Ivanhoe Martin, destroying opposition left and right. Of course, while his infamous reputation spreads, his record (which he sold to a big record producer for twenty bucks) skyrockets to the top of the charts.

The record referred to is the well-known theme song, "The Harder They Fall", and it, as well as the rest of the soundtrack is superb and, of course, performed (and written, for the most part) by Jimmy Cliff. The most effective song in the soundtrack, "You Can Get It If You Really Want", is interjected in the most appropriate places, and only adds to the impression of temporary success that is evoked by the film.

However, the basic meaning behind the film lies in the poverty and depression that leads Ivan Martin too long for instant success and the repeated failure that causes him to resort to crime. It is not my part to evaluate the degree of depression that causes a man to commit murder, but the truth is that it happens. Although the story involved is fictional, it's not very far from the truth and the roots can be found in any oppressed society.

This is the message that must be conveyed in any review of "The Harder They Come". The idea that those who exist in poverty can raise themselves up through hard work and dedication has become outdated. Horatio Alger is dead and so is Ivan Martin, but their messages are drastically different, and unfortunately for the American myth, Perry Henzell has proved his point.

Therefore, I recommend "The Harder They Come" for those who are concerned with the truth. Those who are more concerned with entertainment should stick with "Mary Poppins".

THE AFRICAN QUEEN (1951)

Perhaps the most inspired casting in Hollywood history came with the teaming of Katherine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart in this splendid adaptation of C. S. Forster's novel. The time is the First World War, the place is deep in the German-held Congo; he's a hard-bitten riverboat captain, she's a prudish missionary, together they take a dangerous journey down the river. John Huston shot the film on location and the quiet danger of the jungle heightens the adventure. Bogart's most likeable role, it won him an Oscar and it bristles with salty humor. Hepburn's spinster-turned-sabotage expert makes for a delightful transformation. Huston's direction has a playfulness and ease which shows itself in the remarkable alchemy of the principals. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 12-6, check for times.

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES (1938)

James Cagney plays a gangster who works with a pastor (Pat O'Brien) in rehabilitating some street boys in his district. A strong representation of the tough social melodramas Warner Brothers capitalized on during the Thirties. Directed by Michael Curtiz. With The Dead End Kids. Lecture Room One, Amherst College, Saturday, 12-1, 7:30 and 10.

BANG THE DRUM SLOWLY

A sentimental fictional account of the friendship between an ace pitcher and the catcher, who is dying of Hodgkin's disease, whom he once hated. With Michael Moriarty and Robert DeNiro, directed by John Hancock. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

CHARLEY VARRICK

A crime melodrama, with Walter Mathau. Directed by Don Seigal. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

CLAIRE'S KNEE (1971)

Erich Rohmer's fifth moral tale is a moral comedy of charm and beauty. A young Parisean visits a Swiss lake resort and finds he develops a fetish for a beautiful young woman's knee. Rohmer's characters don't simply make conversations, they speak tracts. Long-windedness aside, a genial comedy with a serene, beguiling texture and a lovely young actress named Beatrice Romand as Claire's sister. The Globe, Northampton

CLEOPATRA (1934)

Claudette Colbert discreetly smiling in a milk bath, hundreds of semi-nude women, and Paramount's opulent recreation of Ptolemy's Alexandria. The tragic love story of Antony and Cleopatra is told with a meat cutter's precision by Cecil B. DeMille. Probably the most enjoyable of all his Thirties films. Butterfield, Tuesday, 12-4, check ad for times.

COPS AND ROBBERS

Two New York cops become robbers, the business they rob from turns out to be as wily as they. A comedy with a neat sense of New York and a relaxed, inviting style. Two funny men, Cliff Gorman and Joe Bologna, play the leads. Written by Donald E. Westlake, directed by Aram Avakian. Showcase Cinemas. West Springfield.

CRIES AND WHISPERS

Ingmar Bergman's devastating portrait of four women, three sisters and their maid, who gather together for the death watch of one sister who is dying of cancer. The film takes place in the blood-red interiors of a Swedish manor in the early years of this century as each woman unravels their own deep sense of regret, fear, or contentment. Much of the beauty and power of this often harrowing dream play comes with the integrity of Bergman as an artist. The film is flawlessly played by its principals, who include Harriet Anderssonn, Liv Ullmann, and Ingrid Thulin. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

DEAR JOHN (1966)

One of the more controversial of the Danish sex dramas of the past decade, directed by Lars Lindgren. Herter 227, Tuesday, 12-4, 7 and 9.

THE DON IS DEAD

With Anthony Wuinn, directed by Richard Fleischer. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

DOWNHILL RACER (1969)

A neat, underrated film about the competition and excitement of professional skiing. The film benefits from its semi-documentary style, which is especially fine in the sequences which portray the sport itself. Director Michael Ritchie plays these sequences for their grueling worth. Robert Redford plays the story's main protagonist, Gene Hackman is his manager. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 12-1, 7:30.

EXECUTIVE ACTION

A fictional account of the Kennedy assassination, released right in time for the holidays. Directed by David Miller, from a screenplay by Dalton Trumbo. With Burt Lancaster and Robert Ryan. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

A short stay in one of Zappa's 200 Motels.....

GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDS (1953)

Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell, resplendent in tight-fitting sequin costumes, begin this lovely Howard Hawkes musical on a staircase in a New York nightclub singing "We're Just Two Little Girls From Little Rock." Later Marilyn Monroe has her most legendary moment in her career as she sings "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend" on the floor of a Paris nightspot. The film is a subdued but sumptious adaptation of the successful musical-comedy about the golddigging adventures of two entertainers in the Twenties. Monroe plays Lorelei Lee and it is one of her most endearing performances, Russell makes an excellent foil; they're at their best singing a down-and-out blues, "When Love Goes Wrong." Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 12-2, 7:30 and 9:15.

GUMSHOE (1972)

Albert Finney as a Liverpool, two-bit entertainer and bingo caller with a hang-up for Bogart in this melodrama with heavy allusions to the neon underworld found in Hollywood crime films of the late Forties and early Fifties. This nostalgic displacement gives the picture another dimension, one which works both for and against it since the memories it raises far surpass their new surroundings. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 12-5, check for times.

JOHNNY GUITAR (1954)

Nicholas Ray and Pnil Yordan adapted a cheap novel to the screen with a presumptuousness that passes for integrity. The story concerns a reformed gunfighter who defends a saloon owner against a female banker. The film reeks with all kinds of Freudian overtones: director Ray has said of recently it's "baroque, very baroque." Joan Crawford is the star but the film is stolen by Mercedes McCambridge who recorded that when a technician applauded her, Crawford walked off the set angry. "She was the star of the picture," McCambridge said. "I guess if I were Joan Crawford I'd be mad if some Mamie Glutz horned in on my territory that way." With Sterling Hayden and Ernest Borgnine. Lecture Room One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Wednesday, 12-5, 4 and 8.

LITTLE CAESAR (1930)

The great gangster film, with Edward G. Robinson.

LOST HORIZON

The musical version of "Shangra-La," with Liv Ullmann, Peter Finch, Michael York, Sally Kellerman, and James Shigeta. The score is b, Burt Bacharach and Hal David. Mountain Farms Mall, Hadley.

MALCOLM X (1972)

A first rate documentary account of the great black leader's life. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 12-2, 7 and 9.

...May bring you Together, an X rated flick starring the Ivory Snow girl.

THE HARDER THEY COME

With Jimmy Cliff. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

HOLD THE HOUR MAN (1933)

A comedy with Jean Harlow and Clark Gable. Butterfield, Tuesday, 12-4, check for times.

HAROLD AND MAUDE (1971)

Bud Cort as a suicidal young man, Ruth Gordon as an eighty year old lightning bolt; together they have a strange and touching love affair. This comedy has a greeting card sentimentality which pervades and ultimately cheapens its essential strengths, although there are some high moments of grisly humor. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 12-6, check for times.

JEREMY

What some have called this year's "Love Story" is that of two sixteen year olds who live in New York City. Mountain Farms Four, Hadley.

MASQUE OF THE RED DEATH (1962)

Roger Corman's adaptation of the Poe story makes the whole story utterly sensational in a campy way. The story is of an insane prince who locks himself away from the black plague in what turns out to be a fatal reverie. The film is full of references to other Poe stories, "Hopfrog" for instance, and other films, sepcifically "The Seventh Seal." It keeps its tongue in a rather coarse cheek throughout, with Vincent Price as mad Prince Prospero. Mahar, Friday, 11-30, 7 and 9.

MIDNIGHT COWBOY (1969)

John Shlesinger's film of James Leo Herhily's novel concerns a young Texan's odyssey to New York City with hopes of being a hustler for wealthy women. As Joe Buck, Jon Voight makes an impressive debut to commercial films; he embodies the naivete, hope, and eventual panic of a young man displaced from home and troubled past. Dustin Hoffman plays his only friend in New York, a cripple named Ratso Rizzo, with a great deal of dexterity and pathos. Their acting gives the film a validity its script and direction often lack. Shlesinger, who works extremely well with actors, often uses motifs to connote a thematic whole. Here his use of contrasting images of New York places the story in a glossy never-never land of magazine spreads of urban life. The film won all sorts of Oscars, including Best Picture. Mountain Farms Four, Hadley.

O LUCKY MAN!

Not as immediately coherent or involving as his earlier "If ...," Lindsay Anderson's Candide-like fantasy very persuasively explores the ideas of an individual's involvement and responsibilities to his neighbor in our immediate future. David Sherwin's script has a great deal of ingenuity and appreciation of the absurd and bizarre; Anderson's direction spurts with more than enough creative energy to give this lengthy saga drive. Malcolm McDowell, who is unusually adept at suggesting the reality of paranoia, plays the likeable and attractive coffee salesman who finds himself in a variety of harrowing adventures all over the British Isles. Rachel Roberts and Ralph Richardson are featured in a variety of roles; Alan Price wrote the fine songs. A film of infinite value and fun. Academy of Music, Northampton.

SIDDHARTHA

From the Herman Hesse novel. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

SYLVIA SCARLETT (1935)

"Father, I'm going to cut my hair off! I'm going to be a boy!" announces Katherine Hepburn in this mildly eccentric tale of a girl who disguises herself to help out her father. It is one of Katherine Hepburn's most beguiling performances and the picture itself has a lightweight, bizarre charm. A great cast, featuring Cary Grant and Brian Aherne. The picture was an unqualified disaster, its preview was legendary. After a nightmarish showing with people rushing up the aisles to leave, Katherine Hepburn turned to a woman and asked "Was it that bad?" The woman just raised her eyes up to heaven. Leaving the theater, Hepburn attempted to climb into director George Cukor's car and banged her head. "Thank God I've knocked myself out." she said. Hampden Dining Commons, Tuesday, 12-4, 8.

TOGETHER

Starring Marilyn Chambers the Ivory Snow Girl who starred in the porno film "Behind the Green Door" ... She's ninety-nine and forty-four hundreds per cent pure. Rated X. S.U.B. Tuesday, 12-4, 7:00, 8:30, 10:00.

200 MOTELS (1972)

Frank Zappa's fantasy looks like a cheesy video tape television special for hippies who didn't know when to stop. It is silly to belittle Zappa's talent, but must he make use of it in such trash? With Theodore Bikel. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 12-1, 7, 9, and 11.

WALKING TALL

A reactionary drama in some quarters, the best picture of the year in others. Ho-hum, "Billy Jack" returns. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE WAY WE WERE

Barbra Streisand, determined and infallible; Robert Redford, the Seventies version of destiny's child, play at love and marriage in this odd blend of high blown romance and low keyed politics. The film travels three decades as it chronicles the courtship, marriage, and the crises which face the two from the Thirties to the Fifties. The film is fairly uneven, the story is pallid and really goes nowhere; but there any number of remarkable sequences and the stars look very good and act very well together. Directed by Sidney Pollack. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

WHITE LIGHTNING

Burt Reynolds as a moonshine runner in the deep South..What qualified as a good B picture in the Fifties; loose, filled with action, some of it simply padding, and some good acting. Mountain Farms Four, Hadley.

WITHOUT APPARENT MOTIVE (1972)

A fine imitation of "The Big Sleep" removed to resplendent Cote D'Azur and featuring an excellent European cast. The seediness of the original is lost in the sun drenched beauty and the frenzied drive gives way to a more civilized story telling manner. It's cleaned up and sophisticated now. Jean Louis Trintignant plays a detective who is called in to investigate a series of murders "without apparent motive." With Stephane Audran and Dominique Sanda. Directed by Phillipe Labro. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 12-5, check for times.

Chancellor Randolph Bromery

SWAP Holds Conference

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

UMass Student Workshop Activity Program (SWAP), held its 15th annual conference this past weekend in Northfield. Participants included students and faculty members, as well as such guest speakers as President Robert Wood, Chancellor Randolph Bromery, and Dr. Lawrence Johnson, President of Roxbury Community College and last year's CCEBS director at UMass.

Chancellor Bromery said, "This is not a time to antagonize anyone." He then proceeded to talk about the parking problems of the "Harvard of Western Massachusetts", and the energy crisis. He encouraged everyone to collaborate to save energy. As for his own efforts, Bromery said, "I'm trying to stay at 50 miles on the road."

In a more serious vein, Dr. Johnson spoke about the importance of education in order to help solve the world's problems. He said, "You must have courage to fail. The challenge is to accept that we are not happy in the world. Stop being money-motivated; dedicate yourself to a cause; marry it; live with it; and develop it."

On Saturday and Sunday, the SWAP members held more than 50 workshops dealing with the analysis of problems and the creation of new ideas to improve education and services to UMass students.

Most of the workshops dealt with counseling, alternative programs, security on campus, food services, uniform student pay scales, area government, handicapped students, senate roles in unicameral government, financial aid, and relationships between students and faculty.

Ms. Judy Gill, one of President Wood's office workers, said that the discussion of the role of the faculty toward the students, teacher assistants, and alumni was a good innovation.

She said, "SWAP made students and faculty deal on one level with each other. There was a lot of honest talk."

Most SWAP members said that the conference in itself was a good weekend investment of time and energy, which provided them with many enriching educational experiences and friendships.

Larry Sinewitz of S.W. Area Government, said, "I enjoyed the conference."

Ms. Betty Carlson from Central Area said, "SWAP was a great experience."

SWAP organizers expressed great faith in the effectiveness of the annual conference, although they realize they are working within the confines of a limited time period.

Michael Flato, co-chairperson of SWAP said, "The conference can't measure and evaluate until the people go back to campus. The workshops now have different proposals to try to implement when they get back."

Ms. Araminda Atencio, another co-chairperson, said that SWAP is in need of more funds to work with.

Barney Schneider, treasurer, said, "We intend to make this the most productive conference ever. What comes out of this conference could be very innovative for UMass." He added that legislators who came have the opportunity to get closer to the University and to better understand how students feel and what they want.

Members of the SWAP conference returned to UMass yesterday with answers to problems and new proposals to implement, and hopefully, a feeling of accomplishment.

Goodell Has New Life

By BONNIE ASSELIN

Goodell Library was once a musty book cellar, a place to spend a few hours rummaging through dimly lit stacks for that one misplaced book. It meant dusty shelves...few empty desks...tiny study nooks...books strewn everywhere...low ceilings...narrow staircases.

The new Goodell is now a makeshift classroom and office building. The floor by floor description is:

The sixth floor, the uppermost level, poses as classroom space. Various course sections meet there.

The fifth floor, entrance level, houses the Department of Communication Disorders in the west wing. They were the first to move, early in July. Everywoman's Center, moving from Munson Hall in October, Outreach, previously in Arnold House, and the Audio-Visual department are in the east wing (old section).

The Accounting and Purchasing department is in the west wing of the fourth floor. BDIC and Student Volunteer Services are in its east wing.

On the third floor are a physical plant maintenance shop and storage space for the property office, mainly furniture items.

The second floor is physics department storage space and the first is general university storage.

Paul Meade, assistant director of planning, said the arrangement is temporary. The various departments and services have only tentative occupancy.

The long range projection is for a totally renovated classroom building, Meade said. "We need money," he added. Until the money is appropriated, renovation cannot begin. He could not say when that time would come.

On a quick tour, Goodell seems barren. Areas of book stacks, low ceilings, and poor lighting "cannot be allotted to anyone", said Mr. Meade, adding: "It needs renovation."

Persons working in Goodell are generally satisfied with their new arrangement which allows them more space. Yet, they agreed that lighting is poor and the walls need painting.

Stats Show DC Food Sickening

We wish to thank the UMass department of microbiology and Professor Reynold B. Czarnecki for their aid in this article.

Experts from both mathematics and public health say that it can be shown statistically that a certain percentage of students who eat at the dining commons (d.c.) regularly over a two year period will get sick because of eating the d.c. food.

While students have complained in the past about the sanitary quality of the dining commons, it is nearly impossible to finger any single individual who has been physically afflicted by eating there. No cases of food poisoning, gastroenteritis, diarrhea, or any sickness directly attributable to any condition of the dining commons have been reported this year, or in recent history for that matter.

But if no one can bring forward the John Student whose illness was caused by d.c. meals, statistics show this person exists. The basis of this statement lies in probabilities, but a more realistic picture of d.c. health conditions is by direct examination.

The Collegian ran bacteriolgical tests on the d.c. this semester to determine if conditions existed that could literally make one sick from eating the food. The tests followed US Public Health Service Standards and gave the d.c. an excellent overall rating, but showed certain trouble areas did exist.

George Reed, environmental health specialist for university health services, said that where trouble areas existed, it wasn't caused by mechanical error, poor cleaning equipment, etc., but by human error.

"The basic problem," Reed said, "is that d.c. personnel are not being trained properly."

Karol S. Wisniesky of the UMass School of Public Health agreed with Reed, and said the Collegian study was consistent with the results his students obtain when they use the d.c. for field work in conjunction with Wisniesky's course on institution hygiene and sanitation.

Citing the high turnover of employees and student help, Wisniesky said, "These people might never have been trained in any manner." He went on "the inability to bring minimal human contact with food by d.c. workers could cause problems."

Wisniesky called these health problems "subclinical epidemics of food poisoning: the occasional diarrhea or constipation that the students treat by themselves." He did say there are "problems in directly correlating food poisoning with insanitary food handling."

Fred T. DeGregorio, assistant director for food and drug of Western Mass. Public Health Service (WMPHS) said the Collegian study showed the d.c. "in much better shape than most restaurants." He said the d.c. health problems with personnel is "the same as everyplace else, but they (the d.c.) probably do a better job handling the problem than other places."

George Reed is the environmental health "czar" on this campus. He is responsible for testing and enforcing of health regulations. The important point here is that Reed does limited testing and essentially no regulating of the d.c.

"We don't check the dining commons as often as we like," Reed said, "because we don't have the help." Reed went on to say the reason behind his "help problem is the budget."

While environmental health is part of health services, the environmental health budget comes strictly from the state of Mass. Reed has no facilities of his own for testing and relies on the Western Mass. Public Health labs located in Morrill Science Center.

As to running bacteriological tests on the d.c., Reed says, "I wouldn't ask the state to do this, and I won't do these tests until I have the facilities."

DeGregorio said that while Reed regularly submits milk and water samples, any other samples are "submitted only after they have a problem." He went on to say Reed's problem in getting money for personnel is not unusual, because WMPHS only has four people to field inspect the entire western part of Massachusetts, and that "the university is left to the university" for health regulation.

While DeGregorio leaves the university to monitor itself, Reed says that he has no enforcement power. "I'm strictly advisory," Reed said, and "I can only make recommendations."

Joel Stoneham, past director of university food services, said, "Managers of individual dining commons are responsible for keeping the place up." He said this includes inspections for health problems and training of workers.

Karol Wisniesky says this is not enough. He advocates a food-health educator who would work with both the Campus Center and university food services. He went on that this position should be financed at "in-house expense, instead of making the university pay," and this is the practice at other universities and institutions.

Stoneham said, "A training program was proposed for semester break, but because of the economics of the situation, it was foregone." He pointed out that there will be general training sessions to be held the week of Dec. 21, but this is not an extensive program.

George Reed, who feels that insufficient training of food service workers represents a health problem, and who is presently responsible that this training be done, said "You've got to have money to do training," and that he just didn't have any funds.

While he said one of his goals is to improve training for all food services workers, "there are the problems of part-time student workers, and the unions who have control of the workers. How can you manage this?"

Reed said that environmental healths biggest concern is not the dining commons, but kitchenettes in dormitories.

Barry Averill, director of university health services, said the recent hiring of Judy Sharpe, a nurse epidemiologist, could be of value in monitoring any food-born disease outbreak. He said computer checks could be run on infirmary patients complaining of diseases indicative of food-borne problems, but this preventive medicine program is just forming and the computer programs have yet to be initiated.

The only method to waiver eating in the dining commons for those undergraduates forced to eat there is to see Kenneth Warner, a clinical nutritionist at university health services, where he reviews if some medical necessity demands a special diet, and then makes a recommendation if the student should be excused from the d.c. requirement. Judging from the above average marks the d.c. got from this Collegian health study, don't say the dining commons makes you sick — it won't work.

Women "Getting Together"

By JO DOMINIC

There are four undergradu$te women's centers on campus. Whether or not you agree with their ideals or their goals and whether or not you use them, all students are helping to pay for them.

The centers are located in Southwest, Central, Orchard Hill and Northeast areas. Funding which averages between $500 and $1500 for each area, is received by the area governments and indirectly from the student activities fee.

All the centers offer counseling, colliquies, and a library or resource center. The centers are designed as a place for women to get together with other women; a place to be comfortable.

Women "getting together" averages between 10-25 a week in each center. According to the centers "there is a certain group that comes in weekly."

Occasionally the centers sponsor films and speakers and pot luck suppers.

Southwest, the oldest established women's center, has 12 3-credit courses. The Center aided in developing a feminist studies major, planned for next year.

A female student presently taking a course at the SWWC told the Collegian, "The women in the SWWC are to radical and too feminist oriented. As a result I felt they weren't open to an opposite viewpoint. After I finish the course, I will never set foot in the center again. There is no way I can identify with the women there."

SWWC Outreach Coordinater Margie Posner explained that "women feel challanged in this situation where they present an opinion in the minority. Naturally they would feel defensive. They might misinterpret the meaning of what is said to them in their own head."

Gail Kaplan of the Northeast Women's Center said, "The differences between the centers are good. It is important the centers comply with the different needs. The contact between the centers is not as strong as I would like, and I often have to be the one to take the initiative. There is a closer connection between us and the Everywomens Center."

The Everywomen's Center, however, is not specifically designed to serve undergraduate needs, said a spokesman at the SW Women's Center. The EWC is part of the Divison of Continuing Education at UMass. The Everywomen's Center operates independently of the other area women's centers.

"The center is not just for women, but it is a women's center. There's a distinction there. The issues we deal with are of concern to women. The services we provide are for women. Yet if a man comes in we are not going to throw him out, beat him up, or castrate him," said Ms. Posner.

She said, "My energy goes into dealing with women. I'm not about to take men by the hand and teach them about the movement. Men should take the initiative, since they're the ones institutionalized into their sex roles."

Peggy Cookson, Student Coordinater of SWWC agreed.

"I've talked to men on my floor about becoming active. They seem to do a lot of criticizing, yet when it comes down to doing something about it, there's no response. I question men's sincerity." said Maryann Oparowski, another student coordinater of SWWC.

"There is no way for men to take an activist role in the center. Let men get together and they say "it's you baby that's wrong." Some men may come into the movement because they fear being ripped off and having harm done to themselves, not others. I wonder how many are humanist," she added.

"No men have offered anything to us. They come in to use the resource material. I closed the colloques to men, because I felt it was more important to get women unified, so women would have the experience of working with other women," said Peggy Sablvoo of Central Women's Center.

"There are men in our center," said Carol Dolan of Orchard Hill. "Everyone feels the need for men to be educated to the movement. Then it can evolve, into not only a women's movement, but a people's movement as well."

All centers told the Collegian the movement has been misrepresented by the media, with the press showing the division and dissent more than the unity.

Gail Kaplan, student coordinator of N.E. Women's Center said, "Women may be scared off by the centers due to the mythology of press and media. They have given it many negative connotations, putting on media shows." She added, "there are a number of women who are coming from a lesbian feminism standpoint, but many are not. The N.E. center is trying to solve the problem of overcoming the fear of Lesbianism."

Mary Oparowski agreed. She said, "We are not apologetic nor deny there are lesbians at the SWWC. We never would. Lesbians are women and we are dealing with the concerns of women. If other women choose to ignore our resources because there are lesbians here, it's their own personal problem. They have to put it together in their own heads."

The centers differed as to the degree to which the women's movement is a political one. The strongest difference was between the Southwest and Orchard Hill Centers.

"Politics should be more centered on women, not on radical politics. This scares women away from the center. Movement politics should be kept in the background and concentration first should be on facts of women and who we are, as women," said Carol Dolan of Orchard Hill.

Ms. Posner of SWWC said, "We don't separate social and political change. They can't be divided. We're doing the politics for the social change. Perhaps we're more radical than other centers because we're older. We've gotten notoriety, because we stuck our necks out."

One of the main goals of the Centers is to serve as support and comfort groups; as places for women to "rap with other women."

"The center is a support base where women can derive strength to become action-oriented, to change themselves and also to effect change," said Ms. Salbvo.

One woman however, disagreed with this viewpoint. She said, "I only use the centers because there is no feminist studies major. If there were, I wouldn't need the centers."

SW Assembly Funds Paul Robeson Spring Lecture

Because Southwest Assembly is quickly running out of funds, last week the Social/Cultural Program Committee agreed to fund a spring lecture in the series of lectures offered in the behalf of Paul Robeson, an outstanding writer, singer, actor, dramatist and social activist of the Third World People.

The SW Black Caucus agreed to sponsor the lecture, featuring two poetesses, Mari Evans and Gwendolyn Brooks, and provide $800 of the $1,600. The Caucus asked the Assembly to match their support.

Although the consensus of the Assembly favored the program, a timidness towards allocating the funds seemed to exist. The reason for the feeling was understandable. The Assembly is down to its last $1000, which must last until May.

Maureen Mitchell, a member of the Social/Cultural Program Committee, agreed to meet with members of her committee during a five minute break to discuss the possibility of that committee funding the program. It was agreed to and brought before the Assembly for their approval. The Assembly, who must approve the Committee's spending of its money, approved the allocation.

A major conflict developed over the question of adding representation from each SW Center on the Budget Committee. As it stood, there was one representative for all five Centers — Malcolm X Center, Women's Center, Resource Center, Center for Racial Understanding, and Instructional Center.

Larry St. Cyr and Craig Sanderson agreed that the committee was meant to be neutral towards any particular faction of SW and such representation as proposed could mean a de-centralization of representation. The idea was to keep the representatives open to the interest of Southwest as a whole.

Those supporting the proposal, such as Vice President Eric Braxton, were not happy with last year's system. Braxton, as a member of the Malcolm X Center, said he felt he never knew what was going on. It involved a too diverse responsibility to represent all five Centers. Therefore, it was the contention of the supporters, that since the Centers are a major faction of SW, each should be represented separately.

After a good half-hour of debate, the motion was passed, and the Budget Committee, which has already selected the five new representatives, will grow from 14 to 18 people.

Jean Morrison Becker, an "artist in residence" for SW, presented the request of the Social/Cultural Program Committee to establish the beginnings of a craft center in Hampden. The Committee asked for permission to take $320 out of their funds, to set up a printing press for students interested in making greeting cards.

The project will be set up in the lobby of Hampden right outside the meeting room on the first floor. Ms. Becker felt that this location would open the operations to the passers-by, and, hopefully, will induce student participation. The request was accepted.

The Cance darkroom was allocated $47.85 for materials needed to operate the room. The darkroom is used by a colloquim and is also open to all SW students.

The last three motions passed dealt with allowing the president of the Assembly to have three, non-voting advisors; establishing an ad-hoc Finance Committee to draw up Assembly guidelines for dealing with funding Christmas parties sponsored by dorms and non-SW organizations for underprivileged and disabled people; and urging the staff of SW to open all offices one night a week so students can have more access to the offices.

The Board of Trustees is considering a new official seal for the University of Massachusetts, so the rumor goes.

UMass To Hold Intercession 2-Week Program In Southwest

UMass will offer ten colloquia during this year's January term, according to Walter Silva, SW Academic Affairs head and director of the intercession program.

Silva said that, due to the energy crisis, the intercession program will not last three weeks, as originally hoped, but will run two weeks, from January 14 to January 24. The University had wished to offer two-credit courses, but the shrunken schedule made this impossible.

Silva stressed that all colloqs would be taught by regular University faculty, in reply to an administration request that faculty participate in the intercession program. According to Silva, the faculty members are not being paid extra for working the January term.

"There probably will be an enrollment of 20-25 people in each course," said Silva. He added that the class week during the program will run four days, three days of lecture and one day of discussion. All the courses are pass/fail.

Registration for the program will begin Wednesday, December 5th, in the SW Academic Affairs office, located in John Adams Tower. Persons wishing to pre-register by phone may call 545-2803.

The courses offered by the University are:

ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS: AMHERST AND THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY: Students will examine local population expansion, local development, waste disposal, the Connecticut River, and nuclear generators in the Connecticut Valley.

THEATRE WORKSHOP: An analysis of the plays of a contemporary playwright in light of directing, psychological interpretation, and stagecraft.

CREATING ART: Students will explore several basic art media, such as clay, plaster, wood, painting, etc., with the intent of creative interpretation through a final project.

CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN HISTORY: Focusing on politics, manipulation of the law, the party system, the process of becoming a major political figure, the change over the past few years in Constitutional interpretation, and the three branches of the federal government.

AFRICAN CULTURE AND POLITICS OF CHANGE: Analysis of recent developments on the African continent through political influence on cultural anthropology. This course will include case studies of movements and change, the causes of cultural change, and the foundation of ethnic groups.

PERSPECTIVES OF NATIONAL LIBERATION STRUGGLES IN AFRICA: To introduce students to the African anti-colonist struggle, this course will include an analysis of European rule over Africa, and a look at African relations with the UN and the major world powers.

SYMPOSIUM ON MYTH AND LITERATURE: This course, taught by several faculty members from Hampshire College, will include studies of myth as it relates to among others, modern fiction, Homer, Christian thought, and the Hero.

JAPAN TODAY: This course will deal with contemporary Japan, its economics, goverment structure, and culture.

THE TWO CHINAS: This course will examine the changing relationships of the US with both Nationalist China and the People's Republic of China.

MOTHERS AND CHILDREN: A reading and discussion course on child development as pertaining to liberated mothers who change their life-style.

Design And Print Your Own Cards

In an attempt to establish Hampden Commons as a student Arts and Crafts Center, and also to encourage creativity and potential art skills, a Southwest artist is offering all students the opportunity to design and print their own greeting cards.

Jean Becker, artist-in-residence of the SW Resource Center and teacher of a University Continuing Ed course, told the Collegian that her efforts were designed to help persons who would like to have "an experience in printing".

Becker, who has served as artist in residence for the Resource Center since March, said Hampden is an ideal place to hold demonstrations.

"I was very aware of this vast space which wasn't being used for anything", she said. She cited the large windows in the building as being very conducive to housing art displays.

After much search, Ms. Becker finally received the necessary seed money from the Southwest Assembly, which is encouraging the devlopment and growth of Hampden. She had previously gone to the offices of Vice Chancellors Gage and Woodbury, and also to Student Activities. "They were all very interested, but none of them could give me the money," she said.

According to the artist, making greeting cards need not be difficult. One creates a design and carves it into a linoleum block. This block is then cut out and placed in the pess, where it is inked and subsequently printed on paper. The entire operation, which results in twenty-five cards, would cost several people working together around one dollar per person.

"Reaction to the project so far has been fair, considering that there has been little publicity," said Ms. Becker. If enough student show interest in a crafts program in Hampden, Ms. Becker would invite and possibly hire artists and student paraprofessionals to oversee projects in ceramics, clay, and macrame, among others. She is currently trying to get some people from Hampshire College to give a weaving demonstartions.

And if this greeting card project fails?

"Well, we tried, and we'd have to move on," she said. And the plans for reviving Hampden as a community building would probably not include a crafts center.

Drivers Gasp At Sun. Ban

By JIM WILLSE
Associated Press Writer

Worried motorists queried police and searched for gasoline dealers Sunday as a near-total shutdown of service station pumps dramatically altered America's driving habits.

"We've had about a thousand calls from people looking for a gas station that's open, but there just aren't any," said a spokesman for the Massachusetts state police. "We can tow them someplace where it's warm, but they're not going to find gas anywhere."

In his energy address a week ago, President Nixon called for voluntary closing of service stations from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday. A law expected to reach the White House shortly would make the closings mandatory.

An Associated Press survey of trade associations and government agencies in each state indicated the overwhelming majority-90 per cent in most areas-intended to comply. That estimate was borne out in spot checks made Sunday.

Only one service station could be found open in Miami, Fla., or its suburbs, and the owner, Omelio Diaz, reported business was slow after big lines the day before. The Minnesota Highway Patrol said it did not know of any stations doing business in that state.

Of 30 stations advertising 24-hour service in the Atlanta area, only three said they were open. A similar check of 36 stations in Chicago turned up only one open.

All stations along the 470-mile Pennsylvania Turnpike turned off their pumps, although some remained open to provide emergency repairs. Stations along the New Jersey Turnpike, the nation's busiest toll road, were open but limiting purchases to five gallons per customer.

There were scattered reports of strandings, but for the most part, motorists appeared to have either stocked up the day before or simply were spending Sunday at home instead of in the driver's seat.

A spokesman for the 270-mile Florida Turnpike reported a "handful" of strandings. In each case, the driver was charged $6.50 and given enough gas to reach the next exit, although there was no guarantee of more fuel when he arrived.

Lighter than usual traffic was reported on many major roads. Dennis Payson, an employe of a Shell station on Interstate 94 in Wisconsin, said there were "hardly any" cars on the road and said the station might close for want of business.

New Jersey State Trooper Robert Barszcz said that special precautions taken to handle traffic from the Army-Navy game in Philadelphia were unnecessary this year. "You'd hardly know the game was on," he said.

Some stations which had intended to sell gas Sunday found their tanks dry after the buying crush Saturday.

Eddie Wells, an attendant at a station in downtown Seattle, Wash., said he pumped 100 gallons an hour-double the normal Saturday rate-until noon, when the pumps were closed to save some fuel for Monday.

Back To The Horse & Wagon

By JOHN T. McGOWAN
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The owner of a large hardware and industrial supplies firm says he'll use a horse and wagon to make deliveries in the city starting Monday.

Melvin Hantman, president of Abram Yecies & Co., is experimenting with the old-fashioned method because of the energy shortage. Right now, he plans to borrow the wagon.

"If it proves practical and the gasoline shortage continues," he said, "I'll buy my own horses and wagons and start regular daily runs inside the city."

Hantman said he would continue to use trucks for deliveries to the other areas of New Jersey and New York and Pennsylvania.

Hantman, 46, recalled that when he was a boy, his father had 35 horses and wagons delivering laundry around Newark.

Hantman rented his rig from a local stable and is paying $75 a day for a 16-foot wagon normally used for hay rides and a matched pair of strawberry-roan Belgian truck horses.

Stable owner Richard Write said the horses weigh a ton each and can pull 5,000 pounds in the wagon at a top speed of 35 miles per hour. He said the horses can't go for long at that pace, however, and deliveries will be made a a slower speed.

"That should make President Nixon happy. It's below 50," Hantman said. The President requested that motorists cut their driving speed to 50 miles per hour to save fuel.

Wright said the horses require 20 gallons of water a day, plus hay and oats.

"As far as I know, they're all in more plentiful supply than gasoline," Hantman said. "But you'll notice I say that with my fingers crossed."

Food Prices Jump

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Grocery prices went up again in November after taking a brief dip during October, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

The news came amid warnings of more increases and possible shortages because of the fuel crisis.

Eggs led the list of higher-priced items, rising in almost all the cities surveyed. In most areas, however, the price remained well below the record dollar-a-dozen level reached in mid-August.

The Associated Press checked the price of 15 food and non-food items in 13 cities on March 1 and has rechecked at the beginning of each month since.

The Dec. 1 survey showed the total marketbasket bill went up in 9 of the 13 cities during November, with increases averaging three per cent. The bill went down in the other four cities — declining an average of two per cent.

In contrast, the Nov. 1 survey showed that the total marketbasket bill had declined in 9 of 13 cities checked and risen in only four during the month of October.

A comparison of March 1 and Dec. 1 prices showed the marketbasket bill was up in every city over the nine-month period. Increases ranged from two percent in Atlanta, Ga., to 17 per cent in Providence, R.I., and averaged 10 per cent.

Eggs, which soared to all-time records in early August after controls were lifted, and then declined when consumers refused to pay the high prices, started rising again.

The price of a dozen medium eggs was up in 12 of the 13 cities during November. Increases ranged from four per cent in Boston, where eggs went from 84 to 87 cents a dozen, to 23 per cent in Miami, where the price tag went from 69 to 85 cents.

All-beef frankfurters also increased in price, despite declines in wholesale beef prices. A pound of all-beef franks went up during November in seven of 13 cities.

Shoppers in a few areas found some good news at the hamburger counter. The price of a pound of ground chuck went down in four cities, decreasing an average of 15 percent. The price went up, however, in five cities, rising an average of 8 per cent, and it stayed the same in the remaining four cities.

Nixon's Finances Listed In "Operation Candor"

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon paid $78,651 in federal income taxes for the years 1969 through 1972, White House documents showed Sunday.

The still-confidential documents, being prepared for release this week as part of the President's "Operation Candor," list the biggest payment, $72,686, as being made for 1969.

Nixon was listed as paying $4,298 for 1972, $878 for 1971 and $789 for 1970-the years he claimed substantial deductions for state property taxes, mortgage interest and donation of his vice presidential papers.

In addition, the documents indicate that soon after taking office Nixon paid $38,646 in taxes on his 1968 income. And they show that the government withheld $30,816 from his paycheck in the first five months of this year for his yet-to-be-calculated 1973 taxes.

Nixon's salary is $200,000 a year. He also receives a tax-free $50,000 annual expense allowance, and records indicate he has collected sizeable profits on real estate transactions in recent years.

Some data on his federal income tax payments had emerged earlier, but the listing obtained by The Associated Press Sunday was the first comprehensive disclosure on the controversial issue.

The documents show Nixon paid $7,351 in New York state income tax after taking office in 1969 for income he earned in 1968 as a Manhattan lawyer.

Since then, they indicate he has paid no state or local taxes.

Presidential associates said District of Columbia law exempts a president from local income taxes. They added that Nixon's tax advisers concluded he was not liable for California state income taxes, although California is his voting residence.

A cash flow statement being prepared for release in the next few days lists Nixon's total income tax payments for the period Jan. 1, 1969 to May 31, 1973, as $155,464-a figure covering earnings before as well as during his presidency.

According to White House figures, Nixon has paid $74,423 in state property taxes for his California and Florida homes during his presidency.

Such property tax payments are deductible in computing federal income taxes. So are $271,350 in interest payments listed in the White House accounting. But Nixon's largest tax deduction-about $500,000-came from his donation of his vice presidential papers to the National Archives.

Presidential aides have indicated that portions of Nixon's tax returns may be made public as part of the White House effort to answer allegations about his personal finances.

In addition, one source said sections of the income tax return of the President's daughter, Tricia Nixon Cox, will be disclosed to prove she paid capital gains tax on her portion of the profit from a Florida land investment with her father.

Recent news reports suggested that Nixon, because of his larger deductions, listed the entire profit on his tax return to spare his daughter from having to pay capital gains tax.

The White House vehemently denied the suggestion, and one aide said: "Of all the charges, this particular charge was the most offensive to the first family."

Syria, Israel Renew Clash

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian tanks, cannons and mortars battled with Israeli artillery and armor for four hours Sunday in one of the heaviest Golan Heights clashes since the October war.

The Syrians knocked out three Israeli tanks and silenced five artillery batteries in the sporadic duels, a Syrian military spokesman said in Manascus. He said the fighting erupted when an Israeli engineering unit pushed too close to Syrian front lines.

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said two Israeli soldiers were wounded in the exchanges but had no comment on the Syrian kill claims.

Witnesses in southern Lebanon reported meanwhile that Israelis lobbed more than 50 artillery shells into Lebanese border villages at dawn. No casualties were reported.

The reported fighting came as Cairo newspapers warned of possible new battles along the Suez Canal and questioned the use of peace negotiations scheduled for Dec. 18 in Geneva if Israel fails to live up to its commitments.

That was a reference to the breakdown in talks aimed at disengagement of Israeli and Egyptian forces facing each other in battle posture along the Suez battle lines.

Egypt broke off the talks — at Kilometer 101 on the Suez-Cairo road — on Thursday, charging the Israelis with stalling on what Cairo sees as a withdrawal commitment in the Nov. 4 cease-fire pact.

Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said in Jerusalem that Israel is prepared to resume the Kilometer 101 talks and listen to new Egyptian proposals for withdrawals.

He made the comment after a meeting with Finnish Gen. Ensio Siilasvuo, commander of United Nations forces in the Middle East who traveled to Jerusalem in efforts to get the withdrawal talks moving again.

The breakdown in the talks after 10 meetings between Yariv and Egyptian Maj. Gen. Mohamed Abdel Ghany el-Gamasy aroused fears that fighting could explode anew along the 103-mile-long Suez Canal.

"Apparently Israel did not learn any lesson from the October 6 war and needs another reminder," Egyptian Brig. Gen. Hassan Abou Saada told newsmen Saturday at the Suez front. "My troops are ready to engage the Israelis any minute, if we receive an order."

But U.S. peacekeeping officials released figures in Cairo showing reported incidents along the canal dropped from 27 Tuesday to 11 by Friday. They said "preliminary indications" were that Saturday was similarly quiet.

The U.N. officials have sought repeatedly to stress that the cease-fire remains in effect despite the breakdown in the Kilometer 101 negotiations and the talk of new fighting.

NE Oil Dealers Sock Clients

New England homeowners who customarily receive a Christmas card from their local oil dealer may be well-advised this year to send one to him instead.

The fuel oil shortage has resulted in a dramatic turnabout in the home heating oil business, transforming a buyers' market into a sellers' market.

The dealers, subject to Phase 4 price controls and complex fuel allocation regulations, have begun to tighten up on customer credit, eliminate premiums and sales-building incentives, and cut back on such services as burner repair and maintenance.

More ominously, buyers of new homes are having a tough time finding a dealer to serve them, while existing customers are increasingly becoming a captive clientele of their present oil supplier, whether they like it or not.

Nowhere is this more evident then in New England, which relies more heavily on oil heat than any section of the country. Seventy per cent of the region's homes are heated with oil, compared to 24 per cent nationwide. The six-state region is also highly dependent upon imported fuel.

For years, when No. 2 oil and kerosene were cheap and plentiful, individual dealers were in sharp competition in an effort to obtain a homeowners' business.

Today, it's the homeowner who's worried about whether his dealer will be able to supply him with enough fuel to get through the region's cold winter.

"The present situation is an injustice to the customer who is mistreated by his dealer," said Carl Nigro, vice president of Dudley Fuel Co. in Arlington, Mass. "He is really locked in and has no recourse for unjust or unfair treatment. The whole situation stinks."

While some dealers deny that customers are captive, many said they were being highly selective in taking on new accounts and others replied with an emphatic "no" when asked whether they would serve a new customer.

"We can't," said George Santa of Santa Fuel Co. in Bridgeport, Conn. "We're allocated a certain amount based on 1972 levels. There is no way to do it."

Robert A. Flynn of the Maine Oil Dealers Association said he is advising homeowners to stick with their present suppliers, while at the same time urging dealers to practice good customer relations.

The situation is clouded by the sharp disparity in consumer prices. In Portland, Maine, for example, a recent survey showed No. 2 oil ranging in price from 22.1 to 31.5 cents a gallon, depending on what proportion of a dealer's supply was the more expensive foreign oil.

As a result, said Flynn, "dealers who have had to increase their prices to a level much higher than the competition have gotten a lot of abusive phone calls from their customers, acccusing them of gouging."

In some states, local Civil Defense agencies and dealer associations have helped locate suppliers for new homeowners. Connecticut, for example, requires a new customer moving into a new home to file an "extreme hardship" form with the state Office of Civil Preparedness, which makes sure that shortages are distributed fairly.

In Burlington, Vt., Al Ingalls of Northern Fuels, Inc., cited an example of a family that moved from California and desperately needed oil. Ingalls let them have 100 gallons but told them to find another dealer.

Dealers have been tightening up on their credit policies, and some customers have received letters demanding payment within 10 days. Others are sticking with the more traditional 30-day policy, but enforcing it more strictly. The dealers claim that they, in turn, are being squeezed for payment by their suppliers.

"For years," said Flynn, "many dealers didn't have very stringent credit practices. And a great many people have gotten into the habit of paying their fuel dealer last."

Oil, one dealer noted, is a tough commodity to repossess.

Sharp increases in prices, coupled with tight credit, are causing concern about whether the poor and the elderly on fixed incomes may find themselves without fuel.

In Maine, Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis said he's considering emergency legislation that would prohibit fuel suppliers from altering their credit practices as a result of the fuel shortage.

Other oil users may find themselves paying more for labor and parts if their furnaces conk out.

For years, dealers have been providing, at minimal cost, 24-hour-a-day service contracts, many of them covering full parts and labor on burners that need repair.

"Furnace service is a money losing proposition which companies perform as a good will gesture for their customers whose oil purchases constitute their profit," said Al Kaneb, president of Old Colony Oil Co. in Boston.

A waste of energy.

The Kids' Got An Idea There!

WOODBRIDGE, Conn. (AP) - "Don't hold the the door for someone who's down the block." That's one suggestion, including the repreated word, that comes from a fourth-grader at Beecher School where the kids gave their impressions recently of what to do in the face of the energy crisis.

Their comments echo those they night have heard from the President, their parents or the six o'clock news but their unique spellings and style give a cheery-sounding tone to a crucial situation.

"Make a car that runs on water and there would not be so much polution," said one fourth-grader.

Other car-related comments included:

—"We should not go fast in a car."

—"Make cars that don't use gas."

—"Make cars that run by little electric toobs so they will not use gas."

—One young boy who is asking for a motorcycle kit which uses gasoline suggested that people should "use biceacules and not cars or anything that runs on gas."

One youngster lumped his ideas together and came up with "Save energy by turning off your heater pretty low to go less than fifty miles an our."

Another student said, simply: "Use cole."

Looking ahead to a more heated time of year a third-grader suggested that "In the summer if you have an air-cundishiner turn it down."

Boston Detective Killed In Loan Office Shooting

By BETTY MILLS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston police detective whose police officer brother was slain during a bank robbery three years ago was shot in the head and killed while trying to prevent an armed robbery of a loan office Friday.

The victim was Det. John D. Schroeder, 55, of the Allston section. He had been a police officer since 1951 and won a department medal of honor last year.

His brother, Patrolman Walter Schroeder, was shot dead Sept. 23, 1970, when he and a partner interrupted the robbery of a bank in the Brighton section. Another brother is Deputy Police Supt. Francis Schroeder.

Police said John Schroeder was shot by one of three men who entered the Suffolk Loan Office at 1904 Washington St., in the Roxbury-Jamaica Plain section shortly before noon and said it was a holdup.

Police Supt. Jeremiah P. Sullivan said Schroeder was in plain clothes and was partly hidden from the robbers, two of whom were armed with pistols, by packing cartons at the rear of the office.

He said that when Schroeder heard the men say it was a holdup, he came forward and said he was a police officer. One of the three men fired one shot which struck Schroeder in the head.

Sullivan said he did not know if Schroeder had drawn his revolver when he stepped from behind the boxes but "assumed" that he had. Police said Schroeder did not fire his weapon.

After the shooting the three men robbed the office, taking three trays of rings, checks and cash, which the loan company said amounted to a total of $25,000 to $30,000.

One of the three then took Schroeder's revolver and they fled.

Sullivan said Schroeder had a wife and four children and lived at 110 Hooker St.

PIKE SUN. GAS SALES

BOSTON (AP) - All gasoline stations on the Massachusetts Turnpike will halt gasoline sales from 9 p.m. Saturday to midnight Sunday, John T. Driscoll, chairman of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, said today.

Earlier in the week, Driscoll said the stations would remain open during the period, despite President Nixon's request that all gas stations close during that period.

FOGG MUSEUM THEFT

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - More than 5,000 ancient Greek coins valued by police at "from $1 million up" were stolen from the Fogg Art Museum at Harvard University early Sunday.

The coins "are irreplaceable. It is a tragic loss for scholarship," said David G. Mitten, associate curator of ancient art.

Three or four holdup men knocked on the door of the museum about 12:30 a.m., and when the night watchman opened it, they jumped him and tied him up," police said.

Then they lugged off a green foot safe containing 2,650 Greek coins, most of them bronze and silver. They also scooped up about 3,000 loose coins from glass cases, according to a university spokesman.

The coins dated from the 7th Century B.C. to the 4th Century A.D.

PRIVATE LANDING AT DEVENS

FT. DEVENS, Mass. (AP) - A small private airplane that landed without permssion at the Ft. Devens airstrip Sunday turned out to be a private flying club's aircraft on a student run, officials said.

The yellow and white Cessna 150 landed without authorization and waited at the end of the runway until an unidentified man ran from surrounding woods and boarded.

The plane then took off, with Army helicopters in pursuit. The helicopters were unable to overtake the plane, but recorded the registration number, Army officials said.

An official from Hanscomb Field in Bedford later notified Ft. Devens officials that the aircraft belonged to the flying club and representatives had forgotten to contact the Ft. Devens tower before landing.

MASS. LOTTERY TOPS!

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts State Lottery leads the nation in per capita sales of lottery tickets, Lottery Director Dr. William E. Perrault said Sunday.

Perrault said the dollar volume for the week ending Nov. 22 was $2,114,840, which figures out to be a .37 per capita rate. Michigan was second in the nation at .28, followed by Pennsylvania at .25

BICYCLE PATHS

BOSTON (AP) - Bicycle paths along the Charles River will be expanded and named for the late heart specialist Dr. Paul Dudley White, who designed signs used to mark the route, the Metropolitan District Commission announced Saturday.

White, who died at Massachusetts General Hospital here last month, was a strong advocate of exercise, especially bicycling, to combat heart disease.

POLISH SEAMAN HURT

FALMOUTH, Mass. (AP) - A Polish seaman from the fishing vessel Vega was being taken to Falmouth Hospital for treatment of a hand injury Sunday, the Coast Guard reported.

Edward Sajenko, 32, suffered three crushed fingers on his left hand in an accident on the vessel about 150 miles southeast of Cape Cod, a spokesman said.

NEW DIRECTOR FOR MGH

BOSTON (AP) - Dr. Charles E. Huggins, developer of a system which makes practical the freezing of blood in volume, was named Sunday as director of the Massachusetts General Hospital blood bank and transfusion service.

Dr. Huggins succeeds Dr. Morten Grove-Rasmussen who died last August.

Founded in 1941, the MGH blood bank and transfusion service is believed to be the largest hospital-based blood bank in the world.

MODEL INMATE EMPLOYMENT

BOSTON (AP) - Hampden County Massachusetts, has been selected to take part in a model inmate employment program funded by a Law Enforcement Assistance Administration grant.

The $180,817 grant will be used by the American Correctional Association to develop systems that will allow local authorities to offer training and placement for short-term offenders.

Also taking part in the experiment will be Montgomery County, Md., and Kansas City, Mo.

PLASTIC-WRAPPED HOMES

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - People who wrap oil- or gas-heated homes in plastic sheeting to save fuel risk suffocation, an engineer and heating contractor has warned.

Charles Martin of West Springfield said the danger lies in sealing houses so tightly that fresh air cannot easily flow into the house.

When that happens, occupants must compete with burners for a limited supply of oxygen, he said, adding: "the oil burner will win every time."

It is safe to use the plastic on electrically heated houses, Martin said.

CHESTER TRAIN CRASH

CHESTER, Mass. (AP) - A 62-year-old brakeman-conductor was in fair condition Friday after the train he was riding crashed into a derailed car from a Springfield-bound freight.

Henry Rubio of Loudville, N.Y., was hospitalized for observation at Noble Hospital, Westfield, following the morning collision.

State police said Rubio was working on an Albany-bound Penn Central freight train that rammed into a derailed car being dragged along the tracks by an eastbound Penn Central train.

The impact touched off a series of explosions in the east-bound train's cargo of new cars, state police said.

Eight freight cars from the two trains were derailed in the collision.

LOCKING GAS CAPS

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Locking gasoline tank caps are sold out in the Springfield area, according to spokesmen at several auto parts stores.

At the same time, stores report a run on siphoning hoses and thin garden hoses which can be used to siphon gas.

RESTAURANT HOLDUP

BOSTON (AP) - Robbers took money from about 100 patrons in a crowded restaurant Sunday but were captured in a shootout with police minutes later, police said.

Four men, armed with pistols and a sawed-off shotgun, forced the noontime crowd at the Old Vienna Hofbrau to lie on the floor while they took their valuables. They also forced the manager to turn over $2,000 from the restaurant office.

However, about 25 policemen converged as they left the restaurant at 1314 Commonwealth Ave. in the Allston section.

Old Man Of N.H. Left To R.I.P.

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Attempts to squeeze an interstate highway through Franconia Notch far below the granite face of the Old Man of the Mountain have been stalled, perhaps forever.

State Highway Commissioner Robert Whitaker said that his department is beginning a new environmental impact study of the proposal and that suggestions from conservationists are welcome.

"This is what we've been trying to get them to do for years," said Paul Bofinger of the Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests. Department officials have indicated, he said, "that they are going to study alternative routes" that would bypass the notch.

The society was joined by the Appalachian Mountain Club and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in asking for the study.

Environmentalists contend that the blasting necessary to make room for a four-lane highway through the narrow pass and the heavy traffic that would follow would jeopardize the rock formation that forms Old Man's face, high above on Cannon Mountain.

The Old Man was discovered in 1805 and has become a symbol for the state. It is made up of a number of rocks which have shifted over the years and are now held together by cables and cement.

Last month the Executive Council approved a $25,000 project to install sensing devices in the formation to record changes, shifts and weaknesses so that the profile can be kept intact.

Congress passed an amendment sponsored by Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H., last summer that permits the state to change Interstate 93 into a "parkway" as it passes through Franconia State Park, which contains the notch.

The measure, which allows the road to be more narrow and curvy than in interstate, was designed as a concession to conservationists.

But Bofinger said the society and others want to be sure that the parkway plan is used only after alternative routes are fully explored.

Commissioner Whitaker said the department would meet federal requirements in making the study, including section 4F of the Department of Transportation Act of 1966.

Walpole Reports Most Homicides

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts state prison at Walpole appears to have one of the highest inmate homicide rates in the nation this year, it was reported Friday.

The Boston Globe reported there have been five killings at the prison so far this hear, the same number for all of last year, and that the inmate population has averaged 560 this year.

It said that put the prison's homicide rate per 1,000 population at 8.9, and that is three times higher than the San Quentin prison in California, more than four times higher than the Marion Federal Penitentiary in Illinois, nine times than the Lucasville Prison in Ohio, and 12 times higher than the New Jersey State Prison, all maximum security prisons.

Prof. Lloyd E. Ohlin, research director at Harvard's Criminal Justice Center, said, "Walpole has been in a state of high tension and uncertainty.

"Personal grudges are left for people to settle among themselves without intervention of prison officials. It was a very unstable condition."

A five-week inmate lockup, a guard strike, a riot and six months of temporary leadership at the prison this year were enough to create a "breakdown in the accepted expectations of how things should be handled," Ohlin said.

The Adult Correctional Institution at Cranston, R.I., has reported one homicide this year. None has been reported at state prisons in other New England States

Male Midwife Enjoys Role

By MICHAEL W. MILLIGAN
Associated Press Writer

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - When his wife delivered their baby, John Collins played an unusual role: the father.

With his beard and chest poking out above his hospital smock, Collins, 31, is the only man in the nation certified to be a nurse-midwife.

"I'm used as a role model to show the father how to pick up the baby. The new father can learn how to treat or act around his baby by watching me." But his job is much broader.

As a nurse-midwife, Collins is qualified to treat a woman with a normal pregnancy, deliver her child and teach the parents how to care for it at least six months after birth. He always works under a doctor's supervision.

"I guess my interest in midwivery stems from being a fraternal twin, which got me interested in the development of the fetus," Collins said in an interview.

Collins doesn't resemble the traditional midwife, usually a woman trained only by experience who helped women give birth in their home. He has a masters degree from Yale University and teaches at the University of Connecticut School of Nursing.

He hasn't been the victim of jokes about his sex and job. But most women assume he's an obstetrician. They're surprised to learn otherwise as he makes his rounds at Backus Hospital in Norwich.

"I've not run into a patient who refused care from me," he said. "And I've had some former patients ask for me to deliver their next baby."

Collins said his sex helps him involve both husband and wife in the process of having and caring for a child.

"We like to start with family planning before conception. The couple should decide when they want a child and how it will fit into their family."

Unless the pregnancy is the one in 10 with complications, Collins would treat the woman, show her exercises to help at birth and help prepare the expectant father.

"If eveything's normal there's no need to see a physician," said Collins, who could deliver the baby in a hospital or clinic.

Future Drama: Not So Far Fetched

I can see it now...a man drives into a gas station...it is late. Driving a "gas eating" Oldsmobile '98 (9 miles to a gallon), he rolls down his window and asks the attendant to "fill it up".

Noticing that "regular gas" is 55 cents a gallon, he says to himself softly "not bad," only to be interrupted by the monotone of a tired attendant; "Sir, do you have gas stamps good enough to cover 10 gallons"?

Opening up his wallet, the man drops a ten dollar bill on the ground, and says "Is this what you want?" The attendant, picks it up and returns it to the man saying, "No sir, this is a ten dollar bill. What I want is a ten gallon ration ticket."

The man perplexed by the naivity (or integrity) of this young man begins to get desperate. He says, "look kid, my wife is in the hospital down in the southern part of the state..I need some gas..please kid, try and understand." The young man, pausing responds.."I'm sorry sir, but rules are rules."

The man smiles, then quickly whips out a pistol that he had kept in his bedroom drawer for twenty years, since the last "great war". Where before it was kept to guard house against the "jungle" outside; now he reasons it is needed for survival outside in the jungle itself. He wants to survive..."fill it up kid, dammit, fill it up." His hand clutching the gun is shaking nervously, like a junkie needing a fix and stealing to pay for it. His eyes are weary. The attendant fills up the tank nervously, saying to himself that he is quitting tomorrow. The tank is full. The man storms off in his gas-eating automobile, throwing out seven dollars to pay for the gas as he goes.

A future drama; less unrealistic than scary and sad. Nixon's plans to cover the gas shortage are not sufficient at this time, and something will have to be done soon.

As far as gas goes, there are two different schools of thought that are dominant in the White House. The first is that gas rationing is the only way out. Limit "everyone" to 10 gallons a week--no more. Meanwhile you can be sure that there will be an "exemption category" for White House aides, Military personnel, big-wigs in industry, and other assorted VIP's. Also, from a student point of view, 10 gallons might not even be enough for an out-of-state student to get his or her car home during Christmas break. Worse still, printing counterfeit "gas ration coupons" is potentially the biggest money maker for organized crime since prohibition. So, gas rationing doesn't seem reasonable.

On the other hand, the second plan, a heavy tax on the consumer to try to discourage the use of gasoline (some have suggested as much as 50 cents more a gallon) is a regressive, repressive, and aristocratic tax. It will make it hard for poor people or the middle class to go anywhere, while the Rockefellers, DuPonts, and Gettys will have the "run of the highway" for their little Sunday rides to the country.

The most logical move to fight the crisis (briefly explained) would include two things: One, an instant subsidy, by the Federal Government making all mass transit free throughout the country. This would also include a setting up of commuter buses to the suburbs, and from county to county throughout the state, all of which would be free. In some cases, military buses, driven by the national guard would be reasonable, if there was no other way that this could be done. (For precedence, look back to the Truman Presidency, when he was planning to have the Army take over the railroads while they were on strike).

To pay for this, the government would have to take money from other programs (suggestion: cut off funds to the dictatorships in Greece, Chile, and Vietnam and put them back into this country). Yet, I feel that most of this money could be gotten from a "profit tax". The government should tax up to 80-90 per cent of the profit derived by the oil company's from the strife of our country. This money should be split in half: half of it going to pay for mass transit; the other half used to pay for government projects to find ways to change over from an "oil economy" to some other economy that has long range feasability, and at the same time sponsoring government oil projects to supply gas for people, independently of the all too powerful oil interests.

It can be done. The present oil crisis is a result of lack of forsight. The crisis can only be overcome by a change in emphasis and consciousness. People are more important than oil interests.

Turn Off Those Library Lights

The UMass library and Paris, France are two locations that have chosen to ignore the energy crisis.

France has been friendly with the Arabs of late and are being duly rewarded for their friendship by not having their supply of oil cut. A Saturday night newscast showed the French city ablaze with Christmas lights that the reporter claimed had been put up earlier than normal this year.

The UMass library is also ablaze with lights. On Sunday afternoon I counted approximately 5,000 lights aglow in the building serving approximately one-tenth that number of studiers.

In one study area on the twenty-sixth floor there was one girl reading a book...by sunlight. There were two hundred glowing tubes above her, and she didn't need one of them. As a matter of fact, most of the areas used for study in the daytime receive enough natural light to work by, and could be left to nature until near sunset, except on gray days.

The stack areas have individual controls for their lights and most of them were being used as planned. I saw several people extinguish lights after they had used them. But in several other places there were rows of lights lit over areas that were devoid of books. There were just empty shelves being lit up.

On some of the floors ceilings are construced of a series of rectangles. Each and every one of these rectangles has at least one fluorescent tube, many have two. It is rather strange that many of the rectangles that have two tubes are closest to the windows where they could be empty of lights instead of overlit.

The bottom floor where the newspaper room and reference desk and card catalogue are located has around two thousand lights burning. Couldn't some of them be extinguished, maybe a third or half? Couldn't the same be done in some study areas?

It is too bad that a brand new building must be changed in appearance because its planners, like the men who designed the 1959 Oldsmobile failed to heed the environmentalist's warnings about diminishing energy supplies.

It must. It must because it is unnecessary to use the power the way it is being used now. It must because UMass has an obligation to lead society by setting a practical example to follow. It must because if it doesn't we may be studying by candlelight yet.

Electronic Gadgets; Or, Why Do Things Never Seem To Work?

I'm a mechanical moron.

And that's not an easy thing to confess in this electronic day and age.

Electricity frightens me. I've never been able to work up the courage to plug in a lamp. Electric carving knives always head for my jugular. Hair dryers make my hair stand on end. Brushing my teeth with an electric toothbrush has always been a shocking experience.

Electric garage doors make me nervous. Who knows when one is suddenly and inexplicably going to have a tantrum and snap shut when your car is only half-way into the garage? Xerox machines eat my papers instead of reproducing copies. Flashcubes blind me; my electric stove scorches me; and my airconditioner freezes me.

What makes things work? How come when you pull a switch on your t.v., Sammy Davis Jr. is suddenly in your living room? Or when you turn on your radio, Bob Dylan is crooning in your ear? How come when you put your key in the ignition, you car goes (sometimes)? Or a guy down at Cape canaveral flips a switch and three astronauts are launched into space for the next three months? And how do they get back home, anyway?

Don't ask me, because I don't know. There was a time I really wanted to understand how things work, but years of F's in science and high school physics, and despairing sighs from exasperated teachers have blunted my thirst for such knowledge. I go through life, now, always wondering about these things, but never daring to ask why, fearing the ridicule of my more scientifically-minded friends.

So, you'll never have the bad luck of sitting beside me in a physics lab or an engineering class, or Auto Repairing 101. Because I won't be there. You'll never find me spending a Saturday trying to fix my 10-speed bike. You will find me sitting patiently outside a gas station, reading a book, while they take care of my screwy brakes.

I have come to be philosophical about my lot in life. I have decided that mine is not to reason why the bread comes up toasted after two minutes, but to just accept that it does.

However, I do want to caution all you t.v., auto, refrigerator, clock, washing machine, and typewriter repairmen out there—be nice to me! If it weren't for me, and all the thousands (millions?) of other mechanical morons out there, you guys would be standing in line in front of your favorite welfare office instead of your bank.

I, for one, am looking forward to the coming months and years of the energy crisis, when, hopefully, most of the electronic gadgets that I don't understand will be eliminated. Life will certainly be simpler for me without all those confusing questions constantly nagging me.

But, on the other hand, there's another thing that bothers me — how come, when you rub two sticks together, you get a fire?

Letters To The Editor

Stupid, Immature Students

To The Editor:

I'm in agreement with J. Beal, whose letter concerning the stupidity and immaturity of UMass students on the whole struck me with a note of truth. Not everyone fits the following description, but enough do to make it worth your while to read it.

They are just too grungy at times to be believed. Their speech often comes out in a sort of gutteral mumble, which it takes practice to comprehend, let alone to imitate. They are many of them (no one who's reading this, of course) puny and weak looking and very unmannerly, whose cultural background an objective onlooker has good reason to question. Some of the "married" students around here obviously apparently never considered birth control, otherwise I doubt they would be married — sporting those fancy bands on their left fourth fingers so suavely and lording it over the rest of us rejects.

Sometimes I wonder what their professors must think of them and then, I realize that by now these dedicated individuals must be used to this type of indifferent, unmotivated student, because the saddest thing about this whole world is that it is full of people just like those described above; the ones J. Beal incredulously tried to warm up to and found himself booted out into the cold by; due to their inability to make the right response. In the next world, which I firmly believe in, I certainly pray that the majority will consist of semi-superior (for everyone can't be superior) rather than unequivocally inferior beings, like the ones depicted above.

If this is college, I can hardly wait to see what young adulthood and marriage will be like, let alone motherhood, and the types of friends my children will bring home from school with them; let alone the types I will probably be forced to be friendly with in my "community", for lack of any other company. If the outlook is so dismal, you may ask, why don't I just end it all now? I guess as long as I live, I will always hope that man will go through a mass awakening, and will at last become the sensitive, open-minded, and loving creature he was meant to be, rather than the selfish, lazy, boorish slob he is now. When I see what type of people we are forced to live side by side with in an institution like this one, I am not the least bit surprised that Ed Waddington took his own life. He must have felt the same sort of disillusionment that I often feel looking and listening to these sickening specimens of humanity. My condolences to his parents.

Rescheduled Final Exams

To The Editor:

In three of the courses I'm taking this fall the professors have decided to move up the final examination dates. Instead of holding these tests on the officially scheduled dates, (as listed in The Collegian), they have re-scheduled their finals for the last day of regular classes. This allows less time for study and review, as it eliminates the reading period and confuses the last days of regular class assignments with preparation for the final exams.

In order to allow enough time for proper study, I hope all professors will schedule final tests according to the official, published times.

You Betcha!

To The Editor:

It's wierd. For months, I thought I was getting obscene phone calls. When I picked up the receiver, I could have sworn I heard heavy breathing on the other end. But you know what I found out yesterday? I found out that it was my friend Lester all along. He was trying to say "hellow", but he kept stuttering. It's wierd.

Geraldine Page

Looney Tunes

To The Editor:

Two interesting quotes appeared in the MDC of Monday Nov. 26. The first was from some remarks John Mayall made at his Sunday night concert: "Sometimes we sound like shit....." The second was one of the quotes from the Band which have occasionally graced the Weather section of the Collegian this fall.

When Mayall read the Weather to the audience at Monday night's concert in the Cage he seemed perplexed that "At the still-Had my fill-An' I'm fit to kill" seemed to have nothing to do with rain or shine. And seemingly nothing to do with music.

Which all goes to show that although Mayall may know "shit", he obviously doesn't know Shinola. At least someone on the MDC staff does however, and that's been enough to brighten some pretty cloudy days.

"Holy smoke, well it ain't no joke."

More On McNamara

To The Editor:

Concerning the recent survey given in McNamara House, certain facts were left out.

(1) Every member of McNamara House is a voting member of the House Council. All (460) residents have equal say. If they don't know what's going on it's because they don't attend the house meeting or can't read. After all, the agenda and minutes of all the meetings are posted on every floor each week.

(2) Concerning knowledge of our leaders. How many of us know who our state senator or representative is? How many people know who their congressman is? The moderator in the house council is more of a parliamentarian than an administrator anyway.

(3) The question as to whether or not it is fair for forty people to make all the decisions concerning the dorm, the answer, it is not. But, we face the problem of realism not ideology. It's not that we restrict participation, it's that our quest for resident participation runs into constant frustration.

One last point. The survey seemed to have left out the most important question of all. Do you care what happens in McNamara? If you do our House Moderator is Scott Hankin, Vice Moderator, John McCarthy, House Treasurer, Joe Carter, and House Secretary, Deborah Partington. Meetings are held every Wednesday at 10:00 p.m. in the first floor lounge. If everyone cares, then all (460) residents should show up and if you think we have problems now, wait until you see 460 of us try to get into the lounge.

Daniel, Not Machiavelli

To The Editor:

On Friday you published a letter from Larry Ladd, headlined "Machiavellian Maneuver," which attacked me. I would like briefly to answer it.

1.) I did not demand the impeachment of SGA President Nick Apostola. I did, in a letter to Nick, "raise the question" that the Student Senate "might want to question his suitability" to continue in office.

2.) He and the Student Senate very graciously and decently invited me to appear before them on November 28. I accepted, appeared, read my letter to Nick, and proceeded to answer all questions that were directed to me. If I had to characterize my own performance, I feel that it was more like Daniel in the Lion's Den than Machiavelli in a smoke-filled room.

3.) As to my being a "chamelion" — last year I did fight — hard and openly — for a Rhetoric Requirement, because I felt that the current program was a vital part of a liberal education. For the past month I have been fighting — hard and openly — against a Rhetoric requirement. Between a year ago and now the report of the Campus Committee on Communications Skills appeared. Without questioning the hard work and good intentions of this Committee, I feel that the Rhetoric Program it envisages would not be an appropriate part of a liberal education. In fact, as I have publicly stated, I find the report contradictory and regressive. In short, I will continue to battle for what I believe to be the principles of a liberal education.

Speaking Out...

DON LUCE

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast journalist Don Luce's speech on the continuing war in Vietnam, taped during his visit at UMass last Tuesday.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mr. Luce's speech marks his first public statement on the war to an American audience, since his return from a month-long tour of war zone areas in North and South Vietnam.

A later segment of tonight's 60-minute program will offer editorial commentary on alternative Christmas gift-buying.

PROF JEFFRY KAPLOU

Professor Jerry Kaplou of the University of Paris will speak on "Aspects of French Working Class History, 1750-1850" at three p.m., Thursday, December 6th, in the sixth floor lounge of Herter Hall.

MS. CHRIS GEORGE

Ms. Chris George, a member of the Chicago based organization "Rising Up Angry" will be the speaker for a seminar sponsored by Everywoman's Center and the Committee on Poverty. Ms. George will speak on Tuesday, December 4 at 2:00 p.m. in Rm. 169 Campus Center. She will be speaking primarily about the collective experiences of Rising Up Angry, organizing women in working class neighborhoods, problems encountered in consciousness raising and some of the unique qualities of the oppression of women.

Rising Up Angry, centered around working women in Chicago, began with a newspaper in 1969. They were a small group of people interested in bringing the issues of the war, racism and sexism back to Chicago's working class neighborhoods.

Today the organization offers a free health clinic that is open 3 nights a week and handles approximately 125 patients a week. The group runs a legal services program that handles 60 cases a month.

ATASHI

Ziedan Atashi will speak on "The Role of Minority Communities in Israel" today at 8:00 p.m. in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College.

Atashi was born in the Druze village of Osifiya in 1940. As a young man he taught and worked in the Druze and Arab community. Later, he was appointed Deputy Director General of the Arab and Druze Youth Workers Movement.

Atashi, a Mideast expert and former member of the Political Science Faculty of Haifa University, now holds the post of consul with the Consulate General of Israel in New York.

PROF RICHARD FRYE

Professor Richard Frye of Harvard University will speak today at 5 p.m. on The Continuity of Motifs in Iranian Society, a lecture with slides, in the Sixth floor lounge of Herter. Professor Frye is Aga Khan professor of Iranian at Harvard and holds an appointment at the Asia Institute in Persia. The author of several books on Persian history and archaeology, Professor Frye has just returned from Iran where the archaelogical work was done at several ancient Iranian sites. The lecture is sponsered by the five college committee on Near Eastern studies.

YOGI BHAJAN

Yogi Bhajan, Master of Kundalini Yoga and Tantric Yoga, will speak on Thursday, December 6, at 7:30 p.m. in Engineering East Auditorium. This event is sponsored by Room to Move. The lecture is part of a three week tour of Eastern cities preceeding a ten-day course in Tantric Yoga which he will teach to a gathering of 500 people in Florida.

Yogi Bhajan, a professor at U.C.L.A. is the spiritual director of the 3HO Foundation, an international organization teaching and Kundalini Yoga in more than 108 cities throughout the United States, Canada and Europe. In the past four years Yogi Bhajan thas received much attention for his successful rehabilitation work with 150,000 drug-dependent young people and his efforts to restore to the women of America their inherent dignity and grace. He recently co-hosted Panorama, a daily television talk show in Washington, D.C., on which such diverse and controversial subjects as marital sex problems, long hair in the schools and Women's Lib were discussed.

Touring with Yogi Bhajan and playing a concert immediately after his lecture will be the Khalsa String Band, a group of musicians from the 3HO Foundation who recently finished recording their fourth album of contemporary music.

JAZZ WORKSHOP

The University Jazz Workshop-Small Ensemble, directed by Archie Shepp and Reggie Workman will present a lecture/demonstration Tuesday, December 4th, from 7-10 p.m. in Webster Lounge.

The concert is given in conjunction with "Anthology of African-American Music" a class taught by Workman. After group plays, they will discuss the performance with the audience.

This open communication is aimed at giving the listener a better understanding of how music is created in African-American idiom.

The Ensemble's repetoire includes pieces by Kenny Dorham, Duke Ellington, Thelonius Monk, Cal Massey, Benny Golson, Tadd Dameron, and Archie Shepp.

Archie Shepp has recorded under his own name on Impulse Records and has performed with Cecil Taylor and John Coltrane.

Reggie Workman has performed and recorded with many great Black musicians including John Coltrane, Yusef Lateef, and Art Blakey.

The concert is open to the public free of charge.

LAW CONFERENCE

The second annual law conference, "Before the Law," will be sponsored by the Legal Studies Program between January 14 and 25. The conference will draw together lawyers, students, university professors, members of the community and guests from outside the Five College area for discussions of a wide range of topics related to law. Student participants will be able to earn up to two credits for their work at the conference.

The two week schedule of events will be arranged in modules offering from one-sixth to 1 credit each. Students may combine these modules in any way for a total of two credits or may participate on a non-credit basis. Each course is limited to an enrollment of 15 students. They include: Law, Science and Ethics; Filming the Legal Process; Law in Literature; Public Interest Lawyers; Contemporary Theories of Justice; Land Use Planning; Capitalism and Prostitution; Union Organizing; Court Watching; A Day In The Life Of A Legislator.

Registration for students will be held at the Legal Studies Office in 112 Hampshire House on Wednesday, December 5, at 2:30 p.m. Additional opportunities for the first-come, first serve signup will be on Thursday from 12:30-5 and Friday from 10-5. A five dollar registration fee will be charged to cover the costs of materials. Materials describing the course offerings, times, and other aspects of the conference will be available beginning Wednesday at 112 Hampshire House.

PLAY TRYOUTS

Tryouts for the Roister Doisters' winter production of five one-act plays by contemporary playwrights will be held Wednesday, December 5, from 4:00-7:00 in CC Rm. 811, and from 7:00-11:00 in Rm. 805; Thursday and Friday, December 6 and 7, from 7:00-11:00 in Rms. 805 & 811; and on Saturday, December 8, from 1:00-5:00 in Rm. 101. Tryouts are open to the public; rehearsals will begin Jan. 2 and run through Intersession. Performances will be held in Bowker Auditorium on the first weekend of the spring semester. The plays being produced are Almost Like Being and I'm Really Here by Jean-Claude Van Itallie, Chicago by Sam Shepard, Muzeeka by John Guare, and Waiting for the Electrician or Someone Like Him by the Firesign Theatre. Scripts are available on two-hour loan in the main Theater Dept. office in 401 Machmer.

STUDENT LOBBY ANNUAL ASSEMBLY

MASS. STUDENT LOBBY TO HOLD FIRST ANNUAL ASSEMBLY. On Saturday, Dec. 8, at 1:00 p.m., students from across the state are meeting at Faneuil Hall in Boston for the first assembly of the Massachusetts Student Lobby.

The assembly culminates a years organizational effort by an ad hoc group of high school, college, and graduate students from across the state. The basic structure agreed upon calls for a statewide network of Campus Lobbying Units, whose activities will be co-ordinated by a Boston office. The Boston office will be staffed by student interns.

The Lobby has already had initial success on Beacon Hill. Because of its efforts, a quarter of a million dollars in additional work study funds will be available to student interns. The Lobby expects to concentrate primarily on educational issues.

STUDENT GRANTS

Students still have time to apply for some of the $122.1 million that is available in the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants program for the 1973-74 school year.

Basic Grants, which are funded by the U.S. Office of Education, are available to first-time students who began their post-high school education or training after July 1, 1973, on a full-time basis. These grants can be used at any eligible institution including regular colleges, universities, community or junior colleges, vocational or technical schools, and hospital schools of nursing -- both public and private, profit and non-profit.

Grants are based on a formula which takes into account the cost of tuition, fees, room, board, books, supplies, and incidental expenses, and the amount the student and his or her family can contribute.

John Ottina, U.S. Commissioner of Education said, "Money that students receive under this program is free and clear; it is not a loan that has to be paid back."

Students may obtain an application form for a Basic Grant through their financial aid officer or guidance counselor, or by writing to Box G, Iowa City, Iowa 52240.

Campus Carousel

By TONY GRANITE

THE NEWEST COED INTRAMURAL SPORT is gaining such popularity on the west coast that, at one campus, more than 120 teams are active.

The game is innertube polo and the campus is UCal at Davis.

Inspired by its success at Davis, ten teams are being formed at Fresno State, where two leagues are planning competitive play.

We read about it in Fresno State's Insight.

DEMISE OF STUDENT GOVERNMENT at Georgetown U. is being urged by the editors of Voice, the student newspaper.

In a recent editorial, the editors described SG as an "anachronism."

"SG has degenerated into an ineffective nonentity...designed as a forum for student opinion, now spends 40 minutes debating the relative price of cookies...What is needed now is the courage and integrity to admit the bankruptcy of the current structure and to move to abolish it."

The alternative, Voice says, is a Student Union, "By nature a service — oriented association of all students at a university...supported by mandatory student subscriptions and governed by a multi-member board...The whole structure is deliberately anti-politico, pro-student. It is kept loose so that it does not become a closed clique."

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears over an obituary appearing in the St. Bonaventure U. Bona Venture: "Multi--talented athlete passes to big stadium in the sky."

ENGINEERING SCHOOL TO CLOSE is the banner headline in a recent issue of the UDenver Clarion. Lack of students and unavailability of funds to upgrade the unit and modernize it were given as reasons.

The College of Engineering had been operating at an annual deficit of $250,000, with insufficient federal funds to subsidize private universities. Closing date is June 1975.

Commitment to the Consumer

Store Manager/Hadley

Get acquainted with Stop & Shop's consumer representative...
YOUR STORE MANAGER

The manager of your Stop & Shop has always played an important role in the Stop & Shop Consumer Program, increasingly so since the establishment in 1967 of our first Consumer Advisory Board — a trailblazing effort in consumer relations — at South Plainfield, New Jersey.

In the six years since, Stop & Shop's Consumer Board program has grown to 35 boards in six states, from Maine to New Jersey.

The 700 members of those boards represent consumers of every age, economic situation and living style. Each and every one of them has something to say, to us and about us... when they say it, the Stop & Shop manager is listening.

Besides participating in the Consumer Board program, the Store Manager may conduct a tour of his store for a class from the local schools or groups. One regular duty is to check that his "Shopper's Corner" bulletin board is covered with useful consumer information.

Backing the Manager is our headquarters staff, including the Consumer Affairs Department. In future columns, we will be sharing the Store Manager's "know-how" and "how-to" with you.

As one of our Store Managers put it at a recent Consumer Board meeting:

"My customers know that today's food situation has no simple solutions and they ask me to talk straight. I'd like to do the same with you."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Response continues to come in regarding persons born on the 22nd of any month. The tendency is direct, definite that persons born on that date are on their own at a relatively early age or have lost one of their parents. Why this should be so, I do not pretend to know. However, over the years, I have found this to be true.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could be recipient of special assignment or honor connected with club, group, institution. Plainly, the indications are for greater recognition. Key is to work quietly, to be discreet, to avoid extravagant claims.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New friends, experiences are featured. Love is in picture and so is your ability to express. Your wishes, to a great extent, come true. This is not a make-believe, Alice-in-Wonderland situation, but it is a time when Prince Charming and Cinderella seem close to lifelike.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Intuitive intellect is featured. Some domestic problems may be blown up out of proportion. Know it and be mature. Your pride now could be sensitive. But you also have a responsibility — you can fulfill it with aplomb.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis is on movement, expansion, travel and enlightenment. Your horizons expand. You seem able to understand what, in recent past, was a puzzle. Some bitterness evaporates. Your draw to you one who confides. You also are on the way to winning popularity contest!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work at steady pace. Don't worry about "other person." Do what you have to do, in your own way and in thorough manner. Your innate skills surface. Your style will be appreciated by those who recognize quality.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Exchange ideas. Welcome stimulating challenge, especially from opposite sex. Gemini individual could figure prominently. Listen, observe and file information. By maintaining low profile, you could build head of steam. Let others make mistakes by showing their hands.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be talking about moving — you may also be considering problem of family member. But you also should consider your own health, personal and work requirements. If you have been sitting in a draft, do something about it. You have a legitimate right to comfort.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some changes are quick — you may feel that something is being put over on you. Key is to perceive and delineate. Make no charges. Surface indications now are apt to be deceptive. Question Pisces, Virgo individuals. You'll get honest answers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Practical issues and hard dollars dominate. Organize. Get priorities in order. Deal with experienced persons. Don't accept substitutes for quality. Experiment but don't be gullible. Try for the best — in material, personal efforts, product. Money is very much in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What has been nagging, hanging on, can be dealt with and that is what you should do — put foot down. If relative insists on exploiting foolish situtation, call bluff. You are stronger than might be apparent on surface.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New approach makes money. If you are too timid, opportunity flits away. Leo individual figures prominently. Highlight independence, determination to move at right time. Means don't be punch-shy. Your own offensive is an equal match to anything on the market.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You know what you should do and you should not be "talked out of it." Aquarian might make alarming statements. Heed your own counsel. Right now, your cycle is at peak and your intuition is working overtime. Rely on you!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have humor and ambition and, possibly, a weight problem. September was probably your most significant month of 1973. You are versatile, artistic, creative and a fine teacher. You travel and learn. You are going to be fulfilled. You will be rid of burden — very soon.

Attention All Students
January Break Information

The energy crisis is here!

In order to facilitate the conservation of energy, the University of Massachusetts-Amherst will be taking the following steps to cut back on energy use during the January break period (December 22, 1973 - January 27, 1974). Your cooperation is vital since we must achieve an average yearly reduction of 15 percent in our energy consumption for heating purposes.

DORMITORIES:
ALL dorms (except Prince) will be CLOSED, LOCKED, and will have the heat reduced to 50 degrees from DECEMBER 22 through noon January 6; no one may reside in dorms during this period; no exceptions.
ALL dorms except Prince, Mackimmie, Patterson, and the Central Residence Area will remain CLOSED, LOCKED, and will have the heat reduced to 50 degrees from: noon January 6 through JANUARY 13.
ALL dorms will reopen for students with VALID ACADEMIC REASONS from noon on January 13 through January 27.

If it is ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL for you to be housed any time during this period of December 21 through January 13, arrangements will be made for you in the Campus Center or suitable alternate (at no charge) by applying at the DEAN OF STUDENTS OFFICE (227 Whitmore) by Friday, December 7.

Requests will be honored for the following prioritized reasons:
1. student teachers (certified by the School of Education)
2. recognized athletic teams (approved by the Athletic Department)
3. too distant homes (foreign or distant states)
4. jobs (at the University or in the area)
5. research that cannot be neglected
6. no home (legally independent)

Notification of approval of the application for housing (December 22 through January 13) will be mailed to students by campus mail on December 11.

Anyone wishing to be housed in their dorm room from January 14 through January 27 for VALID ACADEMIC REASONS may do so by making arrangements with their Head of Residence or Resident Director.

HEALTH SERVICES:
Because of married students, international students, and those students who now consider Amherst their permanent residence, the University Health Services will remain open from December 22nd through the January Intersession.

The hours will be: Monday thru Friday 8:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon; 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

These hours are for routine patient care. We will be open 24 hours a day for emergency service.

DINING COMMONS:
Four Dining Commons will be closed with minimal use of utilities expected. Temperatures will be reduced to 55 degrees.

Worcester Snack Bar and one Munchy will operate on a cash basis from 7:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. daily. Whitmore Snack Bar hours will not change.

All Dining Commons will reopen Monday, January 28, 1974.

+++CAMPUS CENTER:
The following schedule is planned to conserve maximum energy:
1. Completely closed December 22, 1973 through December 25, 1973.
2. Completely closed December 29, 1973 through January 1, 1974.
3. Open December 26, 1973 through December 28, 1973 from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. No food service will be available.
4. Starting January 2, 1974 and continuing until the end of intersession, operations will be at a reduced level to cover conference commitments and extensive project work.

+++This schedule may be modified depending on the number of students authorized to stay in the hotel portion.

PHYSICAL PLANT:
When the final examination period ends, Physical Plant will immediately begin reducing ventilation and heating in most dormitories, Dining Commons and Campus Center facilities and other campus buildings as directed. These buildings will be under surveillance by maintenance personnel.

CENTRAL RESIDENTIAL AREA:
The Central Residential Area will be closed, locked and have the heat reduced to 50 degrees from December 22nd through noon of January 6th. Any student who must be housed on campus during this time should follow the guidelines under "Dormitories". From noon of January 6th through January 27th Central will open for those participating in the Area's "Fine and Lively Arts Program" (verified by registration). If you plan to stay in your dorm during this period, please SIGN UP with your Head of Residence by Friday, December 14th.

Bruins Get Back On Winning Track

BOSTON (AP) - Bobby Orr set up the initial goal with a hard slap shot and then scored on Boston's 28th power play tally of the season Sunday night in sparking the Bruins to a 5-3 National Hockey League victory over the New York Islanders.

The Islanders, who came out with the heavy hitting, were outskated by the Bruins, who extended their unbeaten streak to 10 games, 9-0-1 after being held to a tie in Chicago last Wednesday.

The Bruins jumped in front as Freddie O'Donnell scored with a backhander of a rebound on Orr's slap shot at 7:54 of the first period. Then Orr struck for his 13th goal, sixth on a power play, while the Islanders were shorthanded at 19:35.

Don Marcotte, Phil Esposito, and Ken Hodge also scored for Boston.

NOT RESTING BUT thinking is UMass Russ Chateauneuf, in his bout with Yale's Roger Morrow. Thought for the day: Do I pin him or pound him? The answer: Pound him, 8-4.

Plunket Paces Patriots Past Pacific Patsies

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Jim Plunkett passed to Randy Vataha for the go-ahead touchdown and then scored twice himself on short runs Sunday in leading the New England Patriots to a 30-14 National Football League victory over the hapless San Diego Chargers.

Plunkett reversed his role from goat to hero quickly after the Chargers had stormed to a 14-3 second period lead by capitalizing on New England miscues.

With time running out in the first half, Plunkett passed the Patriots downfield. Then, on third down and 10 with just 21 seconds left, he hit Vataha, his old Stanford buddy on a 14-yard scoring toss that put the Patriots in front to stay en route to their third victory in a row.

Plunkett dove one yard for a touchdown in the third period and then ran three yards for an insurance score midway through the final quarter. The Patriots survived a virtual contest of errors in the first half, which was marked by five turnovers.

Jeff White booted an 11-yard field goal late in the first period before the Chargers bounced back.

Floyd Rice, a linebacker hit Plunkett hard, forcing a fumble. Rice picked up the loose ball and ran 51 yeards for a touchdown at 4:12 of the second period. Plunkett actually was an innocent victim of the rules on a play which set up San Diego's second touchdown. John Tarver had a pass in his hands, but could not hang on as he started to run and the ball was picked off by San Diego's Doug Wilkerson at the New England 34. After an official ruling of a pass interception, the Chargers went in for a touchdown, Robert Holmes scoring on a one-yard smash.

Then the Patriots came alive. Little Mack Herron took the ensuing kickoff at the New England eight and sprinted 92 yards for a touchdown. Herron outran former Big Ten champion Ron Smith in returning the first kickoff for a touchdown by New England since 1962.

The loss left the chargers with a 2-9-1 record. The Patriots, hoping for a .500 season, are 5-7 with two games remaining.

Maine Swimmers Stun UMass

By MDC STAFF

The UMass swim team fell to a strong Maine team 81-30 in Orono Saturday in their opener. The Black Bears, which accumulated nine of 12 first places in the meet, set five school records and 2 pool marks in the process.

UMass' performance was highlighted by the efforts of three freshmen. Ben Crooker, an Amherst High graduate, set a new school record in the 1,000 Freestyle with a time of 11:19.053 - demolishing the previous record by 50 seconds.

Dave Boucher, a freshmen from Seekonk, came within 3-10 of a second of the UMass record on his way to a 2:28.8 victory in the 200 breaststroke.

Duncan Loomis, a second semester frosh from Attleboro, swam the most exciting event of the day, as he won the 200 individual medley. He beat one of Maine's top swimmers with a time of 2:12.6, winning by 21-100 of a second.

The 400 freestyle relay was won by the UMass team of Ron Boucher, Spencer Sullivan, Dick Blaisdell, and Loomis with an overall time of 3:35.7.

Blaisdell and Joe Hebert took seconds in the 50 freestyle and 200 butterfly, respectively.

The 14 man team took on Maine without any divers, which guaranteed Maine an 18 point lead at the start.

Coach Bay Melamed, a two-time Olympian and last year's Israeli Olympic coach, believes the most important goal of the team is that each individual improves his own time. He was optimistic about the future of the team, citing the work of the freshmen. Assistant coach Larry Lammert, a swimmer from Indiana University, thought the team benefited from the meet. "Many swimmers who had never swam a meet before had a chance to prove to themselves the validity of our workouts and criticisms," he said.

AROUND THE POOL- The swim team takes on Wesleyan in the Boyden Pool on Wednesday at 4:00 p.m. The swim team's next three meets are at home. After the Wesleyan meet, it takes on W.P.I. on December 11, and then Holy Cross on December 15.

Managers Chief Topic For Baseball Owners

HOUSTON (AP) - Baseball's annual winter meetings open Monday, and for a change the spotlight won't be totally on the trading action. It will be on who will manage whom.

AL President Joe Cronin has summoned the Detroit Tigers and New York Yankees to a hearing Wednesday to discuss which team Manager Ralph Houk is working for. After that, the Yankees will meet with the Oakland A's and decide which team Manager Dick Williams works for.

Houk wants to manage the Tigers and the Yankees would like Williams as a replacement. That's fine with everybody except Oakland owner Charles O. Finley, who is balking at letting Williams out of the last three years of his contract unless the Yankees compensate the A's with some players.

JV Hoopsters Bomb Rockwood In Opener

By STEVE SARACENO

Not every coach making his debut last Saturday night at the Cage lost.

In the basketball game directly preceding Satch's unsuccessful indoctrination, Coach Chuck Olsen upped his life-time record to 1-0 as his JV squad whomped Rockwood Academy, 87-41.

The UMass fast break ran away with the game after the first five minutes. Center Arnie Johnson (13 points, 12 rebounds) continually hit Bill Santos and Dave Tewhill on fly patterns that left the Rockwood defenders wondering what sport they were playing. Tewhill scored two touchdowns (12 points) and Santos led all UMass scorers with 16 points.

Rockwood lost by more points than they scored, and the 46 point difference was due in much part to their meager 29 per cent shooting from the floor and incredible 39 per cent from the foul line. Even Rockwood's Jim Wilson, high scorer for the game with 24 points, hit only 9 of 23 field goal attempts and was under 50 per cent from the line.

UMass was as superb as Rockwood was horrendous at shooting. The Minutemen, accurate as heat-sensored ICBMs, hit 55 per cent from the floor and 88 per cent on freebies.

While shooting indisputably played an important factor. playing was almost equally responsible for the final outcome.

Santos, Tewhill, Johnson, and the Mikes, Reedy and Healy (both with 8 points), produced fine setups of teammates and each other. The most specatcular was a blind pass by Tewhill as he was falling out of bounds to a waiting Santos under the basket. The junior Minutemen piled up 24 assists while Rockwood was able to muster up a sum total of two.

(Staff Photo/Dan Smith)

Bill Endicott strikes a classic pose as he tries to manuever past Ken Wolfe. Although the Harvard defense was tenacious, Endicott moved over and around the Crimson, clicking for 24 points in the process.

The victory was as overwhelming as the statistics say...maybe even more. Fittingly, the buzzer-shot by Rockwood was devastatingly stuffed back into the shooter's face.

Coach Olsen puts his undefeated lifetime-career coaching record on the line next Wednesday night at St. Anselms.

Trackers Trap Bears, 66-52

By SCOTT HAYES

One thing is certain after Saturday's 66-52 track win over Maine. The UMass Indoor Track team can do no worse than last year's 1-4 record. In fact, the team looked impressive in its victory at Orono.

Devin Croft led a sweep of the 1,000-yard run that gave UMass the lead for the first time in the meet, and enabled the Minutemen to come out on top of the exciting contest.

Croft ran his fastest time ever in winning the 1,000. He was timed in 2:14.8 while teammate Mike Gillen took second with a time of 2:15.9. Freshman Jim Hunt captured third to complete the only sweep of the day.

Other individual winners for UMass included Bob Adamson, freshman Scott Herman, Barron Littlefield, Curt Stegerwald, and Tom Wilson.

Bob and Ken Adamson were called on to perform the "iron man" trick, running the 60-yard and competing in the long and triple jumps. Bob took first in the long jump and Ken captured third in the dash. Ken won the long jump with a jump of 22'11 3/4" on his last attempt.

Scott Herman's throw of 45'1" was good for another first as the weightmen came up with some important points and broke up a group of strong Maine performers. Tom Lonergan took third in the shot, an event in which less than a foot separated the top four throws.

Barron Littlefield won the 600-yard run in 1:13.9 and Curt Stegerwald ran the high hurdles in 7.7 to win the event.

Tom Wison won the two-mile with a time of 9:08.4. Wilson led a group of runners that battled Maine to a 9-9 standoff in the distance events. John Scheer ran a fine race in the mile, completing the event in 4:20.8.

Going into the final two events of the day the score was 56-52, and the pressure was on the two relay teams. As it turned out, the underclassmen came through and UMass swept the final two relays and clinched the meet.

Larry and Tom Beland, Barron Littlefield and Curt Stegerwald combined to win the mile relay in 3:26.2 while Peter Byron, Weeden Wetmore, Francis O'Keefe and Ted Bussiere hitched up to take the two-mile relay in 8:02.2.

In the mile relay, Curt Stegerwald received the baton only one stride ahead of Jim Van Peursen of Maine. Van Peursen pulled even with Stegerwald on the final leg of the relay, but Stegerwald was able to fight off the challenge and clinch a victory for the Minutemen.

Coach Ken O'Brien expalined that the performances of the weightmen were important to the victory. Bob Bocash was able to garner third in the weight throw. O'Brien stated that the win was a "good team effort", one in which many of the team members had to compete in more than one event.

Lowe Award To Espo

BOSTON (AP) — Junior tailback Mike Esposito, Boston College's all-time leading ground-gainer, was named winner of the 35th annual George Bulger Lowe Award Sunday as New England's outstanding college football player in 1973.

Esposito shattered BC records this season, carrying 244 times for 1,291 yards and scoring 17 touchdowns. In just two seasons, the flash from Wilmington, Mass., has carried 426 times for 2,219 yards, both BC records.

Esposito will receive the Lowe Award at the Gridiron Club of Greater Boston's annual dinner Dec. 11 at Fantasia Restaurant in Cambridge.

Wrestlers Nip Yale

handled the duties for UMass and recorded a fall at 3:20.)

The 158 pound bout saw Yale's Marty Swarz best Cliff Blom, 12-7, in one of the evening's most exciting matches. Schwartz is a headlock specialist and that generally means four or five points when it is used correctly and he used it correctly a few times. The other times though he was taken down by Blom and ridden out fairly well. Blom incurred an injury with 21 seconds in the bout remaining and in the process of incurring it fell too far behind to catch up. Captain Steve Benson continued his dominance over Yale's Jamie McEwan with a big 19-9 decision. Behind 7-1 at one point, Benson decided to let go with a barrage of mat work and hit McEwan with everything but the locker room door (four near falls, three takedowns, a reversal).

Another Frosh in the person of Robin Osborne scored a methodical 5-2 victory over senior Tim Harper and put the Minutemen on the board the last time. At 190 UMass ran into the meat of Yale's lineup as John Connolly got caught in a cradle in the second period and pinned by Neil Brendel, fourth in the EIWA last year. UP to that point it looked like Connolly would push Bredel to exhaustion as he hustled him from the first whistle.

If every UMass needed a break, some prayers, a Presidential pardon - it was at heavyweight. The score stood 19-15; a pin for Yale would win it, a tie or a win and UMass would be 2-0. For Yale, at heavy-defending Eastern Champ, Senior Tim Karpoff. For UMass untested freshman Dennis Fenton. You see, Karpoff was supposed to go out and wrap Dennis up and call it an evening- just like that. Instead he had to settle for a bout where he couldn't hold Fenton down, couldn't take him down and by the third period found himself a little angry at having to fend off Fenton's advances. Karpoff won 8-2, but it meant nothing to him. To UMass it was the best start of a long season.

PIN POINTS DiObilda, Reynolds, Benson, and Osborne finished the day at 2-0...Ast. Coach Mike Welch's charges bested Yale JV's 25-15 and UConn 48-6 with Eric Ruth and Wayne Stofko going undefeated on the day.....

Notice

The intramural co-rec swim meet will be held Monday night (7 p.m.) Dec. 3 at the Boyden pool. Spectators are welcome.

Gymnasts Vault Over Yale

By MDC STAFF

Coach Tom Dunn went into Syracuse expecting a pretty close gymnastics meet. And when he came away, he wasn't disappointed. It was indeed a close one going into the final event, but UMass came away with a comfortable win, 156.4 to 154.8.

Actually, as it ended up, the meet was a matter of who lost the meet rather than who won it as both teams faltered on the last event - the high bar. UMass had a half point lead going into that event and didn't really perform well. But Syracuse was even less impressive.

UMass won the meet on the strength of their all-around men - Gene Whelan, Bill Brouillet, and Steve Scuderi who combined for over 150 points.

Syracuse had strong specialists, winning or tying four of the six events.

UMass took a .45 lead after the first event - floor exercise behind the clean and dynamic floor routines thrown by Whelan and Brouillet. Good Pommel horse routines were thrown by senior co-captian Rich Seikunas and Scuderi for scores of 8.5 and 8.3. However the other horsemen did not fare so well and Syracuse closed the gap to .3 points.

Syracuse dominated the still rings event even though Whelan and Brouillet also did fine routines here. But Syracuse took a .10 lead in the meet.

Jack Fabbricante showed great poise as he hit a difficult vault for a 9.2. This combined with co-captain Jay Thomsen's 8.9 and Whelan's 9.05 put UMass back in front with a .2 lead.

Whelan, Brouillet, and Scuderi led the Minutemen in the parallel bar event, picking up .3 points and widening the team lead to .5 points going into the last event.

Although UMass' high bar routines were not that great, Dan Barter's first varsity routine for an 8:05; Scuderi (8.95) Brouillet (8.3) Whelan (8.5) -- Syracuse fell far shorter than that. They had scores of 8.7 and 9.1, but after that the next man had a miserable 6.8.

Hoopsters Snatch Glory From Satch

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Tom Sanders, greeted like a conquering hero in a thunderous pre-game ovation, overstayed his welcome and saw his coaching debut ruined by a group of determined, defense-minded Minutemen to the tune of 74-65 Saturday night at the Cage.

The Sanders-coached Crimson from Harvard lived up to their preseason billings by playing tenacious defense that, except for a four-minute lapse, allowed the Ivies to keep pace with the Minutemen.

But midway through the second half, leading 40-35 and pulling away, Harvard mysteriously stopped executing. UMass took full advantage of the temporary lapse and four minutes later found themselves in control with a 49-42 lead. The remainder of the contest was academic, with the UMass full-court press destroying any chance of a Crimson comeback.

All they could do was stand and watch as Al Skinner put on a show for the capacity crowd at the Cage. Skinner hit for 24 points and collected 12 rebounds at the Minutemen came up with a 74-65 opening-game victory.

Sanders rationalized his team's demise by saying, "Our defense was tough until a shot was taken. After that we weren't getting in position to rebound or prevent the offensive follow-up. That lasted for about four minutes."

That was all the time the Minutemen needed to grab the initiative. Al Skinner and Bill Endicott netted 24 points apiece and led the way to a 52.1 accuracy mark in field goal shooting for UMass.

The Minutemen also destroyed Harvard on the boards, gathering in 46 rebounds to 31 for the Crimson, including a 20-10 advantage in the first half.

But the night belonged to the defense. Using both a man-to-man press and a 1-3-1 trap in the corner zone, the Minutemen out-hustled Harvard into submission.

Consider the job done on Tony Jenkins. The Crimson's leading scorer with 21 on the night, Jenkins netted 15 of his total in the first half. In the final twenty minutes the 6'8" center was shut out from the field and could collect only six points from the free throw line.

UMass coach Jack Leaman credited "better team defense" for stopping Jenkins in the second stanza. "Everybody was helping out and the zone worked well when we used it," he said.

The press also played a major role in the victory. "We pressed in the second half to get things moving," Leaman remarked. "We thought they were slowing the game down too much and the press helped us to speed things up."

The only other double-figure scorer for Harvard was Lou Silver who finished with 13, all in the second half. Arnie Needleman, Mike Griffin, and Ken Wolfe collected eight points apiece in the losing cause.

John Murphy finished with 13 points for the Minutemen, although two of them came by way of a gift. In the course of the action Murphy grabbed an offensive rebound, went up with the following shot, and was fouled. The referee, in his haste to report the infraction to the scorers table, turned his back to the play and did not see the ball roll around the hoop and fall out. The ref signaled for two, nobody complained, and that was that.

The Crimson got on the scoreboard first as the result of a pre-game technical foul by Al Skinner for dunking the ball during warm-ups.

The Minutemen travel to St. Anselms' on Wednesday night for their next encounter. St. A's also won their opening tilt this weekend as they overcame a 14 point deficit to beat Springfield 76-71.

Minutemen Iced By Merrimack

By BILL BALLOU

UMass showed a vastly superior defense, but vastly inferior offense as compared to Wednesday's season opener, and the result was just the same--a four goal loss.

It was a 5-1 defeat Saturday night at Merrimack, and the Warriors showed why they're the early season choice to take the Division II championship.

They totally dominted the young Minutemen, outshooting them 28-16, and shutting them out for the final fifty minutes of the game.

The UMass goal was scored by John Muse, who hit on a one-on-one break after taking a pass from linemate Kevin Conners. Muse's goal, his second of the season, gave the Minutemen their only lead of the game.

But the lead didn't even make it to the end of the first period as Merrimack's Randy Cole got two, the second of which was disputed. UMass goaltender Chick Rheault was knocked down outside the UMass net by a Merrimack forward and he contended that there should have been an interference call. There wasn't and Cole came from behind the net to slip it into the open cage.

Rheault, seeing his first game action since February, showed signs of his old brilliance, but also showed some rust. However, none of the Merrimack goals could be considered cheap.

He cerainly had more help in front of him than Jeff McReynolds and John Binkoski did Wednesday. The 28 shots Merrimack, a fine offensive team, took was nowhere near the 52 Salem State had.

The defense was helped by the play of Mike Ellis, who had been feared lost because of a wrist injury. He played in pain, but played. To replace Dave Alesandroni, who injured his shoulder in the season opener, Jack Canniff gave fifth defenseman Bill Mintiens a regular shift and brought up Dave Keough. Mintiens played well.

Unfortunately the offense was so weak as to be almost non-existant.

The Minutemen had almost no good scoring chances after Muse's goal, despite having several power plays. The Warriors back-checked them to death and when they did have some room their passes went awry or their shots were blocked. Worst of all was the second period when they could only manage three shots on goal.

INCIDENTALLY: Randy Cole has a brother, Scott, who also plays for Merrimack....Talk around the arena was about how the Warriors could ever have lost, 3-2, to AIC....The new Merrimack arena is beautiful, but the ice was soft and sloppy....The JV's impressed in the preliminary, winning 6-1....

Wrestlers Edge Yale, 19-18

By JOHN BOCK

To those wrestling fans with a weak heart and-or a tendency to become highly anxious over the sport: lay in a supply of your favorite nerve medicine if you think that the rest of the season will be as tight as the beginning.

To those who have not heard, the UMass grapplers edged Yale University 19-18 in a down-to-the-last-bout match on Saturday evening in Boyden Auxiliary gym. The match was the third part of a triangular that saw the University of Connecticut go home without scoring a point against UMass or Yale. In two yawners the Minutemen demolished the Huskies 48-0, while Yale handed them a 42-6 shellacking (the six points came as Yale forfeited the 118 pound bout.)

The real excitement came in the evening bout that saw a Yale team loaded with veterans face a young Minuteman (5 freshmen) squad. Yale forfeited 118 to UMass' Gene DiObilda, who also had it easy in his debut against UConn as he clamped his man early in the second period.

Larry Reynold's match was nip and tuck with Bill Gamper and it wasn't until late in the match that Reynolds went ahead to win, 4-3. The 134 pound bout saw frosh Bob Schab come off the mark with a quick takedown and look like he was going to control the bout, but drop a 5-4 riding time decision to Yale's Dave Horn.

Russell Chateauneuf, coming into his first varsity match since winning the New Englands in 1972, cleaned house on Roger Morrow. Chateauneuf had a slight bit of trouble on his feet but wrapped his man in a very deliberate cradle in the second period and then get a takedown and near fall in the third for the final 8-4 decision. Freshman Steve Jabaut really had his work cut out for him as he met Yale's Jim Bennett - possibly their best wrestler. Bennett was a Pennsylvania High School State Champ, had a year's experience on Jabaut and came out with some very sophisticated takedowns, but Jabaut was no slouch either and countered most very nicely and threw in a few of his own. In the end, though, it was conditioning that won it for Bennett, 10-5. (In the afternoon bout at 150 Sean Cronin

Smilin' Satch

"You know," said Tom Sanders, "I really didn't expect the reception I got. But I didn't have any problems relating to it. I kind of fit in well with the youth." He smiled, the press smiled. It seemed that everyone who came in contact with the "Satch" on Saturday night at the Cage smiled.

If you were not at the UMass-Harvard game the reception Sanders speaks of left the 5,000 who jammed their way in an emotional mass. Sanders did not react outwardly, it's not his manner. His gait was slow, methodical. All that was missing were the bandaged knees, his head wrapped in a towel and of course the green uniform.

"It certainly was a nice place to play in," he said in referring to the Cage. "But it would have been more enjoyable if we had won." The record will stand that Harvard lost to UMass, 74-65, thus spoiling Sanders' debut as a coach. But the atmosphere in the Crimson lockerroom after the game depicted anything other than that of a loser.

Sanders had been smooth in his initial coaching assignment. And for the first time in who knows how long Harvard basketball played as a team, set up plays, played defense, had patience and in general gave the Minutemen all they could handle in their first outting.

"All that separated us from them," analyzed Sanders, "was one four minute stretch midway in the second half." That was when UMass went from five back (40-35) to seven in front (49-42). "We made the same mistakes that I've seen professionals make who've been in the game ten years. We didn't block out, we hurried out shots. And when you do that you pay the price."

Not only has Sanders apparently transformed the image of Harvard basketball on the court, but he has also made basketball a more meaningful experience for his athletes. "He's just tremendous," said Tony Jenkins who scored 21 points and hid in the publicity shadow of James Brown and Floyd Lewis for two years.

"He's given me a golden opportunity to learn the fundamentals of the game. He's a great teacher and I'm just lucky to be under his tutelage." It was expected that Sanders would put his team through a grind they've never witnessed before. "We practice three hours a day, six days a week," related Jenkins. Yes, a grind.

"He just makes for a better team effort. He's so beneficial to us. Everyday he critiques my game which allows me to develop my skills."

Ken Wolfe is a guard who played second fiddle last year to another publicity-oriented stud, Jim Fitzsimmons. But Saturday night he combined with Mike Griffin to not only control the Harvard show but stick a few Minutemen with doses of fundamental defense.

"Coach Sanders is a great man," Wolfe said, his face a picture of total respect. "He not only has a great knowledge of the game, but he's such a great person that we want to go out and perform for him."

Harvard on paper is not as physically talented as last year's team. "Thank God," smiled Al Skinner who gyrated his springy self to 24 points and a dozen rebounds. "If Sanders had James Brown and Floyd Lewis to work with they'd be some kind of team."

When Sanders took the job as coach he did get phone calls from Bob Cousy, Bill Sharman, Bill Russell, the Jones boys, etc. Tom Heinsohn and Red Auerbach were even seen at his practices. "They didn't exactly speak to me about basketball," he said. "As a matter of fact they told me I had lost my marbles."

You look at Sanders and realize that last year at this time he was still playing professional basketball. He denies that he practices with his team although it appears that he would be the toughest man a Tony Jenkins would have to contend with this season.

"No chance," he smiled. "I'm not going to give him an opportunity to crush my ego." Everyone smiled.

White House Will Turn Over Milk Fund Data

by MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House has decided to surrender to a federal judge a bundle of documents in the milk fund case, including a tape recording of a key meeting between President Nixon and top administration officials, government lawyers said Monday.

Irwin Goldblum, the Justice Department attorney in the case, said the turnover could come as early as Tuesday. But he added that the White House continues to claim the materials are protected by executive privilege and will ask U.S. District Judge William B. Jones to keep the documents secret.

The materials were demanded by consumer advocate Ralph Nader in a civil suit charging that the Nixon administration raised milk price supports in 1971 in exchange for more than $200,000 in secret contributions from the dairy industry to the Nixon re-election campaign.

The tape would be the first to be released not related directly to Watergate.

The tape is of a White House meeting on March 23, 1971 that is one day after the dairy industry made the first of many secret contributions to the campaign and two days before the administration reversed a 13-day-old decision not to increase the federal support price for milk.

Nader lawyers have said that meeting appeared to be a critical one in the abrupt policy change which by industry estimates was worth some $300 million to $700 million to the nation's dairy farmers.

In the morning, Nixon and his top agricultural and economic advisers met with dairy industry representatives to discuss the support program. There are conflicting reports about whether a tape of that meeting in the Cabinet Room of the White House exists.

That same afternoon, the President met with domestic-affairs adviser John D. Ehrlichman, Agriculture Secretary Clifford Hardin, Budget Director George P. Shultz and perhaps some other aides.

Evidence already made public in the case shows that some of Nixon's aides knew of the dairy industry's pledge of large contributions at the time.

But Hardin has sworn he changed his mind on the price support increase solely because of new economic evidence brought to his attention. Shultz has said he switched because of congressional pressure that threatened to increase milk supports by even more than the administration finally granted.

Sources said some 68 other documents turned up in an exhaustive file search in the White House and various government agencies also will be turned over to the judge with the request that they be withheld.

The Mysterious Case Of The Teacher Award

By SHELLEY M. LAUZON

One of the many mysteries at UMass is the Distinguished Teacher Award. While most students are aware of the award, few know who is selected, how, or why.

The first question concerning the DTA is the source of the money awarded. Several persons connected with the award were unable to answer, or referred the question to someone else who previously had been asked. One department secretary said she though the money came from a trust fund under the jurisdiction of the University Affairs Committee, but requested that someone else be contacted "to make sure."

Approximately $31,000.00 has been awarded since 1962 to thirty-one professors and teaching assistants. This year, six awards will be presented to members of the teaching faculty. As of November 26, more than twenty nominations had been receiving by the DTAC. Kinney Thiele, secretary of the 1973-1974 DTAC, said that most of these nominations came from students, several came from department chairmen, and one came from a department secretary.

Although students have nominated persons for the award, there appears to be little student input, since very few students are aware they are qualified to nominate a faculty member or teaching assistant.

The ability of students and faculty to judge teaching ability is a controversial matter, for a student's idea of distinguished teaching differs greatly from a faculty member's.

Students use varying criteria to judge, such as ability to hold interest, effectiveness of presentation, and interest in student needs.

Faculty members cannot use any of these criteria, and apparently judge ability by student information given to them and personal knowledge. What one student likes, another may dislike; a professor or teaching assistant may be an outstanding teacher yet fail to receive nomination. Only those faculty members already nominated are evaluated.

According to the annaul report for 1971 of the DTAC, the award strives to recognize basic teaching excellence by assessment of the following criteria: ability to stimulate students to challenging ideas and effective communication; a real knowledge of subject matter; ability to interpret and relate the results of contemporary scholarship; ability to relate to students; performance in both large and small classes; interest in counseling students, and evidence of a consistently distinguished teaching record over a number of years.

Letters of recommendation to the committee constitute a nomination, and can come from any member of the university community. Once a person has been nominated, a questionnaire with a rating system is distributed to the personnel committee in the department where the nominee is employed. This committee in turn distributes these forms as it sees fit - every member of the nominee's class or only a few can be asked to fill out the questionnaire, or faculty members can evaluate their colleague. Among the questions asked are: Can this person relate ideas and scholarship in teaching? Does this person show concern for student counseling needs? All questions are followed by a request for specific examples.

The recommendations of the committee are sent to the Provost and Chancellor for final approval.

The amount of the award is a very significant factor. Apparently the University does not feel distinguished teaching is worthwhile. A $1000.00 award, after taxes, becomes a few hundred dollars, and a few hundred dollars is little honor for outstanding service to students and the community.

Hey kid, wanna buy some notes?

By KAREN GORDON

The Student Senate lecture note program is a rapidly growing organization. It employes 57 students, more than any other Registered Student Organization. The program publishes lecture notes that have been taken by qualified students. The note program is designed to allow students to participate and concentrate more in class and also to supplement and improve their own notes.

The lecture note program serves 42 courses. There are 3140 half-term subscribers and many more students who buy the notes on a daily or weekly basis. Most courses have a 33 per cent enrollment in the note program with some having up to a 100 per cent subscription rate.

The Student Senate bought the note service from a private company that was running a somewhat underground operation. Since then, it has become a non-profit legitimate operation. The program is in its second year of operation and is working towards becoming more well known and accepted. Approval is always obtained from the professors before any course is added to the program. Professors are sent free copies of the notes so that they can review them. Some of the professors don't read them but others actually recommend them for their students. Some teachers find that students hand in better exams, with better answers to essay questions and ask more informed questions during class.

The note takers are chosen carefully. They are usually Juniors or Seniors with at least a 3.0 cum., and they are mostly majors in the subject who have taken the course before with the same professor. Note takers are paid $7.00 for a short lecture and $10.50 for a long one. Jeff Thompson, manager of the program, has had trouble with note takers quitting, but he says, "all the credit goes to the note takers for how well the service has been working."

Vast improvements have been made during the program's two year existence and attitudes toward the program have been steadily improving. In a recently completed survey, Thompson found that most students buy the notes either to supplement their notes or because the notes are better than their own. According to the survey, very few students buy the notes so that they can skip classes. This is substantiated by most professors who report that there is little or no drop in attendance with the introduction of the note program.

Don Degraeve, manager of the print shop, has tried to tighten up the printing process to make it more efficient and economical. With profits from last year, they have purchased an offset press and provided tape recorders for the note takers. They were also able to increase the hours that the distribution centers are open and lower the cost of the notes from $4.00 to $3.00 and from $2.75 to $2.00.

More improvements are planned in the future. Next semester, five new typewriters will be purchased and typist-editors will be hired to correct spelling and grammar and provide a neater copy. Twenty to twenty five courses will be added for the spring semester, including more advanced high level courses. Since average sales per course are about 50 per cent and it takes fifty-six subscriptions to pay for the cost of the note taker alone, only courses with enrollment of 130 or more make money.

However, they plan to provide notes for courses with enrollment over 90 and hope the high profit courses will offset the losses.

The note service hopes to get permission to move their Student Union distribution center from its present location to the ticket office next to the S.U. Ballroom. If this is accomplished, they will be able to have two windows operating at once and speed up service.

The lecture note program has expanded its hours and has also opened a distribution center in JQA lobby. The main distribution center is in the Student Union across from the candy counter. It is open from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. The JQA center, which gets 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the business, is open from 11:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Because of the new evening hours, it is now possible to pick up a days notes on the following evening.

Honor Thyself

By DAVID PAQUETTE

Bringing the small school atmosphere into the university is what the Honors Program is all about. When joining the Honors Program, a student's relationship with his professors is on a very personal level. The Honors Program classes are kept small, about 12 to 15 students per class. The professor is required to fill out a detailed dossier on each student. These dossiers are kept on file at the Honors Program office for future use such as for letters of recommendation.

A limited number of six Honor Program courses must be taken within the student's stay at the university in order for the student to be able to graduate in the Honors Program. According to Dr. Wolfe head of the Honors Program, the Honors Program offers intensive counseling for its students. Each student has a preceptor that watches over him. If problems come up, the preceptor is there to help. Not only are they there to help, but they also check to make sure whether the student heeds help (by checking the student's dossier).

A common practice involved in checking is the student's cum. If it drops down around 3.0 or below the student is asked to come in for counseling. Also by joining the Honors Program, the student has a freer hand as to what courses he wishes to take. The core requirement obligation of the university is dropped. The Honors Program courses are worth from four credits up to eight, so the student only has to take 3 courses per semester to be a full time student.

According to Wolfe, although these courses are much harder, they are planned to be so because of the extra credits. Wolfe also said there are more books to be read, papers to be passed in, and none of the courses can be taken pass-fail.

According to most of the Honor Program students the courses themselves are much more interesting and stimulating. The students enter the courses wanting to participate and get involved so they naturally get more out of the courses.

Who is allowed into the program?

Wolfe explained, "Well in the beginning (8 years ago) the student had to be asked to join by the Honors Program, but now anyone can come down to join. This doesn't mean that everyone will get in though."

Wolfe continued and pointed out that they couldn't stop anyone from joining. However this is where their terrific counseling comes in. The student will be personally talked to and his academic records will be checked then and an evaluation would be made as to whether the student can handle the courses. If the student is told that it would be in his best interest not to join but he still wants to, then he can merely take an Honors Program Course (as anyone else can at anytime), and make his own evaluation of his competency in the program. Anyone can try to join, but only the best survive.

There are about 550 students in the Honors Program and only thirty had cums down around 3.0

Wolfe advised freshmen to look into the Honors Program.

The Honors Program is a interesting educational alternative who wants to take advantage of it. If you are interested, truck on down to Machmer Hall room E23, for more information.

SELECTMEN

Town Election Dates Moved Past Intercession

By MIKE ALLAIN

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night approved a final set of election dates for 1974.

The action comes after an alternate proposal, offered at last week's meeting by Eric Walgren, and the Selectmen's own schedule, approved three weeks ago, were discussed at a special meeting at Town Hall on Thursday.

The schedule approved last night is similar to both the calender proposed by Walgren at last week's meeting and the original schedule drawn up but not passed by Selectmen.

The new calender calls for a primary election on March 5, as opposed to the February 12 date tentatively passed earlier by Selectmen, while the new registration deadline for the primary is February 13, about two weeks after the university returns from intercession. The earlier schedule had called for a January 25 deadline for registration.

The Town Election is now scheduled for April 9 instead of March 19, as voted earlier. This means that the town election will be held after students return from spring vacation, instead of before the vacation.

Walgren had proposed the alternate schedule because he said it discouraged "maximum participation" among student voters. Student government leaders from Amherst College, Hampshire College, and UMass, appearing at last night's meeting, stated their support of Walgren's schedule, which was ultimately passed.

Walgren expressed his pleasure last night that he and the Board of Selectmen are finally in "complete agreement on an issue."

The Board also discussed, with members of the Board of Registrars, the possibility of changing the order of names on the election ballot.

Susan Brynteson, Chairwoman of the Board of Registrars, suggested that the names either be drawn by lottery or placed in different order on the different voting machines.

As it stands now, the incumbent's name is placed first on all ballots. The consensus of both Boards was that the incumbent presently has a clearcut advantage over other candidates whose names appear farther down the ballot.

The Dwight Art Gallery at Mount Holyoke College is currently showing an art exhibition of Black, Asian-Americans and Puerto Rican artists of the 5 College Area and Springfield College. Seventeen artists are showing 53 pieces of art, including such different mediums as paints, sculptures, etchings and drawings.

Ms. Naomi Bean, an art senior from Mount Holyoke, was coordinator of the Gallery with the collaboration of Rick Grant, (CCEBS-UMass.). Ms. Bean said that the Independent Art Funds, The Afro-American Society and The Friends of Art, all from Mount Holyoke gave financial support to the activity.

Mr. Edmund Barry Gaither, curator of the Museum of National Center of Afro-American Artists in Dorchester gave a lecture and art slide show.

UMass represented by 8 artists, included artists such as Professor Nelson Stevens who had his paintings printed in books, magazines and newspapers, murals and covers of records. Clay Santana, another artist, exhibited some of his murals. Julio Torres, a junior, and a sculptor, said that art is for him a constant creative activity.

The exhibition at the gallery will be open from Dec. 2 until Dec. 14, week days from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., and weekends from 3-5 p.m.

How Do I Keep It Alive?

By DR.'S ANDREW
W. McCASHIN AND
STEPHEN M. KLEIN

Q. I feel that the levity with which you answered the first question in your Nov. 20th column in the Collegian does a great injustice to a very real problem. I am one who has found himself really interested in a relationship at the beginning, but losing interest once the other person gets to like me, for no apparent reason and much against my conscious wishes. Even if your broaden your definition of "seduction" to mean enjoying the chase or the challenge of "winning" someone (with me it has never gotten to the sexual meaning of seduction), that answer is still of no help in dealing with the problem and keeping it from recurring in the relationship I am building now. I would be very interested in knowing what kind of "preventive medicine" one can practice to prevent a good relationship from dying when the attraction becomes obviously mutual?

A. We would like to do justice to the problem you describe because for many it is a very real difficulty. Repeatedly losing interest in relationships when another begins to return affection signifies a need to avoid intimacy. The loss of interest, when looked at closely, is usually anxiety, anxiety that blocks being able to feel deeply and express the richness of that experience in an intimate relationship. For some the intense "rush" of emotion, excitement and euphoria that accompanies the initial "romantic courtship" stage of a relationship can obscure this difficulty until the "novelty" wears off. Conflicts around sex and-or dependency generate the anxiety about intimate relating. Risking oneself sexually, may conflict with an inordinate need for privacy, or may elicit fears about performance, or create guilt about sexual impulses. Sometimes concerns about one's sexual or personal adequacy result in devaluing the other when he or she shows interest in becoming closer. This is expressed in the conscious or unconscious theme, "How can a worthless person have someone who is worthwhile like them?"

When the attraction becomes obviously mutual, dependency concerns may be stirred up. Fears about being too dependent, becoming entrapped, taking on too much responsibility, being personally restricted and exploited, or losing one's sense of separateness are all common.

Your statement "with me (winning someone) has never gotten to the sexual meaning of seduction" suggests that you are feeling sexual discomfort. Try to evaluate the nature of this anxiety, examining your feelings as you move at a pace that is comfortable for you. Being able to experience intimacy with another is a complicated task. It involves establishing and sharing a mutual identity while retaining the separateness of the partners. Achieving intimacy is a major human preoccupation, especially important in adolescence and young adulthood, for it is a significant milestone enroute to maturity.

That's Some Grocery List

August is when Mr. Richard Bongiovanni, Purchasing Agent for Food Services at the University, must go shopping for many food items. This shopping does not exactly consist of going downtown to Louis' for the weekly groceries. Instead, he shops for items that all meal ticket holders will eat for the academic year.

Bongiovanni was to be involved in perhaps the most strenuous tug of war in his seven years with University Food Services. He would have to purchase a large quantity of meat, meat that would pass the standards set by the University Dieticians, and get it at the lowest possible price.

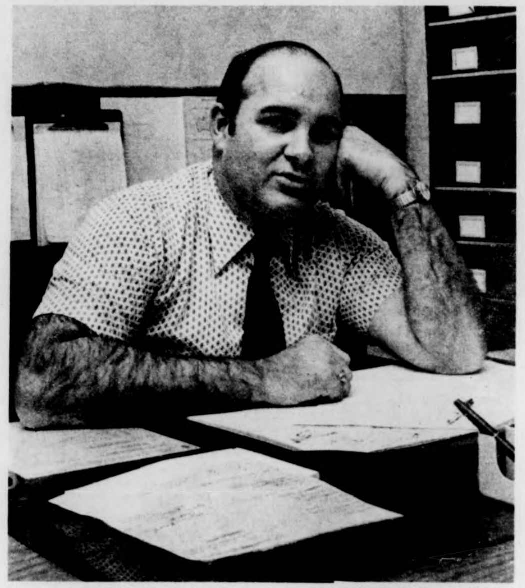
This would indeed be a difficult task, since the ceiling price on beef had been removed four days ahead of schedule, completely baffling institutions along the eastern seaboard. The new food price controls permitted wholesalers and retailers to charge the buyer a greater price.

Independant of where meat is manufactured, Food Services usually purchases all their fresh meat from local distributors. If meat is manufactured in Wyoming, it is through either a broker or a distributor that the University deals with directly.

This procedure also applies for processed meat and the full grocery line. Since there are few resources in New England where food can be grown on a yearly basis, most of the purchasing is done indirectly.

After contacting the usual meat wholesalers in New England, i.e., Swift of Springfield, Armour of Waterbury, Lewis Beef of Springfield, Fulton Packaging of Boston, and Smith and Fazzini of Hartford, Bongiovanni found there was no purchasable meat. He had to look elsewhere.

After a long search, he accepted a bid from Rapid Foods, a nation-wide distributor in Miami. A purchase order was sent out calling for 40,000 pounds of beef at an astronomical price of $1.70 per pound. The shipping charge for this two month order amounted to $800, bringing the total bill to $68,800.



(Staff Photo/Alan Chapman)

Richard Bongiovanni

Representative Frank Bauer of Rapid Foods refused to verify this August purchase, nor would he divulge the current wholesale price of meat.

Bauer said the cost of transportation is based on a published tariff, according to the point of deliverance and the poundage of the order.

It is unlikely that the University will deal with Rapid Foods in the future. It is difficult to obtain information from local distributors as to the accuracy of reported University purchases.

Swift Food Services of Springfield has been a steady supplier of several items to the University. They take bids on certain items from large food companies, just as the University takes bids from the distributors.

Swift, like the other distributors, was hit hard by the meat shortage. They are presently bidding with the University for the supply of turkey breasts.

When asked about the transportation cost from local outlets to Amherst, a Swift spokesman said the standard shipping price is two to three cents per pound. He was unfamiliar with the mileage costs.

All the local suppliers are presently well stocked with meat. Although Bongiovanni does not expect prices to drop, he contends they are levelling off between $1.25-$1.30, the expected price for the next meat order.

Changes Needed

In analyzing the future direction of Food Services, Bongiovanni sees the first priority as keeping everyone satisfied. He outlined two routes that can be taken. The University can either deal in quantity or quality.

Quantity is the route being presently followed, and is of course the cheapest way. Five years ago, when the University did not have to worry about feeding so many bodies, they followed the quality route.

Only one entree and one desert were served with a seconds policy, but the meals were well prepared. Despite the large increase in meal ticket holders since that time, Bongiovanni still feels that Food Services could prepare one meal, and prepare it well.

Bongiovanni also feels that the present meal quality is partly a reflection on the Commonwealth. The state does not fund the dining halls; all money comes from students, and a mandatory board must be paid for. There is a large mortgage on the building. This means that students can expect to pay this mandatory fee for a long time.

Bongiovanni would like to see some changes made in the purchasing of food. For example, the University buys their supply of pears at the wrong time. Pears are harvested late in the fall, and should be bought right after they are harvested.

The price is at its lowest point because of the large surplus. Due to the budget, Bongiovanni must purchase the supply of pears a few weeks prior to the opening of school in September, when the pears are not especially good, and the prices are high.

This type of dealing, explains Bongiovanni, can be tedious. All he can really do is get his two cents in with the higher-ups, and then get the budget he will be working with.

He sends several wholesalers the opportunity to bid for a certain item. Of prime importance here is the element of time. The more time Bongiovanni has, the better chance he has of getting the particular purchase at the lowest price.

Some foods are presently being purchased without the total approval of the Purchasing Agent, but because of the price. Most people say dining commons apples taste inferior. These apples are purchased from the University because of the price, only $2 per box.

Some students ask why the University does not buy their vegetables from the Hadley farmer. There would be little shipping charge and the University would be receiving fresh vegetables.

The problem, however, lies in supply. The local farmers could only keep up the supply for two months at the most. The University would then have to look elsewhere.

VITA

The Forms Are Coming! The Forms Are Coming!

By RICH SOCKOL

The informal colloquia styled training component taught by 1973 Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) volunteers is currently in full swing. From all indications, UMass VITA's will be among the most well trained students in the nation during the 1974 tax preparation period.

The VITA program, first offered to students last semester trains students in preparing federal and state tax returns and then gives the student the opportunity to use his-her skills to assist people in western Massachusetts communities. According to last year's records, VITA volunteers assisted nearly 2,700 people which meant a savings of approximately $30,000 to those who took advantage of the service.

The colloquia sessions, the first of a two component training series set up for the 1974 VITA program, was set up "to give students a basic understanding of how to prepare federal and state tax forms," according to Dave Geiger, a colloquia leader and former VITA volunteer.

"This component will be a primer for a more intensive training series to be held in late January. This series will feature both Internal Revenue Service and Mass. Department of Taxation agents in the classroom dealing with complex tax problems," he added.

According to Wayne Williams, another colloquia leader, "the sessions are also dealing with the practical aspects of how a student should deal with a person when he-she is trying to solicit certain information from the client. To me, this is a very important part of this training series."

With all of these commitments, Swindell projects that VITA volunteers should assist about 5,000 people and save them approximately $10,000 that would otherwise have gone to independent tax preparers.

Since the colloquia has been offered to inexperienced tax people, VITA enrollment will be restricted to those people who have already had tax courses, who have already been VITA volunteers, or who already have a good understanding of the basic concepts of tax preparation.

If you are interested in being a VITA volunteer and earning up to 2 credits for volunteering in low income communities in western Massachusetts, call OUTREACH.

Mideast Fighting Continues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian tanks, cannons and missiles dueled with Israeli artillery at two spots along the Golan cease-fire line for the second day in a row Monday.

Syrian guns blasted an Israeli half-track and bulldozer and killed or wounded 15 Israeli soldiers, a Syrian military spokesman claimed in Damascus.

A military communique issued in Tel Aviv claimed the exchanges at Mazrat Beit Jon in the northern sector and Um Bittneh in the central sector left four Israeli soldiers wounded.

The simultaneous clashes lasted about three hours, the Israeli command said. Similar artillery battles Sunday lasted about four hours. Each side accused the other of provoking the fighting on both days.

The cannons traded fire along the 60-mile Golan front north of Israel as Egyptian and Israeli troops along the jagged Suez battle lines to the south traded small-arms fire in three isolated incidents, Tel Aviv reported.

Egypt issued an apparent warning in Cairo that it may boycott the proposed peace conference in Geneva unless the stalled Kilometer 101 talks to reinforce the cease-fire get moving.

Israel's semiofficial state radio claimed nearly all Israeli war prisoners held by Egypt had been tortured or bodily harmed during captivity.

The Israeli radio said officers are hearing testimony on the alleged atrocities from returned war prisoners and that Israel plans to make a report to the International Red Cross and other world bodies.

Allegations of torture have been circulating in the Israeli press for several days. But the government has declined official comment, apparently to avoid jeopardizing the Geneva peace conference.

Egyptian spokesman Ahmed Anis told a Cairo news conference that indirect diplomatic contacts are under way between Egypt and Israel to foster resumption of the military-level Kilometer 101 cease-fire talks.

"We can expect a result perhaps in the immediate future," Anis said. "We cannot define our stand regarding the peace conference before the outcome of these contacts is known."

Ben-Gurion Buried

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

SDE BOQER, Israel (AP) — David Ben-Gurion was buried in the desert on Monday. His only marker was a simple wooden plaque that bore his name.

The architect of modern Israel died Saturday at 87 without ever witnessing a peace he envisioned between Israel and the Arabs.

He was laid to rest in the Negev Desert beside his wife, Paula, after a turbulent career of nation-building that spanned seven decades.

True to his usual scorn for ceremony, Israel's first premier stipulated a funeral without pomp. The coffin was of unvarnished timber, and the only accompaniment was the stark, age-old ritual of Jewish custom.

Premier Golda Meir, who had been at odds with Ben-Gurion for many years following his resignation as premier in 1953, wept as his only son Amos recited the prayer for the dead.

The funeral began at the Knesset, Israel's parliament, in Jerusalem, where Ben-Gurion's body had lain in state for 24 hours while 250,000 Israelis paid last respects.

Past and present leaders of Israel, diplomats, soldiers and foreign dignitaries gathered in the plaza of the Knesset for the ceremony, while the nation watched on television.

Flags flew at half-staff and sirens wailed as the funeral began. During the one-minute siren blast, traffic stopped and Israelis stood at attention. Under a blue sky flecked with clouds, Ben-Gurion's son read the traditional "orphan's blessing" to the dead father as he stood beside the coffin, draped in the flag of Israel.

As stipulated in Ben Gurion's will, there were no eulogies or customary gun salutes. An announcer from the Israeli state radio recited Israel's declaration of independence which Ben-Gurion wrote and delivered on May 14, 1948.

A military cantor chanted the traditional prayer to "Lord, full of mercy" to accept the soul of the first "prime minister and first defense minister of Israel, deliverer of the redemption of the people in the land, whose soul was devoted to building the state of Israel."

After the 30-minute ceremony, 10 military and police officers shouldered the small coffin and carried it slowly to a helicopter.

The body was flown to Sde Boqer, the Negev farm settlement where Ben-Gurion made his home in 1953, hoping to set an example that would encourage more Israelis to populate the wasteland.

His hope has yet to materialize. At the time of his death, only a few settlements flourished in the Negev.

After short prayers and chants, a six-man burial detail from the Israeli army removed the Star of David from the coffin and slowly lowered it into the grave. It was covered with earth and topped with a temporary wooden plaque bearing the simple inscription "David Ben-Gurion."

Valiant Efforts Or Warm Weather?

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Consumption of electricity in the United States declined during November, but utility spokesmen say it's hard to tell how much of the cutback was due to energy-saving efforts and how much was caused by warmer weather.

President Nixon urged Americans Nov. 8 to reduce their emergy consumption due to the fuel crisis. There was a sharp drop in nationwide electricity consumption as the month wore on, but the reasons were difficult to determine because of such variables as weather and population growth. An Associated Press survey, however, showed some indications of efforts to conserve energy.

Raymond DeForge, a spokesman for Green Mountain Power in Vermont, said power consumption this November was 5.5 percent below that of the same month in 1972, although the company anticipated a growth rate of 7 or 8 per cent.

Deforge said milder weather this November helped reduce electric consumption, but added that the higher temperatures alone would not account for the whole decline. He said the reductions came in all areas — industry, homes and business and estimated that some customers reduced usage by as much as 10 per cent.

The Edison Electric Institute, an association of investor-owned utilities which compiles nationwide statistics, said electricity usage declined during November, but noted that the figures do not take into account population, weather and other variables.

Nixon To State Energy Plans

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House annoucced Monday that President Nixon has accepted "with deep regret" the resignation of his top energy adviser, John A. Love.

The announcement also said the President "will issue a statement tomorrow Tuesday outlining future administration plans," presumably referring to the expected reorganization of energy programs.

A brief White House notice said, "the President thinks that Gov. Love has done an outstanding job under difficult circumstances in implementing the positive actions taken thus far by the administration to meet the energy crisis."

"The President looks forward to drawing upon Gov. Love's expert advice and counsel in the future," the announcement said.

It made no mention of Love's deputy, Charles J. DiBona, whose resignation also as reportedly submitted.

Love issued a statement saying he agrees that the time has come for a new structure to deal with the energy crisis.

"I certainly agree with the establishment of the new Federal Energy Administration and expect that it will be fully staffed and given sufficient authority to respond effectively and manage an energy crisis that is potentially more serious than any challenge this nation has faced short of war," he said.

Love said he stood ready to help in any way possible.

Talks with Arabian officials on the oil situation also were in the offing. Saudi Arabia's minister of petroleum and mineral resources was due in New York Monday and expected to come here Wednesday.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has scheduled another trip to the Middle East, diplomatic sources said, with a call on King Faisal of Saudi Arabia on his agenda. One purpose of the projected call would be an attempt to relax the oil squeeze.

The sudden shift of power over energy policy to the Treasury Department may indicate that the 14 other members of a cabinet-level energy group were outvoted by Treasury Secretary George Shultz, one administration source said Monday.

The move, revealed over the weekend, takes major energy programs away from the Interior Department of Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton, and could signal a decision to back off from preparations for gasoline rationing.

Informed sources said Morton, Love, and Transportation Secretary Claude Brinegar strongly advocated a decision to prepare and publish proposed gasoline regulations.

UMW Cashing In

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — With the nation once again thirsting for coal, the head of the United Mine Workders vowed on Monday to cash in at the bargaining table and end the "pick and shovel days."

"The energy crisis insured that it will be a sellers' market for years to come," UMW President Arnold Miller said in opening the union's 46th convention.

The fuel shortage provides the miners with added bargaining leverage in next year's contract negotiations and Miller made clear he will use it — striking of necessary — to win major concessions from the coal operators.

"The United Mine Workers intends to be reasonable in its negotiating demands," he said. "But coal miners have a lot of lost ground to make up, and we intend to recover a good piece of it."

Viet Cong Bomb Oil Depot; Saigon Faces Fuel Shortage

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — Viet Cong saboteurs who sent much of South Vietnam's biggest oil depot up in smoke Monday forced the government to impose more tough measures to conserve already short fuel supplies.

The dawn rocket and mortar attack at Nha Be six miles from Saigon was the closest to the capital since the cease-fire 10 months ago. Military sources estimated up to half the country's fuel reserves burned.

Flames still licked into the sky at nightfall and black clouds from explosions and fires hung over Saigon.

The government announced in the wake of the attack that gasoline will be rationed. Gas stations, ordered closed just after the attack to prevent panic buying, will reopen Tuesday. But sales were banned on Saturdays and Sundays.

The minister of trade and industry, Nguyen Duc Cuong, announced a wide range of other fuel-conservation measures, including a 35-mile-per-hour highway speed limit, a 50 per cent cutback in street lighting and a ban on advertising lights.

A U.S. source said the raid, which reportedly destroyed almost all the Shell fuel stored at Nha Be, will create immense fuel storage problems in the near future. Shell is by far the largest fuel supplier to South Vietnam, with 60 per cent of the civilian market.

But the source said Caltex and Esso storage facilities at the tank farm were untouched.

Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, chief spokesman for the South Vietnamese military command, said the Nha Be facility stored fuel for civilian use. Other sources said fuel for military use also was stored there.

Hien acknowledged the loss would affect the armed forces. But he said the armed forces normally maintain a reserve fuel supply of 30-60 days.

South Vietnamese military sources said the attack marked the first phase of what they predicted would be a general offensive by the Viet Cong and their North Vietnamese allies during the height of the dry season early next year.

Unconfirmed reports indicated military fuel were being shipped directly from the United States. A U.S. military spokeswoman declined comment, saying sensitive negotiations were in progress.

The United States funds almost all fuel supplies for South Vietnam, civilian and military.

Pioneer 10 Plunges Toward Jupiter

By WILLIAM STOCKTON
AP Science Writer

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Pioneer 10 plunged Monday into dangerous radiation belts circling Jupiter. Scientists couldn't forecast chances for America's space probe to survive for a closeup survey of the planet that might be a stillborn star.

Accelerating faster and faster in Jupiter's gravitational pull, at 12 p.m. PST the 570 pound unmanned spacecraft was 320,000 miles from Jupiter traveling at 50,800 miles per hour. Pioneer controllers reported the spacecraft functioning perfectly and on course for a 6:25 p.m. sweep past the planet with its concentric bands of colored clouds.

"There is no room for relaxation. Any prognosis at this time about the radiation awaiting would be futile," said James Van Allen, the University of Iowa scientist who discovered earth's radiation belts.

"The radiation is becoming more and more penetrating the closer we get to the planet," he said.

E.J. Smith of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., announced that magnetic readings from the spacecraft indicate the unkown source of Jupiter's magnetic field is offset from the center of the planet.

This would tend to support disputed ideas that the planet has a solid core, perhaps made of metallic hydrogen existing at pressures never encountered on earth.

During its sweep within 81,000 miles of the planet, which is 1,300 times larger than earth, Pioneer will take color pictures and make scientific measurements to answer questions about Jupiter's origins.

Jupiter is 500 million miles from earth, so one-way radio communication time between 210-foot dish antennas on earth to Pioneer's nine-foot dish antenna takes 46 minutes.

Long before reaching Jupiter, Pioneer was locked in an embrace with Jovian gravity that, after its closest approach, would hurl the spacecraft out of the solar system like a stone from a slingshot.

Pioneer will cross the orbit of Pluto, the outermost planet, in about 1987, heading on at a constant 25,000 m.p.h. toward the constellation Taurus. If Taurus hasn't moved Pioneer might reach it in 11 million years.

WATERGATE

Sirica Starts Listening

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica began his self-imposed job of listening to the White House Watergate tapes Monday in the solitude of a jury room heavily guarded by marshals.

Only his law clerk, Todd Christofferson, was in the room as the 69-year-old judge reviewed the recordings to determine which ones will eventually go to the Watergate grand jury.

White House lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt, who prepared an index and analysis of what the 10 tapes turned over to Sirica contain, was there briefly in the morning to show the judge how to find the start of conversations on the subpoenaed tapes.

The White House has asked that all or part of three tapes be withheld from the jury "in order to protect the confidentiality of advice given to the President."

To these portions, Sirica will give particular attention. Once he has heard them, he will listen to arguments by the White House and the special Watergate prosecutor, then rule on the issue.

The jury is free to hear four other conversations that were subpoenaed because the White House offered no objection. The prosecutor's office refused to say whether those recordings have already been submitted to the jurors.

There were these other developments in the Watergate story:

—In Los Angeles, state charges against Egil Krogh Jr. in the burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist were dismissed by a superior court judge. Krogh, former boss of the White House plumbers who conducted the burglary, pleaded guilty in Washington Friday to federal charges of interfering with the psychiatrist's civil liberties.

—Congress sent President Nixon a bill to confirm that the U.S. District Court here has jurisdiction to enforce subpoenas or other orders issued by the Senate Watergate committee. Sirica had turned down the committee in its efforts to enforce a subpoena against the White House, on grounds he had no such jurisdiction.

Figures Show Nixon Entitled To Tax Refunds

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON, (AP) — President Nixon apparently was entitled to sizeable refunds from the U.S. Treasury in each of the past three years for over-withholding of taxes from his $200,000 annual salary, calculations showed Monday.

The independent computations indicated the refunds could have ranged upward from about $45,000 for each year. But it was not learned whether Nixon took the refunds as a lump sum check, in the form of U.S. savings bonds, or applied them to possible future taxes.

The calculations were based on the Internal Revenue Service's standard withholding figures and on a breakdown of Nixon's tax payments disclosed last weekend by the Associated Press.

White House documents being prepared as part of Nixon's vow to disprove allegations about his personal finances list the President as paying: $72,686 in federal income taxes for 1969; $789 for 1970; $878 for 1971; and $4,298 for 1972.

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren, asked at Monday's regular news briefing about the AP report, said the figures on taxes paid "appear to be accurate."

But Warren declined more specific comment, saying, "the President will make available to the American people complete information regarding his financial records, his property...his taxes."

He said the goal is to release the data this week.

The amounts withheld from the President's paycheck in 1969 apparently were not sufficient to cover more than $72,000 in taxes listed for that year — meaning he probably had to dig into his bank account to pay the difference.

But during the next three years, because of big deductions for donation of his vice presidential papers and for such items as property tax and interest, it appears the President joined the ranks of 60 million Americans who annually get refunds because of over-withholding.

Tax law bases the minimum withholding on a standard formula encompassing an individual's salary rate, the number of dependents he claims and whether he is paid weekly, bi-weekly or monthly.

UMass Buses Funded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Dept. of Transportaion has awarded a $191,950 grant to support the University of Massachusetts at Amherst's free bus program, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., said Monday. The grant supplements a $475,411 grant to the university in 1972.

The project, funded by the department's Urban Mass Transportaion Administration, encourages students and other commuters in the Amherst area to use free buses instead of private cars.

The additional money will provide three additional buses and fund an evaluation of the system's potential use elsewhere in the country.

The Demise Of The Great Camelopard

zamir nestelbaum

After the tragedy that was the demise of the great Charles Camelopard, Collegian Washington D.C. Correspondent, I was hysterical for days. I was intent on finding the identity of the culprit, or culprits and whether it was a conspiracy of some sorts. I wanted to contact the spirit of Camelopard and communicate with the other world. I went to seances. I went to gospel spirituals. I went to Guru Maharaj Ji recruitment meetings. I went to School of Ed Academic Meetings. Nothing. No matter how hard I tried I couldn't make contact. No matter how many hands I grasped, no matter how many times I contorted my face or chanted "Who is Guru Maharaj Ji"? I couldn't get Comelopard's mug into my head. But then yesterday, while relieving my bowels at the Hatch Men's Room, a strange voice called out:

"Zamir! How can you just sit there at a time like this?"

Z.N.: "What! Who? Who said that? I have to!"

"Zamir, this is Camelopard! Camelopard! I understand you've been trying to contact me!....They've killed me you know."

Z.N.: "Why er, yes! yes! Chuck! I've got to get some information!" I cried out in a nervous sweat.

Camelopard: "Well shoot! er..fire! e er..you know what I mean."

Z.N.: "OK. The most pressing question is....what is the funniest T.V. show you ever saw? A friend wants to know."

Camelopard: "The Reasoner Report!....But they've killed me Zamir."

Z.N.: "I know, I know. Well what do you think of median strips?"

Camelopard: "I'm all for them. Why just before I departed from this life, I was active in Washington forming the United States Association for the Preservation of Median Strips.....But they've killed me."

Z.N.: "Far out? Just a couple more pressing questions. What do you think of Philadelphia and along those lines, Does Joe Frank exist?"

Camelopard: "I think that Mayor Frank Rizzo and Joe Frank should form a new comedy team, The Flying Leaps. However, on the whole, I prefer cheesecake!!!!....But they're trying to kill me."

Z.N.: "Who's trying to kill you?"

Camelopard: "They are. Some one close to the President."

Z.N.: "What did you do that would make them want to rub you out?"

Camelopard: "Why I was moving for legislation banning the sale of chiffon dresses."

Z.N.: "Why chiffon dresses?"

Camelopard: "You see its imple. If there are no more chiffon dresses, then Tricia Nixon Cox couldn't make anymore public appearances and say things like she would gladly die for President Thieu."

Z.N.: "But how does that relate to your tragic ending?"

Camelopard: "Easy. If Tricia can't appear, who would defend our President. And if no one defended our President, that would mean that Ron Ziegler would be out of a job, in which case Martha Mitchell would have to stop making phone calls."

Z.N.: "So you think that it was Ma Bell that had you hung for a common dummy?"

Camelopard: "No!"

Z.N.: "Who was it?"

Camelopard: It might have been Dita Beard, But, that would have been really wierd. Or....

Z.N.: "Yes?"

Camelopard: It could have been Melvin Laird, But then no-one would have cared.

Z.N.: "Camelopard...."

Camelopard: "Yes?"

Z.N.: "You owe the world a debt. You should have been aborted."

How Valid Is SWAP??

The Student Workshop on Activities Problems (SWAP) has been under fire for much of its fifteen year history. Perhaps this year, more than others, the questions arose of how valid is the exchange of ideas between student, faculty, and staff delegates and how effective is that exchange in implementing progress and change on the UMass campus.

Behind many of these questions was a weighing of the worth of possible outcomes of SWAP against the cash cost to students. That cost to you, an undergraduate, was $.38. The benefits to the University of SWAP are more difficult to pin down, often because they are as nebulous as ideas and attitudinal changes. The cash value of a student learning he or she can cut red tape, or an administrator learning a new perspective on a university problem is very difficult to calculate.

There are however some very concrete benefits, programs which can be attributed to SWAP. They include BDIC, Holyoke tutorial, banning parietals, and coed dorms.

These examples of tangible progress speak eloquently for the benefits that can and do come out of SWAP. We support SWAP and its ideal of increasing communication at the University by bringing together students, faculty and staff in an informal atmosphere, to discuss problems of mutual concern.

As one student delegate put it, "That personal experience at SWAP goes a long way. If each one of us can come back to the University with just one idea to expand upon, it was all well worth while."

Nixon's Idea Of Xmas

By SAMUEL P. HASSAN

Driving back to school on Sunday after Thanksgiving, I heard President Nixon give his follow-up performance to the energy crisis drama. I couldn't help but picture him as the Grinch that stole Christmas. On top of everything else, Nixon has now put coal in everyones' stockings.

For the first time during the Nixon Administration, American troops are not dying on Christmas day. Now, with the energy all used and the boys home to safety, Nixon wants us to refrain from using Christmas lights. You might be saying so what, but you've supposedly grown up already. Go ahead, laugh! Scrooge is laughing right along with you. Thing is, he's counting profits and you're counting voltage. What's more, Scrooge is really laughing at you.

Think of all the gasoline we will save that was normally consumed by the chain saws of the Christmas tree suppliers. Furthermore, if trees are only plugged in for 20 minutes each night, and if people shovel their snow rather than use snowblowers, we will save enough energy to fly 360 B-52s from Guam to Hanoi carrying over 7,000 tons of bombs. Humbug!

Americans should be prepared for the following directives or similar ones from the Chief Executive.

If Christmas is not celebrated, and if all snowstorms confronting heavily populated areas are turned to rain by heat producing, low yield nuclear explosions, we can expect great energy savings that can make Christmas a very real possibility by 1976.

American parents are urged to inform their children as to the true nature of Santa Claus. After all, lying just isn't the American way. The irony of the entire affair should be stressed by stuffing coal in the traditional stockling. Many people have criticized your president for selling our wheat to Russia and for allowing oil exports to increase 187 percent over last year. These same people must be wondering what will happen to the millions of toys already produced for Christmas 1973. Well, in an effort to ensure world peace, and in a move that I assure you will bring a truer than Christmas happiness and prosperity to our new generation, I have ordered 80 percent of all toys on the market bought by your federal government. The toys are to be given to needy children in Africa, Asia, Europe, South America, and Australia. To bolster the economy, we have offered U.S. Navy surplus P.T. boats at cut rates to aid in the collection of toys.

In addition to all of these things, your president has ordered a 17 cent increase in the cost of letter mailing to be effective until midnight Saturday night before the Super Bowl game. This added revenue alone will pay for 7 miles of the Alaska pipeline.

I have ordered Congress to act immediately on all of the preceding legislation. Failure to do so could seriously jeopardize our national security, and Richard Nixon is ready to take adequate measures to ensure the safety of all people in America; black, white, yellow and red.

I would like to leave you tonight my fellow Americans with this one thought in mind.

Jingle bells, jingle bells, no Santa anyway. But it's no fun a shivering in a one horse, open sleigh.

Thank-you and good evening.

To The Editor:

On a CBS News special yesterday, Senator William Proxmire laid the whole energy crisis on the line. It's going to be cold and expensive and a lot of things are just going to stop working unless fairly drastic measures are taken around here to ease the energy situation and help a lot of my friends - I mean the people I have to apologize to over and over again for not having enough room on my bus to take them all to and from the University.

Brittany Manor, Riverglade and Hollister apartments house alot of people; most of them are University affiliated and too many must drive their own cars back and forth (expending 70 per cent more energy than they would on a bus). Brittany Manor is trying to help -- I drive the courtesy bus (recognizing too well its inadequacies), and the management has offered to contribute to the purchase and maintenance of a University bus to come down here. We need a bus and soon! The University must recognize the substantial community at Brittany Manor, Riverglade and Hollister and help us to act in conserving energy --

SEND US A BUS!

Janet Goode

To The Editor:

I, along with probably 20,000 other UMies read the Collegian every day. Since the semester started I have noticed the reoccurence of headlines that don't concur with the article. In Monday's paper there was the headline, "Stats Show D.C. Food Sickening". The article, however said nothing to this effect. In fact, as the last sentence says, "Judging from the above average marks the D. C. got from the Collegian Health study, don't say the dining commons food makes you sick".

Let's get it together.

Bruce Corwin

To The Editor:

I'm writing in about a small matter that points up a not-so-small issue. Library inspection of packs and briefcases is a minor inconvenience intended to deter theft. I go in and out of the library quite a bit and my pack is checked maybe two thirds of the time. The inspection is always casual. I've never seen handbags, coat linings or typewriter cases checked. If I were in the bookstealing business I could rip off the library with no trouble.

I think it's senseless to subject people to useless inspections. Either the library should maintain a thorough stop-and-search, in which case one hopes the legality of this procedure would soon be questioned, or it should do away with the formality altogether.

As I say, it's merely a nuisance. But put a guard at the exists of the Campus Center, the Student Union, the science labs, the health service and the gym, and the surveillance can create the kind of resentment that only aggravates the initial problem.

Ed Silver

To The Editor:

I wish to thank my friend Stephen Sadler for writing his letter to the editor which appeared in Monday's Collegian. He expressed my feelings exactly concerning those people who constantly criticize the McNamara House Council but never attend the meetings.

I also would like to take this opportunity to make it known that any one who has business they would like to bring up at our Wednesday night meetings please let me know by Monday afternoon and I will see that it is put on the agenda. I would like to hear from the House Residents and see you at our meetings.

Deborah Partington
McNamara House Council Secretary

To The Editor:

This evening (27 Nov. 73), I answered the phone and was asked by someone calling herself Paula Maguire if my wife was in. Ms. Maguire did not not state her reason for calling and asked for my wife by her first name. My wife was in the shower and did not know Ms. Maguire. I had to ask Ms. Maguire the purpose of her call and was told that she had written my wife a letter about the "College Master" life insurance plan. Ms. Maguire was informed that we had adequate coverage and were not interested in any more. Ms. Maguire rang off with a snide remark about my making my wife's financial decisions, which is totally asinine since my wife and I maintain separate checking and savings accounts.

Well, that pissed me off, so I dug around in the trash and found her letter. It was one of those form things that starts off "Hi! Friendly-First-Name". We had gotten two and thrown them both away. The parent company is Fedelity Union Life Insurance Co. out of Dallas. The letters were mailed from the Ronald S. Nathan Agency in Amherst.

It's not often that we find a commercial organization trying to insinuate itself into our marriage and financial affairs. We don't like it. I think about two years ago Consumer Reports published an article on the college graduate life insurance hookers. The pitch then was, "You don't have to ask your Dad about buying life insurance." Now I gather the pitch is "You really don't have to ask your husband."

Watch out for the vultures!

Don Baker

To The Editor:

Thank You, Ginny Tidlund.

I would like to relate to all Collegian readers an incident that happened to me last Saturday night at the Hatch Coffeehouse.

After paying for a spaghetti special, I uncarefully balanced by tray on a rack while getting my condiments. Suddenly - SPLAT! - my spaghetti was all over the floor. Needless to say, so were my spirits.

"That's OK - go ahead and get another serving," said Ginny Tidlund, the lady at the register. She told me to relax and eat.

So, folks, there are people such as Ginny Tudlund who are concerned and who do their best.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology Game: Guess the signs of the following celebrities. Give yourself 20 points for each correct answer: Spiro Agnew (1), Henry Kissinger (2), George Foreman(3),Lawrence Welk (4) and Robert Mitchum (5). If you score 100, you are outstanding — or psychic. If you score 80, you are excellent. If your total is 60, you are good. If you score 40, you are on the right track. If your total is 20 or [illegible] correct answer, you could become adept [illegible] you fail to correctly identify and of the zodiacal signs, you need practice. Answers: Scorpio (1), Gemini (2), Capricorn (3), Pisces (4) and Leo (5).

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cycle high but no one is offering you a bed of roses. There are responsibilities and conflicts. You have to face issue which adds up to experience versus progress, age versus youth. You will have to be wise. You come through by being true to your own principles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Relative who complains, sings blues, may merely be testing. Rise above the petty. Laugh at your own foibles. What occurs behind the scenes now is not important. Others may try to magnify events. But do what you know is right — and you emerge victorious. Aquarian is involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Getting what you think you want could be costly. There are alternatives. Know it and experiment. Go places. Test, try — socialize. Sagittarian could figure prominently. Ideas abound — give them a chance to develop.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Responsibility is featured. You may feel "put upon" or "closed in." In actuality, you have chance to carve niche for yourself. You can gain recognition by being through and professional. Improve property.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Tread lightly. Someone may be trying to tell you something. Gemini, Virgo persons could be involved. Leave room for revision. Avoid long-range commitment. You have right to ask and analyze. If you persist, you get answers. But don't chide or threaten.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accounts, policies, inventories are emphasized. Maintain balance. Avoid extremes. Be patient, diplomatic. Family situation will improve. Key is to help by being receptive. Gift purchase now could boost morale. Taurus, Libra persons may be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lie low. Study Virgo message. Don't rock emotional boat. Mate, partner demands attention. Give it, but don't fool yourself. This is a waiting period. You get nothing for nothing. Prepare, plan, get lay of land. Be aware of legal implications of any situation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You learn lessons and not all of them can be considered pleasant. But you learn and grow. Key is not to repeat mistakes. You will be given chance to prove yourself. Use past experience. Older person is on your side.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Finish rather than start — find better ways of getting ideas, products to more persons more of the time. Emotional responses are more important than usual. One close to you may appear stubborn. Be willing to listen. Making minor concession is not the same as admitting defeat.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be up against roadblock. New directions are necessary but perhaps not available. Creative resources will have to be tapped. Take nothing for granted. If you decide to move, push ahead with force.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Study Capricorn message. Don't sacrifice quality for speed. Security should not be overlooked. Cancer individual offers to cooperate. Accept. But don't think anyone is giving you something for nothing. Be realistic.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Carelessness now causes you to pay a steep price. Guard valuables. Don't try too much at once. Know it and guard against it. Young person throws problem on your shoulders.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are on brink of a new cycle, adventure. You will be more independent in 1974 and July could be your most important month. You are due to be rid of burden, to be more vital and perhaps to be madly in love. Persons born under Leo, Aquarius and Scorpio play key roles in your life.

The Arts At UMass

A discussion of Bertolucci's film, "Last Tango in Paris," starring Marlon Brando, will be held Thursday between 12:15 and 1:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Opening comments will be given by Fred Robinson, English professor who teaches courses in film and literature criticism.

Tonight, at 8 in the Colonial Lounge, three writers will read their literary works. David Lenson and Susan Grant will read poetry, and Robert Steiner will read fiction.

"Ring Concerto," a work composed by Frederick Tillis for the University Symphony Orchestra of UMass and featuring jazz percussionist Max Roach, will be premiered at the orchestra's concert tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Pitt Freshman Named All American

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Running back Tony Dorsett of the University of Pittsburgh Monday became the first freshman in 29 years to be named to The Associated Press All-American college football team, which also includes repeaters Randy Gradishar and John Hicks of Ohio State and Richard Wood of Southern California.

Gradishar and Wood are linebackers. Hicks is an offensive tackle.

Dorsett, a 5-foot-11, 175-pound tailback from Aliquippa, Pa., finished second nationally in rushing with 1,586 yards in 11 games and was the major reason Pitt posted its first winning record in a decade.

The last freshman to win first-team honors was fullback Doc Blanchard of Army in 1944.

Joining Dorsett in a record-setting backfield are running backs Roosevelt Leaks of Texas and John Cappelletti of Penn State, who finished fourth and fifth in the rushing statistics, and quarterback David Jaynes of Kansas, who set six Big Eight Conference passing records.

The AP All-America team will appear on the Bob Hope Special, to be shown by NBC-TV on Dec. 9 at 9 p.m., EST.

The rest of the offensive team consists of wide receiver Lynn Swann of Southern California, tight end Andre Tillman of Texas Tech, tackle Buddy Brown of Alabama, guards Tyler Lafauci of Louisiana State and Bill Yoest of North Carolina State and center Bill Wyman.

Rounding out the defensive team are ends Pat Donovan of Stanford and Randy White of Maryland, tackles John Dutton of Nebraska and Dave Gallagher of Michigan, middle guard Lucious Selmon of Oklahoma, linebacker Rod Shoate of Oklahoma, and backs Jimmy Allen of UCLA, Artimus Parker of Southern California and Mike Townsend of Notre Dame.

The team consists of one freshman, 16 seniors and five juniors — Wood, Leaks, Donovan, White and Shoate.

Penn State Coach Joe Paterno, who has coached such greats as Lenny Moore, Franco Harris, Lydell Mitchell, Mike Reid, Ted Kwalick, Jack Ham and John Hufnagel, calls Cappelletti "the best player I've ever been around."

The 6-1, 215-pounder carried 286 times for 1,522 yards and 16 touchdowns...and in one game he only appeared for three plays because of an injury and didn't carry the ball. He also caught 22 passes for 207 yards and a touchdown and completed a pass for 17 yards.

Leaks, a bruising 220-pounder, led Texas to its sixth consecutive Southwest Conference championship with a league record 1,415 yards, including a brilliant 342-yard game against Southern Methodist. That was only eight yards short of the national one-game mark.

Jaynes completed 172 of 338 passes for 2,131 yards and 13 touchdowns and was intercepted only nine times, one of the best interception ratios in history.

Trading Brisk At Baseball Meetings

By HAL BOCK

HOUSTON (AP) — Pitchers were the top commodity Monday, with a fistful of trades and an unusually active player draft signalling the start of baseball's annual winter meetings.

Three trades, all involving pitchers, opened what promised to be a busy week of bartering. First, the Philadelphia Phillies acquired right-hander Ron Schueler from Atlanta in exchange for Barry Lersch, another righty, and shortstop Craig Robinson.

Then, Oakland and the Chicago Cubs swapped veteran relievers, with the world champion A's shipping Horacio Pina to the Cubs for Bob Locker.

After that, Houston sent reliever Jim Ray and infielder Gary Sutherland to Detroit for right-hander Fred Scherman.

Five of the 12 players selected in the draft also were pitchers, including ex-major leaguers Gary Ryerson, chosen by the San Francisco Giants, and Mike McQueen, grabbed by the Cincinnati Reds.

Philadelphia opened the draft by choosing shortstop Ed Crosby, who split last season between Cincinnati and St. Louis. The acquisition of Crosby plugs the gap created by the trade of Robinson to the Braves in the deal for Scheuler.

"We're still looking for another starter," said Phillies' Manager Danny Ozark. "Everyone's looking for pitching."

The deal started a busy day for the assembled baseball boses. Next was the player draft-a source of talent that has yielded little in recent years. Surprisingly, a dozen players were plucked, at a total cost of $300,000.

Besides Ryerson and McQueen, pitchres chosen were Carl Moran by the Chicago White Sox, George Hutson by the Chicago Cubs and Earl Stephenson by Montreal. Also picked were Tom Egan by California, infielder Billy Parker by the New York Yankees, shortstop Sergio Ferrer by Minnesota, catcher Gene Lamont by Detroit, infielder Larry Milbourne by Houston and first baseman Tolia Solaita by Kansas City.

Heisman Trophy Wide Open

By ALEX SACHARE

NEW YORK (AP) — The most wide-open Heisman Trophy race in years will be decided Tuesday when the winner of the award as "the outstanding college football player of 1973" will be announced at the Downtown Athletic Club.

More than a dozen candidates have emerged for the honor, and while all have their credentials, none ranks as a commanding favorite.

Although Penn State running back John Cappelletti appears to have a slight edge, the winner could just as likely come from among running backs Roosevelt Leaks of Texas, Archie Griffin of Ohio State and Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh; quarterback David Jaynes of Kansas; offensive tackle John Hicks of Ohio State; middle guard Lucious Selmon of Oklahoma, and linebacker Randy Gradishar of Ohio State.

Quite a few others also will receive support, including quarterbacks Jesse Freitas of San Diego State and Danny White of Arizona State; running backs Anthony Davis of Southern California and Woody Green of Arizona State, and center Bill Wyman of Texas.

The 1,200 sports writers and broadcasters who participate in the balloting have developed a formula in making their choices over the years, and the winner rarely has varied from the pattern.

Seniors have won the award 34 of 38 times. The winners include 35 backs — and not a single interior lineman. Only one ever has come from a losing team, and that was Paul Hornung of Notre Dame, the school which leads all others with six Heisman winners. Other factors which have helped in the past are good performances in television games; playing for a prestigious school, preferably in a major conference, and playing for a well-respected coach.

Last year's winner, Johnny Rodgers of Nebraska, fit the mold almost perfectly.

By those standards, Cappelletti would appear to be the winner. He gained 1,522 yards and scored 17 touchdowns this season, leading Penn State to an unbeaten record and a berth in the Orange Bowl. He is a senior, whereas Leaks, Griffin, Dorsett and Davis are underclassmen.

But one major factor working against Cappelletti is geography. It has been 10 years since an Eastern player — Navy's Roger Staubach — won the award.

And if you discount the two service academies, only one Eastern player — Ernie Davis of Syracuse, in 1961 — has received the Heisman Trophy in the past 20 years.

So this could be the year voters decide to break some of their past habits.

Ohio State's Hicks, a senior, has been called by his coach, Woody Hayes, "the greatest lineman I have ever coached, including Jim Parker." He has received considerable publicity for an offensive lineman, and could be the first of his position to win.

NEW YORK (AP) - Atlanta's Pete Maravich, bolstered by a 42-point binge against Buffalo, regained the National Basketball Association scoring lead, according to statistics released Monday.

Maravich, raised his average to 29 points a game, replacing last week's leader, Bob McAdoo of Buffalo, who slipped to second with 27.8. Lou Hudson of Atlanta was third with 26.8, followed by Gail Goodrich of Los Angeles with 26.2 and Geoff Petrie of Portland with 26.

Jim Washington of Atlanta took the field goal percentage lead with 55.2, Chicago's Jerry Sloan maintained the steals lead with 2.68 per game and Golden State's Jeff Mullins retained his free throw lead with 93.5 per cent.

According to NHL statistics released Monday, Boston's Phil Esposito, with 53 points on 25 goals and 28 assists, has built up an eleven point lead in the scoring race over teammate Bobby Orr who leads the league in assists with 29. Bruin left-winger Kenny Hodge ranks third in the scoring stats with 18 goals and 20 assists, while Buffalo's Rick Martin ranks fourth with 32 points.

An Olympian

The winter sports season is here at last. While the spectators breathe sighs of relief at having lasted through the purgatory of the inter-season, the athlete looks ahead with dread anticipation. Stretching before him are four months of hard work, constant preparation, and perpetual anxiety.

It is during this time that an inspiration is most warmly received. For some athletes it might be in the form of a sentence whose bombastic rhetoric is worth remembering, for others the quest for a title and recognition, and for still others inspiration comes from knowing that someone else received success as a result of diligence and sacrifice.

I know someone that fits the last description perfectly. His name is Tom Callaghan and he is an Olympian of a very special calibre. Tom is the silver medalist in Greco-Roman wrestling and the bronze medalist in Freestyle wrestling. The titles he won came as result of his participation last summer in the World Games for the Deaf held in Malmo, Sweden. Sometimes called the Deaf Olympics, the Games are held every four years and parallel the regular Olympics in sports represented for competition.

Tom is a UMass grad of the School of Engineering and the Clarke School for the Deaf. He is currently working as a civil engineer for the Northampton firm of Curran Associates. While at UMass Tom wrestled on and off for the then Redmen. He continued working out upon his graduation and often gave the heavyweights more than they could handle.

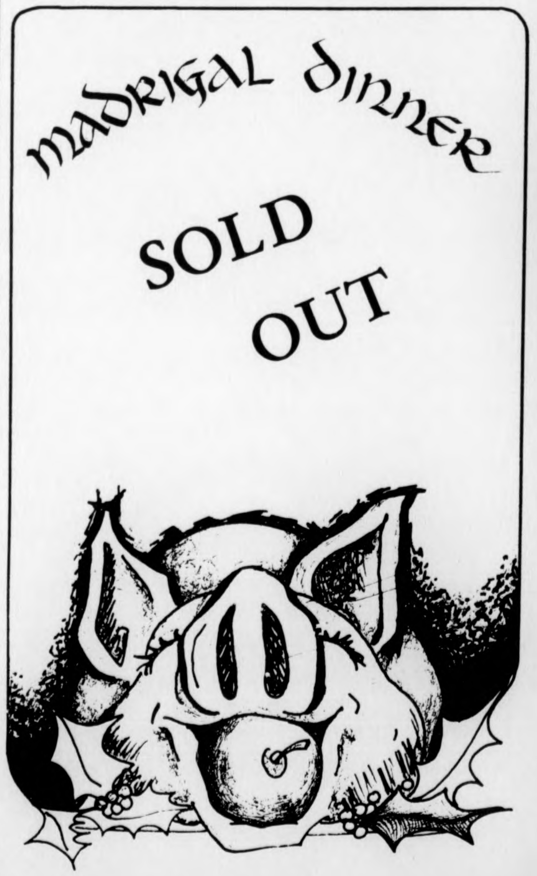
"Tough" is the best way to describe the way Tom wrestles. What he lacks in finesse he makes up for in determination and conditioning. To qualify for the Games he had to win the Trials held in North Carolina the summer before. Wrestling in the 198 pound class, he arrived at the trials about ten pounds over and had to run three miles on the last day just to keep his weight down. The running could only help him, as he was the gold medalist in both Greco-Roman and freestyle at the trials.

Once in the Olympics, though, Cal found what other Olympic wrestlers have found — the people to beat are the Russians. It was a member of the Soviet Union's team each time that forced Tom to take something other than the gold.

It was a long year to those medals though and it was a year that saw Cal run almost daily, wrestle in every freestyle and Greco-Roman tournament he could make it to and always watch that weight, trying to keep it from bulking up to the point where it would be more of an effort to take it off than to wrestle. The coaching Cal had in the meantime, was not from the best Olympic coach the country had, but from other wrestlers who would go over mistakes and holds and run with Cal. UMass Coach Homer Barr was always available and sometimes pushed Cal if he would come in to work out with the Minutemen.

But mostly the drive that brought Tom Callaghan two medals came from within. Any person who has a slight bit of deafness is eligible to participate in the Olympics. In wrestling being deaf means not hearing a referee's whistle to tell you when to stop wrestling and not being able to anticipate the opponents move by listening for that sudden, sharp inhalation that precedes a man making his move. It means having to really pay attention as a complicated move is being walked through, knowing that questions are hard to answer for the other person. It means having to take the same beating that wrestlers of any persuasion take and not being able to share with others, in the complete fatigue that invades every part of your person.

But it also means overcoming all of these and winning medals in world class competition. For Tom Callaghan that means being on Olympian, period.



UMass Matmen Home Face Boston State

After coming home with a victory over Syracuse University this past weekend, the varsity gymnastic team will host Boston State tonight in the first home meet of the season. The competition will be held at 7:30 in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Emotionally and physically the team is striving for peak performance at this meet. "This will be our last pressure meet before intersession and we're hoping to score 158," commented Head Coach Tom Dunn. A score of 158 would match Southern Connecticut's winning score over Temple. Both schools along with Penn State will be UMass' strongest competitors this season.

Leading the Minutemen will be All-around performers, Gene Whelan, Steve Scuderi, and Bill Brouillet. All three men performed well against Syracuse and are looking forward to cleaner routines and higher scores tonight against Boston State, according to Coach Dunn.

Event specialists that did well against Syracuse were Jack Fabbricante in vaulting, and Dan Barter on high bar. Other specialists competing tonight will be Brian Hassig, pommel horse, freshman Pete Lusk, still rings, Phil Aubrey, high bar and parallel bars; and Tim Beasley, parallel bars.

Making their first appearances in varsity competition will be sophomores Jon Brandon and Chuck Hall, and freshmen Paul and Steve Marks. These junior varsity gymnasts performed well against Plymouth State's Varsity team last Friday night.

Now Boston State isn't exactly the class competition that UMass needs to get ready for the upcoming meet with the Nittany Lions of Penn State University. However the time was when UMass wasn't exactly competition and they were tolerated by schools like Springfield. Thus Boston State is on the UMass agenda of teams to be demolished. This will be, however, the first year that UMass will be performing full strength against a progressively better Boston State team.

Rink Closing To Save Energy

By MIKE BROPHY

In light of the present energy crisis Amherst College will be shutting down the vast majority of its facilities for a three week period starting during the Christmas recess and lasting through the middle of January.

Although the College has made no official comment on the situation, among the facilities reportedly being shut down is Orr Rink which serves the UMass hockey teams.

The College will evidently be shutting down the rink leaving only one of three Brine compressors running. "This is being left running to keep the bed of ice we presently have," said Athletic Director Ben McCabe.

The heat in the rink complex has already been shut off according to a regular skater at the rink who returned from a three-hour work out yesterday noon with "frozen toes."

When UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerny was asked of the situation with regard to the UMass hockey team he said he was not totally aware of the situation but felt that "it is not all as serious as it sounds."

"Amherst College has made no firm statement as of yet concerning the situation but I am sure we can get ice elsewhere if Coach (Jack) Canniff feels he needs it," added McInerny.

Just how the UMass community will be affected remains to be seen, but it seems certain that the hockey players will lose valuable ice time.

"De-energized"

Into Submission — As the mercury dips so seemingly does the fortune of MAN. Our lives are not left with our maker, but within the very economic turmoil that we've created. It may get to the point that we'll bend to petroleum and starve for gas and no one will escape the calamity...including the world of sport. The pestilence is underway.

Over the very horizon that faces us is a brand new conception of sport. We will no longer be able to look at anything as a national pastime. A society that has been mesmerized by championships, spoiled by a Boeing 707, spellbound by a New Hampshire ski slope, and lulled by night football in Boston now must amend. The awakening will be a rude one.

And so the collective life styles of millions are in jeopardy. The energy crisis is a coalition much more devastating than the NCAA, more powerful than Bowie Kuhn, more repulsive than Charlie Finley, and more reforming than the Inquisition. It's direct affect won't immediately be known. But it's apparent. The University of Massachustts will be a casualty.

When all is said and done maybe we do owe our souls to the oil man. Sport will soon find out. When life becomes a struggle to live and man has to compromise, sport will become the legislated. We'll never know whether the cutback will be a solution. But it's inevitable. Sport will become a victim. A victim of a crisis man will never be able to analyze.

And so our culture is predicated on oil, gas, and plastics. So is sport. Both will soon be rationed. And at the University of Massachusetts both will be diluted. In the process schedules will change, opponents will have to regionalize, practice schedules will consolidate, and facilities will lay dormant and non "energized" for seemingly endless stretches. The coutenence of sport will wrinkle.

Perhaps the most drastic local measure will be the closing of Amherst's Orr Rink, parent lodging for our nomadic hockey club. For nearly a month during the holiday break Orr will be silenced. No practice. No games. No UMass hockey team. And you can bet the ghost of the energy crisis will make a dramatic dent on Caniff's (hockey coach Jack) overall standing. But Jackie Leaman. You're to be "de-energized" too.

The Boyden gym closes for Intercession. The Cage will be de-heated. Could you see Dr. A (Skinner) jamming the ball during vacation with mittens. Dorms will close. All campus pools won't get anywhere near room temperature. And like alcohol into the bloodstream, the whole pulse of sport on this campus will be intoxicated. The product may not be the same. With vacation elongated a week could you imagine playing Niagara at the Cage Feb. 2nd before a "townie" crowd. The pulse won't be the same.

We can take Ralph Nader's solution for what it's worth, that of a "solar allowance". That might very well be the only salvation for outdoor, night athletics. We've lived in the push button age and enjoyed football with 18 color cameras and stadium lighting powerful enough to light a hamlet through a Valley Forge Christmas. But now the mercury dips...and so does the Wide World of Sport.

Sport will now be described in God's sunlight. A new recreational society capitalizing on the aestetics of walking and byicycling will emege over the dollar signs of skiing, mountain climbing, and duck hunting. We're going to stay local. Especially on Sunday a jog around the block will have to do. Besides it won't cost us a killowat.

You talk about that little hustler shooting baskets in the schoolyard till late in the eve...He's no more. He's been "de-energized"...

Views From Center Ice...

By BILL BALLOU

Things don't look quite as bleak for UMass after looking at some of the weekend scores. Boston State beat second rated Bowdoin, 5-4 in overtime, Norwich tied Northeastern in Boston, 6-6, and in the biggest one of all — Vermont beat BU in Boston in overtime 3-2.

The scores weren't that shocking to Jack Canniff. "You know," he said, "there isn't that much difference between the top teams in the divisions when you come right down to it."........Merrimack outshooting the Minutemen on Saturday night is no disgrace, they've outshot every team they've played this season. It's probably the best Merrimack squad ever........New England Whalers' attendance is down 41 per cent from last season. The Whalers thought they were golden when they were able to schedule all their games in the Boston Garden. Maybe the Bruins have recaptured the adulation of the city, or maybe Boston fans are too smart to buy the "major league" tag the Whalers are trying to sell......Speaking of sagging attendances, the New York Golden Blades — Jersey Knights — maybe Baltimore who-knows-whats have drawn 1008 and 1091 fans to their last two games in Cherry Hill, N.J.......Expect Jack Canniff to make a couple — at least, personnel changes before Wednesday's game with Williams. Most likely some freshmen will be involved......The New York Rangers acquisition of Gilles Marotte gives them what has to be the strongest defense in the league. They've got Park, Rolfe, Seiling, Neilson, Harris, and now Marotte as well as rookie Larry Sacharuk. Someone has to go......The Springfield Kings are featuring "College Night" at their game against the New Haven Nighthawks Friday night. All tickets are half-price upon showing of your ID......It's a little late now, but the first two Merrimack goals Saturday night should have been disallowed. The first was way offside and the second should have been blown down by an interference call......At least three of the Merrimack goals came on the power play......Terry O'Reilly is the poorest excuse for a National Hockey League player I've ever seen, and that includes Cliff Pennington......Watch Doug Gibson, leading scorer on the Braves, he played on Pat Keenan's line in tryout camp and promises to be an excellent center......The Braves are almost surely gone from Boston next season. Speculation has them in either Fitchburg or Cape Cod, but the Cape would seem more likely. They've already scheduled a regular season game in Braintree.......Derek Sanderson says the AHL is tougher than the WHA. He means physically tougher, since he also says the WHA is faster and smarter. He did unbelievable things for AHL attendance when he was down there. In Springfield the Kings sold out their building for the first time ever (7500); the game before they drew only 2100.

New Office Formed For Handicapped Students

By ROBERTA MARTONE

The problems that handicapped people face are being dealt with on a larger scale, as a result of the formation of a new office for handicapped students, in 229D Whitmore, under the direction of Peggy Stevens. The office was formerly located in Brooks dormitory.

"We are primarily here to advocate for the rights of the handicapped person. There are alot of little things that have to be done — things that people never think of, but they have to be done." Mrs. Stevens said.

The Handicapped Student Affairs Committee works with the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission, The Commission for the Blind, and The Veteran's Administration.

Mrs. Stevens said that there is no four-year institution in the North East area that provides adequately for the handicapped student. The Handicapped Student Affairs Program is currently working with the Admissions and Transfer offices to recruit handicapped people for the university. "We want to let guidance counselors know that UMass is accesible to the handicapped," she continued.

According to Mrs. Stevens, the housing at UMass is not adequate for the handicapped person. The doors are too heavy, and the toilet facilities are not geared to the handicapped. "It's something that can be accomplished eventually, but it will take time. Improvements are in the making right now", said Mrs. Stevens.

She went on to say that there are no library resources for the visually handicapped. The Handicapped Students Affairs Program hopes to establish a low vision aid center. The center would have at its disposal: close circuit TVs, speech compressors, cassette tapes, and Braille readings. "We are not blaming the library. We know they'd be more than happy to oblige us, but there is just not enough money."

Mrs. Stevens mentioned that the program wants to establish early registration, or a "mobility orientation" for the handicapped students. "I would encourage new students to enroll in the summer semester, so they can get used to the campus before the crowded fall session begins", she said.

The handicapped Student Affairs Program would also like to explore the possibilites of having tapes made of the Daily Collegian, and the University Directions booklet that is published every semester. These tapes would be available at the Handicapped Student Affairs office, or the Admissions office, or the Infirmary.

The program's biggest problem right now is money. "We need money for visual aids equipment, and the University needs money to remedy the architectural barriers around campus." said Mrs. Stevens.

Mrs. Stevens, who is sponsored by the UMass Health Services, receives a small operations fund. She also has the services of two work-study students.

There is also a Trust Fund for the program. Last year, the senior class donated $4,000.00 to the handicapped program. Some of the proceeds from last year's Dance Marathon were also donated to the program.

Along with Mrs. Stevens, there is an advisory committee of ten members, whose chairman is Marc Gelinas. "They are my sounding board and moral support", said Mrs. Stevens of her workers.

The committee was formed two years ago for the purpose of establishing an office for the handicapped students. Having reached their goal, the committee's efforts are now directed towards support of the Handicapped Student Affairs Program. The committee members include physical plant workers, representatives from: the Admissions Office, Health Services, and Veterans Affairs Office, and a few handicapped students.

Publications put out by the Handicapped Students Affairs Program will be available in January of next semester. "Yellow Pages" is a directory of services and equipment in Western Massachusetts, for the handicapped person. "Handicapped Persons Campus Accesibility" is a guide describing the architectural accesibility of the UMass campus. They will both be available in the Infirmary, the Admissions Office, or her office in 229D Whitmore.

Mrs. Stevens urges anyone interested to come to her office in Whitmore.

ARA Looks Into DC Improvements

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

In case you haven't noticed those men in the dark sportjackets parading around the dining commons' for the past two days, ARA services has been invited to UMass throughout this week by the Food Services Dept. With a crew of 20 the people involved are strong, going over the Food Services operation with a fine toothcomb with the aim of improving the total operation, within the bounds of present finances.

Four representatives of ARA were on hand at the initial meeting of the Food Services Governing Board last night in Hamlin House. Members of the senate committee (chaired by Ken Somers) include representatives of the residence areas and the hierarchy of the Food Services Department, under the temporary direction of Ken Dean.

Although ARA apparently has the facilities to take over a Food Services set up such as ours, they have been serving UMass only in a consultant capacity. They will be sticking their noses into everything from taste testing to what to do with the vacant Hampden Dining Commons, in their week-long search.

At the end of their study, ARA will compile a report (which will be available before Christmas) with recommendations for Food Services, ways to improve it, in compliance with the desires of students as well as trying to cut corners on cost wherever possible.

In conjunction with the study, on Friday at the noon meal, ARA will be conducting a Dining Service Survey at all four commons. The purpose of the survey is to determine student reaction to our existing dining services facilities, concept and merchandising techniques.

In the University's release, it contends that the University's objective is to provide the student body with the finest in food services. The answers you offer on the questionnaire at the time of the survey will help them do this for you.

Along with its list of recommendation, the results of this survey will be published.

The cost of the week-long search project will be "not in excess of $5000", Food Services picking up the tab out of its operations budget.

As for the Food Services Governing Board itself, the title "governing" is a bit misleading.

The board will serve as a link between the students and the Food Services Department. The board will hopefully receive input from students and pass them on in the form of a recommendation to Food Services. Whether the body has actual "governing" power is a major question, but it appears that this will not be a problem, judging by the fact that the two agencies (the board and Food Services) have a united purpose — to improve the quality of food services on this campus.

(Contrary to public opinion, the brass in Food Services do not go out to lunch. They eat the same food you and I do, in the same cafeteria, Ken Dean admitted to that.)

In another development, the board attained a change in the times of "test kitchen" sessions, where various foods are sampled by a group of 15-25 students. (Dean informed the board that about 60% of the foods tested never make it to the menu) By a process of experimentation, the best time will be arrived at with the next testing taking place tomorrow at 12:30 on the third floor of Worcester Dining Commons.

Rise Up In Anger

By DENNY MATTEAU

Ms. Chris George, a member of the Chicago organization Rising Up Angry, spoke yesterday in the Campus Center.

The tak was sponsored by the Everywoman's Center and the Committee on Poverty. Ms. George gave an overview of 'Angry's' experiences in organizing popular activism in Chicago around the issues like police brutality, health care, and tenents' rights.

Rising Up Angry defines itself as "A Revolutionary Organization Committed to Building a New Man, a New Woman, and a New World", according to its newspaper, also called Rising Up Angry. The group started about five years ago, with the newspaper as its main focus of energy.

"The people came from a variety of backgrounds," said Ms. George, "At first, many were from the student movements, the antiwar movements, mostly white... The question of who has power, and of getting it to the people, can't be decided on campuses. We realized we must build among the working clases, if the movement is to consist of workers."

Ms. George described herself as an 'upwardly mobile worker'. I'm in the working class, and I was able to go to college."

'Angry' took a neighborhood, issue-oriented approach, she explained, and concentrated in the white and Spanish areas, primarily around the North and Southwest sides of Chicago." Chicago is a very segregated city, she said, "and in the black neighborhoods, the Panthers have been very active, so we began in the white neighborhoods with the youth."

We felt this was the most important group to work with, especially the 'Greaser's', she said.

"The greasers are the most alienated and most brutalized of the workers, they are the young gangsters who get thrown in jail so much, and are upwardly mobile. Sometimes they seem like the most reactionary of the workers, but they are quick to see the changes that have to be made." she said.

Police brutality was a big problem and among the first issues to be attacked. "In most cases, brutality is a side issued," she explained, "you get arrested, and you get beat up. Through our continued activism, though, a few cops have been fired, and the problem of brutality in the neighborhoods has begun to slacken."

The activists consist of a group of about 30 lawyers who take anywhere from one to seven cases a month, without charge and give strong, comprehensive help to their clients.

"We follow everything up," said Ms. George, "and if a lawyer has been arrogant or indifferent with a client, he's out of the program."

Ms. George said that the cases handled through this program often receive aquittals, "and those that don't usually get probation, at least."

Ms. George cited one incident in which "RUA" was able to mobilize support: that of Claude Bailey. She told the story something like this:

(Staff Photo/Dan Smith)

Ms. Chris George

"About six months ago, a robbery, or something like that happened. A description of the person who did it was given and the police started chasing Claude. He did not fit the description and they beat him up. He lost an eye."

"We did a lot of petitioning and campaigning around it. The Tribune picked up on it and it's now in the courts."

"As a result of this sort of approach," she said, "public pressure has been mobilized and the police know. They're more careful now."

Ms. George said "You can't voluntarily leave society. You can aggressively fight it, but its bad things will still be in you, it's a dirty struggle."

She said that problems like sexism and imperialism are fught within the issues, "We use the slogan 'Don't Mourn-Organize'. You have to be realisti., and do what you can."

Students Voice Complaints Against Dining Commons

This is part five of a nine-part series dealing with the Dining Commons (d.c.). Investigating for the Collegian were Cindy Gonet, Mark Citron, Scott Bacherman, Jerry Lazar and Mike Kneeland.

With the exception of Nixon's policies, nothing seems to be more criticized on campus than the University Dining Commons.

Not one student interviewed by the Collegian was pleased with the quality of food served at the d.c. Most students said, however, that they had no specific suggestion for improvement, but that "something had to be wrong somewhere."

Junior Matthew Chametzhy said the "firing" of Joel Stoneham as director of food services appeared to be a "good move." Said Chametzhy, "I've worked at Amherst College and I've eaten at Hampshire College. With more money, UMass should provide service equal to those schools."

Chametzhy said that the poor quality and quantity of the food served at the d.c. means either mismanagement or embezzlement with administrators. He said he'd be willing to pay more for better service.

Stuart Simms, a freshman, agrees with Chametzhy. He suggests that the amount of help be cut down in the d.c. which would in turn lower the ticket costs. "Joel Stoneham should have been fired a long time ago," he concludes.

Sophomore Cathy Howes finds the quality of the meat particularly poor. "The meat's lousy! For what we're paying here, we're getting ripped off."

Few freshman and sophomores interviewed said they had ever heard of Joel Stoneham. About half of the juniors and seniors knew of Stoneham's position.

"If he's got anything to do with the food, I'm glad to see him go," said David Stabile, a sophomore. "The food here is lousy, there's not enough of it."

Terry Romaniah, also a sophomore, says the problems with the d.c. are not the result of any one man's influence. "The whole service has to be changed."

Most students indicated they would be willing to pay more money for their food if it improved. This concensus appears to be somewhat significant since there is some consideration being given to hiring an independant caterer.

This might mean more cost to the student. It therefore appears that students would not object to the proposal from a fiscal point of view, provided the caterer improved the food service.

Stoneham, a Navy veteran, is used to criticism. He points out that a favorite pasttime for G.I.s is complaining about the food.

This argument has some merit. Students are used to home-cooking when they enroll here. It is not surprising, then, that they are not pleased with the food. Serving a family of five is certainly easier than serving a "family" of 3,000.

Students are not used to waiting in lines; students are not used to being refused seconds; students are not even used to paying for their food.

Linda Connolly, a sophomore, thinks she has the answer. "The best solution is not to have to buy dining common's tickets."

Bus Announcement

The AP announcement in Tuesday's Collegian about the supplemental grant for the University's Research and Demonstration Mass Transit Program, is misleading and should not be interpreted as three additional buses will be purchased. The three vehicles in question were acquired last August and have been in service since that time.

School Of Ed. Offers Artwork

By LYNDA McINTYRE

A pause in the front and back hallways of the school of Education this Monday brought chances to view works of and create weaving, potato printing and ceramics. Students of the Crafts in the Classroom course, under the direction of Lynda McIntyre from the Aesthetics and Humanities program, offered a variety of experiencial workshop centers to passers by at the School of Education. From noon till 5 University professors, students, and Marks Meadow students took a creative break making cards, stationery, pots, plaques, belts, wall hangings and various collage works.

The course on Crafts in the Classroom explores arts and crafts and their use in education not only as a separate area of study but as an adjunct to many areas of study. People working at Monday's free workshops were not only exposed to the technical aspects of the craft but to educational extensions that could be explored. Questions about techniques, where to get materials, and new ideas were heard among exclamations of "this is fun", "where do we do this again," and "I think I'll build a loom like this when I get home."

"Arts help develop an inquisitive experimenting way of exploring life" says one class member. "They can help make education a "living" learning that is an unending process" says another. "The arts can help liberate a child from many of his own fears and inhibitions and if done in the right way can counter the competitive spirit of student."

A workshop participant queries "What are we doing tomorrow?" Well, not tomorrow, maybe next semester.

"Arts help develop an inquisitive experimenting way of exploring life."

McKimmie, Patterson Programs

The McKimmie House and Patterson House Intercession Programs are in the final phase of planning for the January session.

As of now five 3-credit courses and five 1-credit courses will be offered at McKimmie. Patterson will be offering three 3-credit courses and three 1-credit courses.

Both programs are offered to the ENTIRE University Community, with priority given: 1) to residents of McKimmie and Patterson, and 2) residents of Southwest. The programs will run from January 7th to January 24.

There will be vacancies in McKimmie and Patterson for participating students who need housing. Since there are a limited number of rooms, however, it is suggested that these people contact the SW Academic Affairs office in John Adams Tower.

People wishing to pre-register for the programs can do so at the Academic Affairs office. The last day for pre-registration is December 12. There will be a five dollar fee for McKimmie's program.

Patterson's courses include: Improvisation and Movement in Theatre, Human Relations, Sensitivity, Sex Roles, Examination of Sex Roles in Contemporary Society, and Problems and Politics of Feminism.

McKimmie's Courses will include: Dynamics of White Racism, We See Ourselves as The Media See Us, Review of Math For Third World Students, and Black Women In America.

The following McKimmie courses are still uncertain, due to funding: Public Health In the Black Community, Liberation Movements in Africa, Pan-Africanism-African Political Systems and Thought, The Anti-Imperialist Theatre Collective, and Public Health: Medicine and Colonialism.

Lawyers Rule Out Civil Law Suits For 1970 Kent State Killing

By MARGRET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for former Ohio Gov. James Rhodes and his National Guard chiefs told the Supreme Court Tuesday their clients are subject to criminal prosecution but not civil law suits concerning the 1970 Kent State University confrontation.

The families of three of the four students slain during the confrontation — Sandra Scheuer, Allison Krause and Jeffrey Miller — sued Rhodes, former university president Robert White and five men who were National Guard officials at the time of the confrontation.

They seek some $12 million in damages.

Lawyers for the families have asked the Supreme Court to overturn lower court decision dismissing the cases.

The suits were brought under an 1871 law prohibiting state officials from depriving citizens of their civil rights.

Charles E. Brown, arguing for all the officials, asserted that sovereign immunity protects state officials from civil suits arising from their conduct of office.

Justice Byron R. White asked whether Brown would make the same claim of immunity against allegations that officials knowingly deprived an individual of civil rights.

"Probably not," if those allegations were proved, Brown conceded.

"But would you submit those allegations to proof in court?" White questioned, alluding to the lower court decisions blocking presentation of evidence in the Kent State suits.

Brown demurred, finally suggesting under repeated questioning that the allegations themselves would have to contain some element of proof before warranting a full-fledged hearing.

White then raised questions about the applicability of immunity to state officials accused of violating criminal laws protecting civil rights.

UMass Dr. Wins Carnegie Award

By DEB GOGUEN

Dr. Joan Bean, Ph.D., recently won a Carnegie Foundation award for her research and work with undergraduates in the field of psychology at UMass.

Bean says that the award "finally leaves her some much needed breathing room" in her tight schedule so that she will be able to devote more time to research and writing. She maintained that many women who are teaching at the college level now need a Carnegie grant.

For instance, she said that the Psychology Department, in a positive effort to give women faculty members a voice, select new women faculty members for decision making committees. However, they are very time consuming so these women often have less time for important things like research and teaching. She said she was in this dilemma and it's one of the reasons she welcomes the award.

She indicated that she tries to help the people in her courses become really involved with the principles they are studying in the classroom by giving them the opportunity to apply these principles to experiences outside the classroom.

For example, she is now teaching an educational psychology course which has an enrollment of about 300 students. Still she allows these students the freedom to experiment with what they learn in class by arranging field trips to grammar schools. She called her large class "a breath of fresh air" because she says it affords her the opportunity to hear the perspectives of students who are not psychology majors.

Bean, said she worked last summer with four undergraduate women on a developmental study of achievement. She said she enjoyed working with the undergraduates, because they don't often have the opportunity to work with faculty members. Nor, do they want to risk getting involved in something that they are afraid will be too difficult for them, she said.

Bean said, "It has been critically important for my own kind of intellectual development to have fellow women faculty members to collaborate with on research work and in courses, and to be involved in research and in teaching women graduate and undergraduate students." She states that whenever there are women faculty at a school, "there are a higher number of women achievers."

She is just beginning a five year research project on Adolescent Socialization and Cognitive Processes, with the aid of a woman faculty member from Stanford. This project will include a study of first born children in the Amherst area for the first five years of their lives. They will collect data to determine the part parental attitudes have had in shaping the different learning perspectives of males and females.

Nixon Finances Revealed

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's net worth has tripled since he took office and now stands at about $1 million, his lawyers have told Republican congressional leaders.

Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill., said Tuesday that the lawyers reported at a White House meeting that the President's net worth was in "the neighborhood of $300,000" on Jan. 1, 1969, and by last May 31 had risen to about $988,000.

Neither of the figures jibes with previous public statements by Nixon aides on the President's net worth. One White House official said this was because of differences in accounting procedures.

Anderson and others attending the two-hour White House meeting said the lawyers presented a complex cash flow chart and other documents to illustrate Nixon's income and expenditures and show how he legitimately obtained the increase in net worth.

"They made it sound pretty convincing," Anderson said.

Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., said the consensus of those at the session was that "the President had not done anything that was illegal, or irregular, or unethical."

Anderson and Tower reported that Nixon's lawyers said they were willing to let a congressional committee review Nixon's controversial half-million-dollar tax deduction for giving his vice-presidential papers to the National Archives.

Tower said the lawyers, Kenneth Gemmell of Philadelphia and H. Chapman Rose of Cleveland, said they were so confident of this and other tax claims by the President that they would invite a court test of the validity of his returns.

Gemmel and Rose, both long-time friends of the President, volunteered several weeks ago to help prepare material intended to refute allegations about Nixon's personal finances.

The materal is scheduled for release this week and will include a full audit of Nixon's finances from Jan. 1, 1969, to May 31, 1973, Anderson said.

This audit was done by the New York accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrant and a portion dealing with Nixon's California, and Florida real estate purchases was released in August.

The dates cited for the net worth figures divulged by the lawyers at the White House meeting indicated they had come from the Coopers & Lybrant audit.

When Nixon was campaigning for the White House, his aides reported that as of Sept. 30, 1968, his net worth was $515,830. After his election, May 12, 1969, the White House issued a statement listing his net worth as $596,900.

The next net worth statement was issued by the White House on Sept. 16, 1972, giving a figure of $765,118.

Early in his presidency, Nixon sold his New York apartment for $326,000. This compared with the $166,860 he had paid for it in 1963.

He also sold his stock in a Florida real estate firm for a reported $371,782, about twice the amount he reportedly paid for it over a period of years.

Profits in these transactions would account for a portion of the increase in his net worth. The White House said in its September 1972, statement that the President's net worth increase is attributable to income from his salary which has been used for improvements to his home or deposited in the bank.

Since that statement, Nixon also has sold two vacant lots in Key Biscayne which the White House said he owned jointly with his daughter, Tricia Nixon Cox.

According to the cash flow statement shown to the White House meeting, Nixon received $89,842 for his share in the transaction.

The cash flow statement also listed him as receiving $128,611 from his New York law firm after he took office, as well as smaller amounts from bank account interest and book royalties.

Tower reported that since the May 31 closing date of the audit, Nixon has purchased another $50,000 certificate of deposit from the Key Biscayne bank headed by friend C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo.

This, he said, is in addition to the $250,000 in certificates of deposit he had purchased at the bank before May 31.

Because of the large tax deduction resulting from the donation of vice presidential papers, Nixon has paid less than $6,000 in federal income taxes during the past three years, the White House figures show.

The donation has been challenged on grounds that it was not legally completed before July 25, 1969, when the law was changed to deny big tax deductions to individuals who make gifts of papers they have created themselves.

Nixon's lawyers said, according to Anderson, that without the deduction the President would have had to pay about $170,000 more in income taxes between 1969 and 1972.

At a Nov. 17 news conference, Nixon said the Internal Revenue Service had audited his returns and raised no questions about the deduction. "If they do," he added, "...I will be glad to have the paper back and I will pay the tax because I think they are worth more than that."

WASHINGTON,--PROMOTED--Vice Admiral Hyman Rickover gets a hand shake from President Nixon at the White House after Rickover was promoted to Admiral.

Our Leaders Are Absent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' bid to reassert its responsibilities has provided the opening for some lawmakers to deal with an old problem — congressional absenteeism.

Calling absenteeism "a thorn in the side of Congress," Rep. Clarence Miller, R-Ohio, has introduced a constitutional amendment providing for expulsion of members who miss 40 per cent of the votes during a term.

There is nothing new about the proposal. Former Sen. Margaret Chase-Smith, R-Maine, tried in 1969 to make it possible for delinquent members to shape up or be shipped out. Her bill was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee where it died.

Presently, four smiliar bills are languishing before the House Judiciary Committee. Their chances of survival — like other bills seeking to disqualify members at age 60 — are said to be minimal.

Miller believes that whatever reasons congressmen had for not wanting to pull the rug from under less zealous colleagues, they are no longer valid in today's post-Watergate political climate.

"There could be no better way of promoting public confidence in our abilities and commitment to move America forward than a high level of congressional attendance and voting participation," Miller said in introducing his bill.

The Ohion congressman, who has not missed a vote since coming to Washington in 1967, noted that a five per cent absentee rate in private industry is considered high, yet the 11 per cent rate in Congress this year is its best record since 1959.

Pioneer 10 Pleases Scientists; Will Transmit Data Five Years

By WILLIAM STOCKTON
Associated Press Writer

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Scientists yesterday praised Pioneer 10's voyage past Jupiter and said they hoped the spacecraft would transmit data for another five years as it journeys out of the solar system.

"The Pioneer 10 mission by all standards is being written down right now as a 100 per cent success," said Dr. R.S. Kraemer, the head of planetary programs for the National Aeronautics and Space Agency.

Hoping for a stream of data in years ahead, Dr. John Wolfe said, "What we'd really like to do is go to 110 per cent success if possible."

Scientists said they might receive data five years from now when the spacecraft nears the orbit of Uranua about 2 billion miles from earth.

The unmanned space probe survived punishing Jovian radiation storms Monday and was still sending data to earth.

The quarter-ton voyager was traveling at 35,800 miles an hour, its speed steadily decreasing as it left Jupiter's gravity.

From 300,000 miles beyond Jupiter early yesterday, Pioneer 10 sent back a dramatic photograph of sunrise showing the planet as a long silver crescent — a view astronomers cannot see from earth.

Computers at the University of Arizona in Tucson are cleansing distortion from Pioneer 10's pictures of Jupiter.

Dr. Tom Gehrels, an Arizona scientist, said computer-enhanced versions of a photograph taken about 100,000 miles from Jupiter's Great Red Spot promised to be revealing.

He said they might confirm theories that the 15,000-mile wide oval spot on Jupiter's face is a tower of clouds above the rest of the colorful and turbulent atmosphere.

Wolfe said an infrared heat-sensing device aboard the spacecraft had placed the average temperature of Jupiter's cloud tops at minus 208 degrees Fahrenheit. Variations in temperature could be seen, which might be related to differences in Jupiter's cloud structure, he said.

Upsurge Of Arab Activity, Kissinger To Visit Mid-East

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A hand grenade exploded in a crowded street in the Arab section of Jerusalem yesterday, injuring 18 persons, five of them Israeli women soldiers. Police questioned 50 Arabs detained after the blast.

The explosion, which went off 200 yards from the traditional burial place of Christ, followed a recent upsurge of Arab political activity in the west bank of Jordan in support of Palestinian guerrillas.

It was the first serious incident in a year in the Arab section of the city, which Israel took from Jordan in the 1967 war.

On Israel's military fronts, several shells fired from Lebanon fell near two settlements in northern Israel.

The military command said it was not known if the shells were fired by Arab guerrillas or Lebanese regulars. There were no casualties.

Authoritative sources in Damascus reported that Syria will attend the Middle East peace talks tentatively scheduled to begin Dec. 18 in Geneva.

Syrian President Hafez Assad has also agreed to a visit by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger shortly before the scheduled peace conference.

Kissinger will visit Syria, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Lebanon, and Israel from Dec. 13 to 17 to prepare for the peace talks, a State Department spokesman announced.

Syrian Ambassador Mwaffak Allaf told a European conference in Geneva that Europe should take a leading role in the search for peace in the Middle East.

The ambassador said Europe should participate in a Middle East settlement "because every current affecting this part of the world has its repercussions in Europe, both in the fields of security and economy."

The Israeli-Egyptian talks on fixing a cease-fire line remained stalled, but Egypt's leading newspaper said the United Nations commander in the Middle East has proposed they resume today.

But there was no word from either Egypt or Israel on whether the talks would be reopened this week. They were broken off last Thursday after the two sides failed to agree on a separation of forces from the tense desert front.

NEW YORK — WHY GASOLINE DOESN'T BELONG IN CAR TRUNKS — Two New York City firemen stand by as a car used to demonstrate why gasoline doesn't belong in the trunks of automobiles goes up in flames. Although firemen detonated the five-gallon can of gasoline in the demonstration car's trunk with electricity and black powder, a spokesman said a rear-end collision will, in many cases, touch off a similar conflagration.

Hanoi Troops Take S. Vietnamese Town

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - North Vietnamese troops backed by 20 tanks captured a South Vietnamese town, the first taken by Hanoi troops in the 10 months of the cease-fire, the Saigon command said yesterday.

In Cambodia, antigovernment rebel infiltrators attacked sentry positions on the outskirts of Phnom Penh. It was the first attack on the Cambodian capital's suburbs in two months.

The North Vietnamese overwhelmed Saigon government defenders in their fourth assault yesterday on Kien Duc, near the Cambodian border, the Saigon command said.

The town was one of about a dozen points military sources said the North Vietnamese attacked along a 32-mile corridor from Dak Song southward to Kien Duc.

The South Vietnamese government continued raids that have lifted the air war to the highest level since the cease-fire began.

There was hand-to-hand fighting at Kien Duc. An unspecified number of North Vietnamese swept about 1,000 defenders from the town.

There was no immediate report on casualties in fighting there.

The command said its forces took with them a large number of the town's estimated 5,000 inhabitants and refugees.

Saigon government forces knocked out five tanks and killed 75 North Vietnamese soldiers in the fighting along the 32-mile front near the Cambodian border, the Saigon command said.

Initial government reports said four Saigon government soldiers were killed and 18 wounded, not including the casualties at Kien Duc.

In Cambodia, field reports said antigovernment rebels began moving in five small canoes through a swampy area bordering on the southern rim of Phnom Penh.

The infiltrators made their way to a market and opened fire with automatic weapons and small rockets on government sentries. At least 15 Phnom Penh government troops were wounded, the field reports said.

Hundreds of South Vietnamese warplanes raided North Vietnamese and Viet Cong positions Monday and yesterday in what the military command said were punitive strikes for Viet Cong attacks on Saigon's fuel reserves.

The intensified fighting was seen by government military spokesmen as a prelude to a general offensive South Vietnamese officials have been forecasting for early next year.

Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, chief spokesman for the South Vietnamese command, said the North Vietnamese assaults on Kien Duc marked the first time the Communist command had attacked a district capital since the cease fire went into effect last Jan. 28.

Daylight Saving Time Favored By Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted yesterday to put the nation on year-round Daylight Saving Time for the next 22 months.

The measure, offered as part of the federal energy conservation program, will allow a state to exempt itself from daylight time during the winter months. A state with two or more time zones could exempt any zone.

The vote was 68 to 10. The House has passed a similar bill, and a conference committee will come up with a compromise of the two versions.

Under the Senate bill, daylight time would become effective on the fourth Sunday after the measure is signed by President Nixon. The House version would become effective within 15 days of enactment. Thus, it seems almost certain that most of the nation will return to daylight time by Dec. 30, with clocks being set forward one hour.

Energy Experts Expect Further Fuel Restrictions

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's newly named energy czar, William E. Simon, said yesterday the Nixon administration is considering taxes, price increases, rationing or a combination of the three to cut gasoline consumption by 30 per cent.

After President Nixon personally announced Simon's appointment as head of a new federal energy office, Simon told reporters that a decision on whether to ration gasoline must be made by the end of the month.

"We will take whatever action is necessary," Simon, deputy secretary of the Treasury Department, said. He said rationing has many problems and he considers it a last resort.

But he said fuel prices will have to rise, not only to help ration supplies but to give the oil industry an incentive to increase supplies.

As a starter, he said, the Cost of Living Council will announce price increases in fuel oil Wednesday to encourage more production of the commodity as opposed to gasoline, which is more profitable to produce.

Nixon said he is personally assuming chairmanship of the Cabinet-level Energy Emergency Action Group, which was headed by energy adviser John A. Love until Love's resignation Monday.

Nixon appointed Simon executive director of the Cabinet group, thus giving him the energy controls over policy, programs, and in addition tax policies relating to energy.

The President said he would seek legislation to create the Federal Energy Administration, but in the meantime offices now under other agencies and slated for eventual transfer have been directed to cooperate with Simon. The House Commerce Committee yesterday voted in favor of creating such an administration which would institutionalize the energy office. The bill is in a different form, however, from what the administration wants.

Nixon said the White House has been in contact with congressional leaders whose response to the plan has appeared favorable.

Simon said programs to allocate the distribution of residual oil at the wholesale level would be adopted soon.

He endorsed government estimates that a 30 per cent reduction in gasoline consumption is required and he said that only through public cooperation can the nation "get through an extremely difficult winter."

NEW YORK — NO SHORTAGE HERE — There may be a shortage of fuel but there was no shortage of cars in the parking lot of Shea Stadium in New York, where fans gathered to watch the New York Jets play the Baltimore Colts. Canada And Mexico Have Plenty Of Gas

By PETER ARNETT
Associated Press Writer

Gasless Sunday has come to the United States. But south of the Mexican border and north into Canada there is gasoline galore - as American motorists lucky enough to live near the borders are finding out.

Last weekend gas-thirsty Americans filled their tanks at Mexican border towns ranging from Matamoros on the Gulf of Mexico to Tijuana on the Pacific side. Other Americans drove north into British Columbia from Washington State, and crossed into Canada to gas up at a score of other points.

An Associated Press survey of 15 border crossings showed gas appetites varied widely. An "old man in a truck" took home 200 gallons in several tanks from Tijuana, a U.S. customs inspector said.

Six U.S. cars served at Williard Williamson's gas station at Fort Frances, Ont., just a block from the border, simply filled their tanks and returned home.

Both Mexico and Canada have ample oil supplies. Mexico nationalized its oil wells in the late 1930s, and has more oil than it needs. Border newsmen said no local shortages had appeared or were expected.

Canada produces its own oil, and exports nearly a million barrels a day to the United States.

Gas station attendants in both countries geared for the U.S. motorist demand.

Several stations in Nuevo Laredo, Mex., opposite Laredo, Tex., stayed open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to accommodate Americans.

Several service stations owners in Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., said they not only expected demand from Americans across the border, but intended to charge higher than usual prices.

Canadian gasoline prices are about the same as American. But American customers at Mexican gas stations have an additional bonus. Mexican premium, which most American cars need, sells for about 37 cents a gallon, whereas in the United States prices for premium can range up to 50 cents or more.

Duty varies in various states. Motorists can individually bring back as much as they like into California, providing they report on standard forms amounts over 100 gallons, said Jerry Martin, a customs inspector, at San Ysidro, California, across from Tijuana.

Some states adjoining Canada impose a small duty - roughly 1½ cents per gallon - on gasoline motorists bring back. But customs inspectors usually don't bother to collect such a small sum because it is inconvenient.

There are controls in Canada. John Gibbs, regional collector of cutoms at Windsor Ont., said a person can fill his tank before leaving Canada but is not allowed to have any cans or other containers that are dangerous.

Truckers Block Highways In Protest

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

Truckers angry over higher fuel prices and lower speed limits blocked highways in four states yesterday. Some drivers warned of a nationwide stoppage.

It was not immediately clear whether the demonstatrations were part of a coordinated effort, although some drivers apparently were involved in more than one blockade.

The American Trucking Association and the Teamsters Union denied any involvement in the protests.

An Associated Press spot check showed officials in most states knew of no blockades.

Demonstrations were reported on Interstate 80 near Blakeslee, Pa., and Blairstown, N. J., and on Interstate 70 near Wheeling, W. Va., and Cambridge and Hebron, Ohio.

Two arrests were reported during the initial protests, one in West Virginia, the other in Ohio.

Walter Barclay of Omaha, Neb., one of a group of truckers who gathered in the afternoon at a truck stop near Hebron, about 28 miles east of Columbus, said he had been arrested in Wheeling, W. Va., early yesterday morning when he jacked up the front of his truck on an entrance ramp, blocking traffic. Police confirmed the arrest and said he had been fined and released.

"Right now truck drivers are scum..just dirt under people's feet," complained Barclay who said he paid his $39.50 fine in Wheeling, then drove to Ohio to start the blockade near Cambridge.

The demonstration lasted about two hours. Authorities said about 60 trucks were involved and at one point traffic was backed up about two miles by the blockade in the westbound lanes of the highway.

Barclay said that at Cambridge he pretended to be out of fuel. Other drivers joined him, pretending to have mechanical problems.

One of the drivers, Robert Gallicchio, 25, of Highland Park, N.J., refused to move off the highway and was arrested on a charge of illegal parking. He posted bond and was released.

The caravan of truckers then proceeded about 40 miles to the Hebron area, and briefly staged another blockade before breaking for lunch and the truck-stop meeting.

Barclay said word of the shutdowns spread from truck to truck via citizen band radios. He said he would try to launch other blockades along Interstate 70 from Columbus to Indianapolis and beyond.

Some drivers also complained about the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit imposed in many areas in response to President Nixon's energy conservation message.

"What's The Story?"

A Cold Library, CC Fees, And The Same Ol' Song

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN

It seems evident that the energy crisis is effecting most every aspect of our lives, including UMass. In today's column I was planning to discuss what effects cut-back steps would have on various aspects of the University during the semester break (Dec. 22, 1973-Jan. 27, 1974). However, a thorough article was printed in Monday's Collegian covering dormitories, dining commons, health services, the Campus Center, the Physical Plant, and residential areas. Today's Collegian will print an article covering academic offerings. In answer to other inquiries about the possible lenghtening of intersession by a week or two, the official statement from the Provost's Office is that the time span of intersession will remain the same. Classes to be held during this time have been shortened from three weeks (Jan. 7-25) to two weeks (Jan. 14-25), however. No predictions are being made at this time about any change in Spring vacation.

Questions: Why is the library so cold? I was in there trying to study but it was so cold I had to leave. The fuel shortage may account for a little cold air, but for it to be as cold as it is, is ridiculous.

Answer: I spoke to Tony Fusco at the Physical Plant and we both agree that it is difficult to answer your question unless you be more specific. If it was one certain floor or area in the library that was uncomfortably cold, it is possible that there was a malfunction in the heating control unit. However, Tony checked back to the approximate time of your complaint and didn't find that any other people had registered similar complaints with the Physical Plant. Every person's body comfort index is different so it is hard to make sure that each individual will always be comfortable. No matter what the temperature, there usually seems to be someone who is too hot or too cold. If you realize that you have this type of tendency (especially now that the temperature will be a few degrees lower because of the energy crisis) it would seem to be a good idea to plan to wear either more or less clothing.

However, if someone feels that the temperature of a building is unusually abnormal, they should contact Work Control at the Physical Plant and a person will be sent to check out the situation.

Question: I pay a Campus Center fee every semester, and what do I get for it? Nothing. Why can't certain rooms in the Campus Center be used as study rooms as was the case in the past. I'd much rather sudy in the Campus Center than in the library.

Answer: Let's deal first with your concern about the Campus Center fee and what you get for it. The cost of the Campus Center is paid for by two main sources. These are the Campus Center fee and resources such as the bookstore, pin ball machines, conferences, and income from hotel rooms. Students rightfully should feel that they are entitled to various services from the Campus Center, and do in fact receive the service of bars, restaurants, lounges, the Campus Center Store, and the music room. However, when I spoke with Bud Wilkes of the Campus Center staff, he agreed that right now it doesn't look like much, but he hopes services for students will become more evident. Bud was optimistic that the hiring of John Corker to the position of director of the Campus Center two months ago is a positive step toward making the Campus Center more student oriented. Plans which are already underway or will be instituted include coin return lockers in the Campus Center, increased student employment, a travel agency which will interact with related departments on campus and create more jobs for students, an on campus refrigerator rental service and tables to display student's crafts.

An important point to remember when looking at the services the Campus Center offers is that the Campus Center is only three years old. Much of thes time has been spent ironing out problems, and hopefully now energies can be directed to student services. People I've talked with who are involved in the running of the Campus Center seem very open to what these new student services should be, but in most cases can only be made aware of these needs from the students themselves. This brings us to your second concern, study rooms in the Campus Center. The Board of Governors, made up of students, sets the policies for the Campus Center which the management must follow. I spoke with Jim Lindsey, chairperson of the Board of Governors, last week and he told me he would have the matter brought up at the Dec. 3rd meeting of the building committee.

I contacted Jim after the meeting and was told the matter had been discussed but it had to be looked into further and then be brought up to the Board of Governors for a vote. There are certain problems which have to be considered. The added maintenance and security means allocation of more funds. There is also the problem of space. On most Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings the meeting rooms are completely fillled and often requests aren't received until the last minute. It is hopeful, however, that as in past years rooms will be opened up during final period when available. If you or anyone else is interested in voicing your opinion or finding out how the decision on opening rooms in the Campus Center for studying is progressing, I would suggest getting in touch with Jim Lindsey at the Board of Governor's office on the eight floor of the Campus Center.

Question: Tell me why the songs in the jukebox in the Hatch are never changed? Any normal establishment with a jukebox changes their songs at least twice a month, so why must UMass suffer through the same outdated stongs?

Answer: The person who is in charge of the amusement machines honestly admitted to me that he was not too up to date with what songs people who frequent the Hatch and use the jukebox would like to hear. He was very receptive to the idea that people with music suggestions submit these ideas to the Information Desk on the main floor of the Campus Center. Although he will not be able to fill everyone's request or change the selections as often as twice a month, he will take all the ideas into consideration and make some changes.

In the past few weeks, however, no music, old or new, has been playing on the jukebox. Over Thanksgiving vacation extensive damage was done to the machine. It is, in the process of being repaired, and will be back in the Hatch in a day or two, if it is not already there now.

"What's the Story?" will be a regular feature in Wednesday's Collegian. I will be looking into various aspects of the University system that may be of interest to or need clarification for the University community. I will also answer any questions or problems people are having within the University. So if you are having difficulty finding the answer to your question, write it down and drop it in the "What's the Story?" box outside the Campus Center Store, send it through the campus mail to Box 6 Campus Center, or bring it to the Ombudsman Office, room 919 Campus Center.

The Reward

by

Jim

Lavrakas

At the end of an all-nighter, there's not only the satisfaction of a job well done (Ha!), there's also a reward: an early morning stroll. It's quiet as you pass that old family cemetery, the Sugarloaf massif looming behind. On the way through a field you notice the moisture around your shoes. Then you see the microscopic frost crystals on the clover which make them seem brittle and fragile. The air is great! You relax from that all-night struggle. Further down the road a foal strolls up to mamma for breakfast. And on the way back the sun finally breaks through the haze in the east, and your day is even brighter than before.

Summer Counseling

Applications are now being accepted for student group leader positions in the 1974-Summer Counseling Program. The program will operate from June 2 through July 26, 1974. Ten sessions for all entering freshmen will be held, along with five transfer programs.

Training sessions for the thirty selected counselors will be held during the latter part of the spring semester and the week of May 27 through May 31. All positions require residence in an assigned residence hall and meals in the dining hall for the nine-week period. Summer counseling positions require full time participation. Summer school courses cannot be taken.

Interested and qualified students may obtain an application from the Student Devlopment and Career Planning Center, 102 Berkshire House. Applications must be returned on or before February, 1974. Selections will be announced during spring break.

African Liberation

The African Liberation struggle against Portugese colonialism will be the subject of a movie-teach in tonight, at 8 p.m. at the Center for Racial understanding in Southwest. The movie VIVA FRELIMO is a study of the Mozambique Liberation Front which has been engaged in armed struggle against Portugal since 1964.

The movie will be followed by an informed discussion featuring a number of Africans of the Amherst community.

Admission is open and free.

Underground Film

Joan Jonas and Her "Organic Honey's Vertical Roll" are coming to UMass tonight. The 8 p.m. performance will take place in Room 106, Thompson Hall.

This showing is the final one in a series of Great Underground Films, sponsored by the Fine Arts Council and coordinated by professor Jerry Kearns of the Arts Department. Tickets are priced at 50 cents for UM Students, others, $1.00.

Quinn Supporters

An open meeting will be held tomorrow night in room 168 CC at 7:30 p.m. by a group of UMass students supporting the candidacy of Attorney General Robert H. Quinn for governor in 1974.

The group will be dealing with a number of subjects relating to the Quinn campaign and activities planned for 1974 at UMass and in the Amherst area. One part of the meeting will center on the Quinn record in the area of civil rights and liberties, legal reform, environmental protection and his position as strong advocate for the consumers of Mass. The meeting will also serve as an open forum dealing with a number of issues which will be of import to the voters in the 1974 election.

Anyone interested in participating in the Quinn campaign or simply learning about the Quinn record is welcome to attend.

French Speaker

Prof. Jeffry Kaplou of the University of Paris wil speak on "Aspects of French Working Class History, 1750-1850," tomorrow at 3 p.m. in the sixth floor lounge of Herter Hall.

Law Conference Fee

The five dollar registration fee for the second annual law conference "Before the Law" between January 14 and 25 has been eliminated.

This corrects the announcement on Monday, December 3, 1973 in the column of interest "Law Conference."

Amherst Transportation Comt. To Hold Public Hearings

At its bi-weekly meeting Monday night, the Amherst Public Transportation Committee reaffirmed its intent to hold a public hearing on the feasibility of establishing a mass transit system for the town of Amherst.

After considerable debate, a compromise agreement was reached on proposals by Committee member Kenneth Mosakowski and Committee vice-chairman Duane Cromack. The compromise provides that the full Committee will call a public hearing, possibly in February, with two separate sub-committees working out different phases of preparation.

One sub-committee is charged with researching a Committee presentation on various options and costs for a possible mass transit system inthe town. This sub-committee is made up of Cromack; Robert Rivers, chairman of the full Committee; and Philip McKean.

The task of the second sub-committee will be to publicize the hearing, work out the logistical details, and invite the participation of public officials; town civic groups; and organizations representing students, faculty, and staff at UMass, Amherst College, and Hampshire College. The members of this sub-committee are Mosakowski; David Hornfischer, secretary of the full Committee; Karen Peter; and Jennie Werbe. Groups or individuals interested in participating in the hearings are urged to contact Mosakowski at 253-7768.

In other business Monday night, the Committee learned from chairman Rivers that a meeting sought with University officials concerning the future of the no-fare bus system may take place within a week. The Committee also reviewed levels of population density in Amherst with Dale Pope, Select Committee on Goals (SCOG) implementor.

The next regular meeting of the Amherst Public Transportation Committee has been scheduled for Wednesday, December 19th, at 7:30 p.m. in Town Hall.

Parking Tickets Add Up

NORTHAMPTION, Mass. — UMass has rented an office here to help local District Court officials cope with a flood of parking ticket cases.

The university has issued some 20,000 tickets at the Amherst campus so far this term, and the number of uncollected fines has caused problems for court officials who must mail out summonses.

The university has hired three persons to staff the office.

Officials estimated that uncollected tickets amount to about $64,000 in fines.

Wars: The Second Hundred Years

"Havana, Dec. 4 - Evening - The 'Vos de Cuba' says the leading merchants of Havana held a meeting this morning to provide for the purchase and armament of a number of fast steamers to act as cruisers in case of war with the United States."

Don't be alarmed. The article above was taken from the 'New York Times' of Dec. 5, 1873. it's only history now, but one hundred years ago, it was an issue in the minds of a booming nation. It was this very nation at that very time that was enveloped by the most scandalous administration in its history.

Another article in the same paper mentioned a man named Prince Bismarck, who was, of course, the Chancellor to the Empire. Now frankly speaking, the mentions of Cuba, Grant, and Bismarck have little to do with each other, aside from the fact that they were in the same paper. But I enjoy history, and I thought it would be interesting to pick a date, at random, and trace the mood and events of the nation and the world, at twenty-five year intervals, over the past one hundred years. For my source I chose the 'New York Times', and for the specific date, what would be better than today, Dec. 5.

From merely eight years after the Civil War, I'll move ahead twenty-five years to Dec. 5, 1898. War in Cuba is no longer a possibility, but is now a reality, and it was written in a front page article that, "Both the Spanish and American Peace Commissioners expressed the hope yesterday that within a week, all the issues between them will have been adjusted and the treaty duly signed."

In that same paper, an article further down the page read, "William Griffin, six years old, who lived at 53 East One Hundredth Street, was poisoned yesterday by opium pills which he ate under the impression they were candy." It's interesting to note the way the mood and ideas of the time change, and how wrong impressions are developed in a historical manner.

Continuing along at equal intervals the paper of Dec. 5, 1923 carried an article about a new innovation in recording — something we would refer to as a tape recorder. By this time, the paper had doubled in price (It now cost two cents) and had become a voice of a growing progressive nation that had left all its cares and international troubles behind with the end of "The World War". Invention and prosperity were the mottos of the time, and the nation experienced its greatest, and sadly enough, its longest period of peace.

Moving right along, we now find ourselves in what is termed by most historians as "recent years". It's now Dec. 5, 1948, and the "Red Scare" is hot and heavy. A front page article of the day read, "Members of the House Committee on Un-American Activities were called to Washington today for hastily arranged hearings to bring into the open new documentary evidence that, a spokesman said, would show who gave the State Department secrets to Whittaker Chambers when he was a Communist agent in the Nineteen Thirties. "Later in that same article, there was a mention that your friend and mine, "Representative Richard M. Nixon, Republican of California, informed of the Chambers testimony, ordered a subpoena served on Mr. Chambers Thursday."

Sharing the same front page was an article calling for a Palestine Conciliation Commission to bring about peace in the Middle East. Doesn't that sound familiar?

Well, it's today again and most of us know all too well what the issues of the day consist of. The past one hundred years have provided us with thousands of issues, but they always seem to be the same. The most depressing facet of doing an article such as this is the constant mention of one war or another that our illustrious nation has become involved in. In every case, we've either just finished a war, or we're ready to get involved in another, except for the times when we're in the midst of a war, and then we talk about peace.

Dec. 5, 1873, was only eight years after the Civil War, twenty-two years before the Spanish-American War, and right smack in the middle of the Indian Wars. Dec. 5, 1973 is only nineteen years after the Korean War and one year after the Vietnam War. Who knows what lies in store?

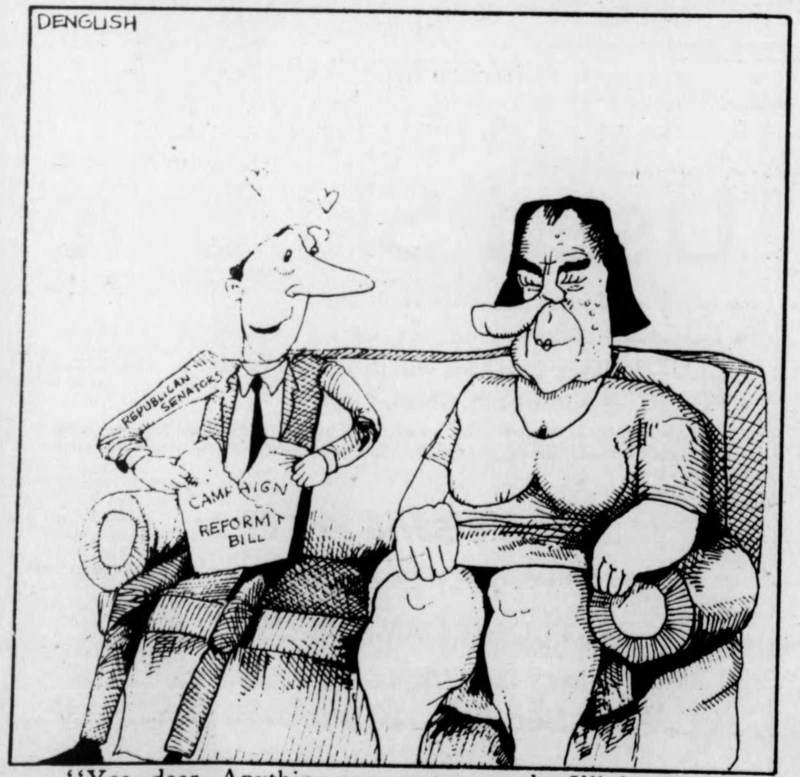
How To Get Out Of The Meal Ticket

There are ways of getting out of a meal ticket. Most of them are illegal. But when the University fails to recognize the 18 year old majority age just to pay off its debts for ill planning or fails to produce food fit for human consumption, you should think twice about staying "within the law."

The University says that if the meal plan wasn't mandatory, the power systems within each dormitory couldn't handle the hot plates and other cooking devices that the students would use to cook their meals. How convenient of an excuse. Especially since we are presently involved in an energy crisis.



"Yes, dear, Anything you want me to do, I'll do..."

However, if you feel that you must get out of the meal plan, it can be done. There are various reasons and/or excuses that can be used. But don't try false medical excuses because the infirmary will check them out. Don't tell the doctors that you get sick after eating at the D.C. You might wind up eating at the Infirmary of with a prescription for Maalox.

Religious Dietary Reasons

If you're Jewish, get a Rabbi's note saying that you're strictly Kosher. If asked why you've hesitated this long to get out of your meal ticket, tell them you've been eating in Basic Foods but you can't eat there anymore because you want to eat meat. Tell them you'll buy your meat at the Kosher butcher in Northampton. If you can't do this before the semester starts, you can wait until the beginning of next semester after you've already paid for your ticket. Don't use it because you have to surrender it to Food Services. You can use your I.D. The refund will take two months and will go to your parents if they paid your bill.

Don't say that you're a vegetarian. Food Services will introduce you to Basic Foods which is their answer to a meatless diet. And that's exactly what it is, meatless. However, chicken and fish have escaped the University's definition of dead animals.

Find a religion that adheres to strict dietary codes which the D.C. cannot provide. Join it. Tell that to Food Services and you're off the meal plan. You may even become a little enlightened as well.

Financial Reasons

Tell the Financial Aid office that you are in desperate need of a scholarship. Tell them that your parents aren't paying your tuition and you can't get a job because you're a Chemistry major and have six labs a week. When they refuse, tell them that you can't come back to school because you have no money. When they refuse you again, tell them that you might be able to swing it if you could only get out of your meal plan. Convince them that you just might be able to (and you can) survive on less than $15 a week for food. It's worked before.

Tell Your Area Director You're Getting Married

Not only will this get you out of your meal ticket, but it will get you off-campus as well. And you really don't have to get married to do it.

Get Your Dorm Together

If all else fails, or you don't want to stack up on hot plates, get your dorm together and build a kitchen. A real one, not a bunch of kitchenettes on every floor. Take a lesson from Butterfield.

Use Your Imagination

Seriously. Think of any excuse. Be bold. The worst that can happen to you is that your request will be denied. But just about any excuse is valid, if you push it. Tell Food Services your mother doesn't like the looks of the spinach, if you have to. If you're really serious enough about getting out of your meal ticket, you can do it. It does take a bit of effort, though. If you're too lazy to do it. then you deserve to be on the meal plan.

To The Editor:

I apologize to the general reading public of the Collegian for my untimely and perhaps overstated letter published December 3. Several people objected to what I wrote about the mental age of SOME of our fellow students. One boy who called me in response to the letter described it as "bullshit." That's just one example of my entire criticism. Why are college-level people so wanting in good, strong descriptive adjectives in their speech and writing that they are forced to resort to profanity in expressing themselves?

I just wish that when something as profound as a death occurs in our school that people would react instead of cloaking themselves in apathy and indifference. I just wish that people would realize that they're not immune to death and wake up and begin to take life and themselves more seriously. Don't just think of the theories that you learn in classes as things to expound to impress other people. Someone didn't just make up these thoughts to show off around the world. They thought deeply about certain concepts...the great minds of history; the great minds of today (and there are some, even though some people are too weak to admit it). I just am asking people to think about themselves and those around them with some depth. When Ed Waddington plunged off one of those big high rises over there to his death, he wasn't playing around. Those who think he was have a mental age of zero. I'm not trying to write a paper and I am not appealing to the intellect. I am appealing to the emotions. Don't some people have any feelings? That's really all I am trying to say. Like others, I have a difficult time expressing myself, but that's what I really mean.

To The Editor:

Car pools in this time of crisis have many obvious advantages: energy is conserved, money is saved, car life is extended, and who knows what social benefits may accrue?

If you are a UMass student, faculty, or staff member living in the Conway area interested in participating in an informal car pool, now or in the future, please call me at my home 369-4002 or office 5-0748 and I will forward you a simple form to fill in.

I will collate the data and return to you the names and phone numbers of those whose schedule approximates yours. It will be your responsibility to finalize the details such as cost sharing, car rotation, meeting places and other pertinent details.

To The Editor:

I fail to see the humor in Joyce Kosofsky's article, "Vaseline Junkies," in Thursday's Collegian. She shouldn't have been born either, then we wouldn't have to read such ill-humored nonsense. Everybody has a right to live and bear the fruits or burdens of this land, so why blame people you aren't fond of, or have no use for, I should say. If she can't write about something worth reading without mentioning certain people who have a right to live the life the chose to live then she shouldn't write at all.

I subscribed to the Collegian thinking I would help the students' publication anticipating some good reading. Ugh! I don't expect to renew my subscription next semester.

To The Editor:

The other day as I was dining alone in the DC, I noticed a four-footed friend innocently appealing to those diners around me for some food. Mistaking my chair for a tree in its natural surroundings he proceeded to relieve himself on my coat. Having saved my coat, but not the outrage this incident caused, I would like to present a plea to all dog-lovers, of which I am one: If you own a dog, please either train him adequately, or limit his personal travels so that he doesn't become a menace to the university community. If either task is too great, then PLEASE reconsider owning a dog. To anyone else, if you ever see a dog joining us at mealtime, please show him to the door, because a recurrence of this event is totally absurd.

To The Editor:

I found it interesting that you should invite "letters from students who enrolled in a course based on what the Course Description Guide said, only to find out that they were mislead by pumped-up rhetoric." If the assumption is that most of the discriptions are accurate and that most students are at least content with the way in which the course matches the description, then fine! However, it might also save students "a lot of hassle and disappointment" if you would invite letters from students who enrolled in a course based on what the Course Description Guide said, only to find out that the course more than satisfied the "rhetoric" of the actual description.

To The Dining Comons:

I have no other complaints, but could you please put a little more salt on the Hippopotamus dung!?

To The Editor:

A few responses to your Dec. 4 article on the supposedly "mysterious" Distinguished Teacher Award:

1. There should have been no problem whatsoever in documenting that the $1000.-for each award are donated by the Standard Oil Company. (You may make an issue of that, if you want). This information has been announced at previous commencement ceremonies and again this year to great numbers of representatives from the student senate, faculty senate, department chairmen and campus officials.

2. Speaking subjectively, it seemed true that very few students know who is selected and why, and who wins the award. While the University news office may possibly be involved in this neglect, I was placing the blame on none other than the Daily Collegian! Every newspaper in the area featured repeated articles with photos on this year's award winners. Our campus newspaper, the MDC, didn't know what was going on. The Dec. 4 front page article by Shelley Lauzon documents your continuing ignorance.

3. The cash award of $1000.-is not taxable and does not become "...a few hundred dollars" as claimed by writer Lauzon. Personally, I thought this amount of cash to be of an adequately rewarding quality. Differences of opinion on this matter may well exist; however, I do not see it as an obvious fact that the amount of $1000.- proves that the University "apparently...does not feel distinguished teaching is worthwhile."

4. I do agree with Ms. Lauzon that we could wish for more student input during the nominating stage. I believe that students should play a major role in shaping good teaching on campus. Again, this includes the campus newspaper, which has been conspicuously silent on this matter. The MDC could report on on-going good teaching (as well as bad), it could feature debates or thoughts on the teaching process by students, classroom teachers and educational administrators and theorists. I have attempted in the past to get some thoughts on good teaching into the Collegian -- with no response.

5. I am tempted to join the ranks of those critics who believe that some of your articles are badly researched, outrageously and negatively biased and should be an insult to the intelligence of the student population who is indoctrinated with such stuff. However, espousing a positive outlook on all evolutionary happenings, I shall reserve my judgement.

To The Editor:

You may already be aware that recently a law was passed making available state funds to Amherst (or a regional district including Amherst) for mass transportation. The Amherst Selectmen and the Amherst Transportation Committee have been studying the feasibility of a more comprehensive Amherst bus system for some time. It is possible that in the next year a decision could be made for or against such an extended system.

I feel that a decision should be made FOR the extension of the UMass bus system to include those parts of Amherst not already served. I do not feel the necessity to justify the bus system for financial or environmental reasons, for more informed people than I are speaking and writing about this every day. I do feel, however, that as a daily passenger on the UMass buses, I can vouch for the systems effectiveness. The buses are clean, quiet, and the service frequent. The University parking controversy is yet another story and should be divorced from the success or failure of the bus system itself.

Those interested in a more extensive bus system in Amherst should communicate their feelings at once to the Amherst Selectmen and Chancellor Bromery at the University. We should not wait until a decision has been made over which we have no control.

Please write and speak up now in favor of a more comprehensive bus system for Amherst. Too often, negative voices make the greater noise.

Academic Offerings January Break

Following is a list of offerings by departments or other agencies projected for the period of the January break. Students should declare their intention to register for any of these offerings by December 9th to the sponsoring agency or department. Credit will be awarded according to the class list submitted directly to the Registrar at the end of the January Break. Class lists should contain title of course, credit to be awarded, number — if any, student names and numbers. These should be forwarded to the Registrar, Whitmore Administration Building. Credit will be added to each student's first semester record.

Students should be aware as they read this list of offerings that those running three weeks may require special arrangements for accomodation during the week 7th through 12th. And those planning to be on campus from the 14-25 should inform their Head of Residence.

This is the original laboratory of the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute. Dec. 30 - Jan. 13, 1974. Enrollment is limited to 10. The course is designed for advanced undergraduates and graduate majors in Zoology. Pre-requisites: Zoology 350, 150 or consent of instructor.
Cost, Approximately $400. For further information call A. M. Stuart 50975.

ZOOLOGY 285/810: Topics in Zoology, Coral Reef Associations, 3 credits.
Larry S. Roberts, Assoc. Professor of Zoology.
Location: University of Puerto Rico Marine Station, La Parguera, Puerto Rico. From Jan. 15-31, 1974.
Limited to 10: course designed for advanced undergraduates and graduate majors in zoology.
Pre-requisites: Zoology 281/581 or 2 2/582 or equivalent.
Cost: Transportation, room and meals, $300 - $350, to be paid by each student.
This course will provide first hand field experience with a very large number of animals in a habitat of importance and interest. No formal lectures are anticipated.

ZOOLOGY 285-810 (Coins 385-685) 3 credits: Advanced research in Theoretical Population Biology.
F. M. Scudo, Morrill 142, W. L. Kilmer, Grad. Res. Cntr. A265.
Purpose of course is to study in greater depth a number of well formulated problems for which precise answers are not available.
a. Oscillatory behavior in discrete time ecological models;
b. The population genetics of partially isolated populations.
c. The evolution of signal patterns in a presently formulated brain model network.
d. A pilot monte-carlo simulation: c one selection and the evolution of genetic characteristics that are neutral to their bearers but advantageous to the community of the r bearer's offspring.
The course will mostly consist of original research by the students and will integrate analytical procedures with numerical investigations. The course requirements will involve nearly full-time work during the January break. Course requirements will include redaction during the spring semester of original research papers which might be submitted for publication. Enrollment is limited to 5, dependent upon permission of either instructor, and must be obtained before the end of the fall semester. Pre-requisites: very good prior performance in either Zoo 250/550 or Coins 291/591 or equivalent.

ZOOLOGY 285/810, Topics in Zoology: Workshop on techniques in Electron Microscopy, 1-2 credits.
C. L. F. Woodcock, Asst. Professor of Zoology, 364 Morril, 545-2825.
Jan. 7th - 26th, 1974 (about 30 hrs. to be arranged).
Limited to six students. Designed primarily for those with some experience in electron microscopy who wish to extend their knowledge of technique. However, if a number of beginners show interest in an introduction to the subject, this may be included.
Pre-requisites: permission of the instructor.
Topics (to be further selected according to the requirements of the participants). Preparative methods — positive and negative staining of macromolecules. Heavy metal shadowing. Protein monolayer spreading (of nucleic acids.)
Autoradiography.
Electron Diffraction.
Image processing via optical diffraction.
Format: Short lecture discussion on the theoretical basis of each method, followed by demonstrations and free lab time as appropriate.
